And whā Mardocheus was certified of C Hesters wordes, Mardocheus bad saie againe vnto Hester: Thyneke not to saue thine awne life, whyle thou art in y kynges house before all Iewes: for y thou holdest thy peace at this tyme, then shal the Iewes haue helpe and delyueraunce out of another place, τ thou τ thy fathers house shalbe destroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kyngdome, for this tymes sake? Hester bad gene Mardocheus this answer: Go thou thy waye then, τ gather together all y Iewes y are founde at Susan, τ fast ye for me, y ye eate not τ drynke not in thre dayes, nether daye ner nighte. I τ my damsels wil fast likewise, τ so wyl I go in to the kyng cōtrary to the cōmaundement: y I perishe, I perishe. So Mardocheus wente his waye, τ dyd all y Hester had cōmaunded him.

The v. Chapter.

A ND on the thirde daye put Hester on A hir royall apparell, and stode in the courte of y kynges palace within ouer agaynst the kynges house. And y kyng sat vpo his royall seate in y kynges palace ouer agaynst y dore of the house. And whan the kyng sawe Hester the quene stōdinge in the courte, she founde grace in his sighte. And y kyng helde out the goldē cepter in his hāde towarde Hester. So Hester stepte forth, and touched the toppe of ſcepter. Then ſayde ſ kyng vnto her: What wilt thou quene Hester? ⁊ what requyrest thou? axe euē the halfe of ſ empyre, ⁊ it ſhal be geuē the. Hester ſayde: Yf it pleaſe ſ kyng, let ſ kyng ⁊ Aman come this daye vnto ſ banquet ſ I haue prepared. The kyng ſayde: Cauſe Aman to make haist, ſ he maye do as Hester hath ſaide.

33 Now whā the kyng ⁊ Aman came to ſ banquet ſ Hester had prepared, the kyng ſayde vnto Hester when he had dronken wyne: Hester, what is thy peticion? it ſhal be geuē the. And what requyrest thou? euen the halfe of the empyre, it ſhal be done.

Then answered Hester and ſayde: My peticion and deſire is, yf I haue founde grace in ſ ſight of the kyng, ⁊ yf it pleaſe the kyng to geue me my peticion, and to fulfill my request, then let the kyng ⁊ Aman come to the banquet ſ I ſhal prepare for thē, and ſo wil I do tomorrow as the kyng hath ſaide.

C Then wente Aman forth the ſame daye ioyfull and mery in his mynde. And when he ſawe Mardocheus in the kynges gate, ſ he ſtode not vp and kneeled before him, he was full of indignacion at Mardocheus. Neuertheles he refrained himſelfe: and whā he came home, he ſent, and called for his frēdes, and Seres his wyfe, and tolde them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, all together how the kyng had promoted him ſo greatly, and how that he was taken aboute the prynces and ſeruautes of the kyng. Aman ſayde morouer: Yee and Hester the quene let no man come with the kyng vnto the banquet that ſhe had prepared, excepte me, and tomorrow am I bidden vnto her alſo with the kyng. But in all this am I not ſatisfied as longe as I ſe Mardocheus the Iewe ſyttinge in ſ kynges gate. Then ſayde Seres his wife and all his frendes vnto him: Let thē make a galowe of fiftye cubites hie, ⁊ tomorrow ſpeake thou vnto the kyng, that Mardocheus maye be hanged thereon, yf thou comest merely with the kyng vnto the banquet. Aman was well content withall, and cauſed a galowe to be prepared.

The vi. Chapter.

34 THE ſame night coulde not the kyng ſlepe, and he commaunded to brynge ſ Cronicles and ſtorves: which whā they were red before ſ kyng, they happened on the place where it was wryttē, how Mardocheus had tolde, that the kynges two chāberlaynes (which kepte ſ thresholdes) ſought to laie hondes on kyng Ahasuerus. And the kyng ſaide: What worſhippe and good haue we done to Mardocheus therefore? Then ſayde the kynges ſeruautes that mynystred vnto him. There is nothinge done for him. And the kyng ſayde: Who is in ſ courte? (for Aman was gone in to ſ courte without before ſ kynges houſe, ſ he might ſpeake vnto ſ kyng to hange Mardocheus on ſ tre, ſ he had prepared for him.) And the kynges ſeruautes ſaide vnto him: Beholde, Amā ſtōdeth in the courte. The kyng ſaide: Let him come in. And whā Amā came in, ſ kyng ſaide vnto him: What ſhal be done vnto ſ mā, whom the kyng wolde fayne brynge vnto worſhippe? But Hamā thought in his hert: Whom ſhulde the kyng els be glad to brynge vnto worſhippe, but me? And Aman ſayde vnto the kyng: Let the man vnto whom the kyng wolde be glad to do worſhippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be araid with the royall garmentes which the kyng vseth to weere: and the horſe that the kyng rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be ſet vpon his heade. And let this rayment and horſe be delyuered vnder the hande of one of the kynges prynces, that he maye araye the man withall (whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure) and cary him vpon the horſe thorow the ſtrete of the cite, and cauſe it to be proclaimed before him: Thus ſhal it be done to euery man, whom the kyng wolde fayne honoure.

C The kyng ſayde: Make haist, and take (as thou haſt ſayde) the raymēt and the horſe, and do euen ſo with Mardocheus ſ Iewe that ſitteth before the kynges gate, and let nothinge fayle of all that thou haſt ſpoken. Then toke Aman the rayment and the horſe, and arayed him, and broughte him on horſebacke thorow the ſtrete of the cite, and proclaimed before him: Euen thus ſhall it be done vnto euery man whom the kyng is diſpoſed to honoure. And Mardocheus came agayne to the kynges gate, but Aman gat him home in all the haist, mourninge with bare heade, and tolde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes, euery thyng that had happened him. Then ſayde his wiſe men and Seres his wyfe vnto him: Yf it be Mardocheus of the ſede of the Iewes, before who thou hast begonne to fall, thou canst do nothyng vnto him, but shalt fall before him. Whyle they were yet talkyng with him, came the kynges chamberlaynes, and caused Aman to make haist to come vnto the bancket that Hester had prepared.

The viij. Chapter.

AND whan the kyng and Aman came to the bancket that quene Hester had prepared, the kyng sayde vnto Hester on the seconde daye whan he had dröken wyne: What is thy peticion quene Hester, that it maye be geuen the? And what requyrest thou? Yee axe euen halfe of the empyre, and it shal be done. Hester fy quene answered and sayde: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sighte (O kyng) and yf it please the kyng, then graunte me my lyfe at my desyre and my people for my petitions sake: for we are solde to be destroyed, to be slayne, and to perishe. And wolde God we were solde to be bondmen and bondwemen, then wolde I holde my tonge, so shulde not the enemye be so hie to the kynges harme. The kyng Ahasuerus spake and sayde vnto quene Hester: What is he that? Or where is he fy darre presume in his mynde to do soch a thinge after that maner? Hester sayde: The enemye and aduersary is this wicked Aman.

As for Amā, he was exceedingly afraied before fy kyng and fy quene. And the kyng arose fro the bancket and fro fy wyne in his displeasure, and wente in to the palace garden. And Aman stode vp, and besoughte quene Hester for his life: for he sawe fy there was a mischaüce prepared for him of the kyng already.

And whan the kyng came agayne out of the palace garden in to fy parler where they had eaten, Aman had layed him vpon the bed that Hester sat vpon. Then sayde the kyng: wyl he force the quene also besyde me in the house? As soone as that word wente out of the kynges mouth, they couered Amans face. And Harbona one of the chamberlaynes that stode before the kyng, sayde: Beholde, there stondesth a galowe in Amās house fiftie cubytes hie, which he had made for Mardocheus, that spake good for fy kyng. The kyng sayde: Hange him theron. So they hanged Aman on the galowe that he had made for Mardocheus. Then was the kynges wrath styllid.

The viij. Chapter.

THE same daye dyd kyng Ahasuerus geue the house of Aman the Jewes enemye, vnto quene Hester. And Mardocheus came before fy kyng: for Hester tolde how that he belöged vnto her. And the kyng put of his synger ryng, which he had taken from Aman, and gaue it vnto Mardocheus. And Hester set Mardocheus ouer the house of Aman. And Hester spake yet more before the kyng, and fell downe at his fete, and besought him, that he wolde put awaye the wykednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against fy Jewes. And the kyng helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kyng, and sayde: Yf it please the kyng, and yf I haue founde grace in his sight, and yf it be cöuenyent for the kyng, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be wryttē, fy the letters of the deuice of Amā the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, maie be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroie fy Jewes in all fy kynges lödes. For how can I se the euell that shal happē vnto my people? and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynred?

Then sayde fy kyng Ahasuerus vnto quene Hester, and to Mardocheus the Iewe: Beholde, I haue geuen Hester the house of Aman, and him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed häde vpon fy Jewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Jewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with fy kynges ryng (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in fy kynges name, and sealed with the kynges ryng, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges srybes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Sian, on the thre and twentieth daie.

And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus commaunded) vnto the Jewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaynes in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundred and seuen and twenty londes, vnto euery one accordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto euery people after their speche, and to the Jewes accordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kyng Ahasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges ryng. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the kyngre graunted the Iewes (in what cities so euer they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote out, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with children and wemen, and to spoyle their good vpon one daye in all the londes of kyngre Ahasuerus, namely vpon the thirteenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.

D The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a commaundement geuen in all londes to be published vnto all the people, that y kyngre shulde be ready agaynst that daye to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made haist with all speede, accordinge to the kynges worde: and the commaundement was deuysed in the castel of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kyngre in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate crowne of golde, beyngre arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and y cite of Susan reioysed τ was glad: but vnto the Iewes there was come light and gladnesse, τ ioye τ worshipp. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and commaudemēt reached, there was ioye τ myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Iewes: in so moch that many of the people in the londe became of the Iewes beleue, for the feare of the Iewes came vpon them.

The ix. Chapter.

A IN the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thyrteenth daye, which the kynges worde and commaundement had appoynted, that it shulde be done, euē vpon y same daie y the enemies shulde haue destroyed the Iewes to haue oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euen y the Iewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the Iewes together in their cities within all y londes of kyngre Ahasuerus, to laye honde on such as wolde do thē euell, τ no man coulde withsonde them: for y feare of thē was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the kyngre promoted the Iewes: for the feare of Mardocheus came vpō thē. For Mardocheus was greate in the kynges house, τ the reporte of him was noised in all lōdes, how he increased τ grewe.

Thus the Iewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, τ dyd after their wyll vnto such as were their aduersaries. And at y castell of Susan slewe the Iewes and destroyed fyue hūdreth men: τ slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmastha, Arissai, Aridai, Vaiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman y sonne of Amadathi y enemye of the Iewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kyngre certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the castell of Susan. And the kyngre sayde vnto quene Hester: The Iewes haue slayne and destroyed fyue hūdreth men at y castell of Susan, and the ten sonnes of Amā: What shal they do in the other londes of y kyngre? What is thy peticion, that it maye be geuen the? τ what requirist thou more to be done? Hester sayde: Yf it please the kyngre, let him suffre the Iewes tomorow also to do accordinge vnto this dayes commaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten sonnes vpō y tre. And the kyngre charged to do so, and the commaundement was deuysed at Susan, τ Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the Iewes gathered thē selues together at Susan, vpon the fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundreth men at Susan, but on their goodes they laied no hādes.

C As for the other Iewes in the kynges lōdes, they came together, τ stode for their lyues, τ gatt rest frō their enemies: and slewe of their enemies fyue and seuentye thousande, howbeit they layed no hondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirtēth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourteenth daye of the same moneth rested they, which (daye) they ordeyned to be a daye of feastinge and gladnesse. But the Iewes at Susan were come together both on the thyrteenth daye and on the fourteenth, and on the fyfteenth daye they rested, and the same daye ordeyned they to be a daye of feastinge τ gladnes. Therefore the Iewes that dwelt in the vyllages and vnwalled townes, ordeyned y fourteenth daye of the moneth Adar, to be a daye of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

And Mardocheus wrote these actes, and sent the wrytinges vnto all the Iewes y were in all y londes of kyngre Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourteenth and fyfteenth daie of the

D moneth Adar, as the daies wherein ſ Jewes came to rest from their enemies, and as a moneth wherein their payne was turned to ioye, and their sorowe in to prosperite: that they shulde obserue the same as dayes of wealth and gladnes, and one to sende giftes vnto another, and to distribute vnto the poore.

And the Iewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the sonne of Amadathai all ſ Jewes enemye, had deuised to destroye all the Iewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to brynge them to naughte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuyce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Iewes) might be turned vpon his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daye Purim after the name of the lot, acordynge to all ſ wordes of this wrytinge: and what they the selues had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

E And the Iewes set it vp, and toke it vpon them and their sede, and vpon all such as ioyned themselues vnto them, that they wolde not mysse to obserue these two dayes yearly, acordynge as they were wryttē and appoynted, how ſ these dayes are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amōge all kynreds in all londes and cities. They are the dayes of Purim, which are not to be ouerslipte amonge the Iewes, and the memoriall of them oughte not to perishe from their sede.

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardocheus the Iewe, wrote with all auctorite, to confirme this seconde wrytinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the Iewes in the hundreth and seuen and twentie londes of ſ empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these dayes of Purim, in their tyme appoynted, acordynge as Mardocheus the Iewe and Hester the quene had ordeined cōcernynge them: lyke as they vpon their soule and vpon their sede had cōfirmed the actes of the * fastinges and of hir cōplaine. And Hester cōmaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a booke.

The x. Chapter.

AND the kynge Ahasuerus layed tribute A vpon the londe, and vpon the Iles of the See. As for all ſ worke of his power and auctoryte, and ſ greate worshippe of Mardocheus, which the kynge gaue him, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Media and Persia, For Mardocheus the Iewe was the seconde nexte vnto kynge Ahasuerus, and greate amonge ſ Jewes, and accepted amonge the multitude of his brethren, as one ſ seketh the welth of his people, and speaketh the best for all his sede.

The first Chapter.

IN the lōde of Hus^a there was a man called Iob: an innocent and vertuous man, such one as feared God, and eschued euell. This man had^b vij. sonnes, and iij. daughters. His substance was vij. M. shepe, iij. M. camels, v. C. yock of oxen, v. C. she asses, and a very greate housholde: so ^y he was one of the most principall men amōge all them of the east countre. His sonnes now wente on euery man, and made banquettes: one daye in one house, another daye in another, and sent for their iij. sisters, to eate & drinke with them. So when they had passed ouer the tyme of their banquettinge rounde aboute, Iob sent for them, and clensed them agayne, stode vp early, and offred for euery one a brētofferinge. For Iob thought thus: peraduenture my sonnes haue done some offence, and haue bene vnthankfull to God in their hertes. And thus dyd Iob euery daye.

B ^c Now vpon a tyme, when the seruauntes of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: I haue gone aboute the lōde,^d and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: hast thou not considered my seruaunt Iob, how that he is an innocēt and vertuous mā: such one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? Sathan answered, and sayde vnto the LORDE: Doth Iob feare God for naught? hast thou not preserued him, his house, and all his substance on euery syde? hast thou not blessed the workes of his hondes? Is not his possession encreaced in the londe? But laye thyne honde vpō him a litle, touch once all that he hath, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: lo all that he hath, be in thy power: only vpon him self se that thou laye not thine honde. Then wente Sathan forth from the LORDE.

and daughters were eatinge, and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, there came a messaunger vnto Iob, and sayde: Whyle the oxen were a plowinge, and the Asses goinge in the pasture besyde them: the Sabees came in violctly, and toke them all awaye: yee they haue slayne the seruauntes with the sward, and I only ranne my waye, to tell the.

And whyle he was yet speakyng, there came another, and sayde: The fyre of God is fallen from heauen, it hath consumed τ brēt vp all the shepe and seruauntes: and I only ranne my waye, to tell the. In the meane season whyle he was yet speakinge, there came another, and sayde: The Caldees made thre armies, and fell in vpon the camels, which they haue caried awaye, yee and slayne the seruauntes with the sward: and I only am gottē awaye, to tell the. Whyle he was speakinge, there came yet another, and sayde: Thy sonnes and daughters were eatinge and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, and sodenly there came a mightie greate wynde out off the South, and smote the iij. corners of the house: which fell vpon thy children, so that they are deed: and I am gotten awaye alone, to tell the.

Then Iob stode vp, and rente his clothes shaued his heade, fell downe vpon the groude, worshipped, and sayde: ^aNaked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I turne thither agayne. ^bThe LORDE gaue, and the LORDE hath taken awaye (the LORDE hath done his pleasure) now ^cblessed be \int name off the LORDE. In all these thinges dyd Iob not offende, ner murmured foolishly agaynst God.

The ij. Chapter.

IT happened also upon a tyme, ^athat when the seruauntes of God came τ stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence comest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: ^bI haue gone aboute the lōde, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan: Hast thou not considered my seruaunt Iob, how that he is an innocēt τ vertuous man such one as feareth God, and eschueueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? But thou mouedest me agaynst him, to punysh him: yet is it in wayne, for he contynueth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde: Skyne for skyne? yee a man will geue all \int euer he hath, for his life. But laye thine honde vpon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LORDE, and smote Iob with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the fote vnto his crowne: so that he sat vpon the grounde in the ashes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife vnto him: ^cDost thou yet cōtynne in thy perfectnesse? curse God, τ dye. But Iob sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish womā. Seinge we haue receaued prosperite at the honde of God, wherfore shulde we not be content with aduersite also? ^dIn all these thinges, dyd not Iob synne with his lippes.

Now when Iobs frendes herde of all \int trouble, that happened vnto him, there came thre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Sophar the Naamathite.

For they were agreed together to come, to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they lifte vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and sprynckled dust vpon their heades in the ayre. They sat them downe by him also vpon the grounde, vij. dayes and vij. nightes. Nether was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

The iij. Chapter.

AFTER this opened Iob his mouth, and ^acursed his daye, and sayde: ^blost be that daye, wherin I was borne: and the night, in the which it was sayde: there is a manchild conceived. The same daye be turned to darcknesse, and not regarded of God from aboue, nether be shyned vpo with light: but be couered with darcknesse, and the shadowe of death. Let the dymme cloude fall vpon it, and let it be lapped in with sorowe. Let the darckstorne ouercome y^e night, let it not be reckened amonge the dayes off the yeare, ner counted in the monethes. Despyed be that night, and discommended: let them that curse the daye, gene it their curse also, euen those that be ready to rayse vp Leuiathan. Let the starres be dymme throw darcknesse of it. Let it loke for light, but let it se none, nether the rysynge vp of the fayre mornynge: because it shut not vp the wombe that bare me, ner hyd these sorowes fro myne eyes.

B Alas, why dyed I not in y^e byrth? "Why dyd not I perysh, as soone as I came out of my mothers wōbe? Why set they me vpō y^r knees? Why gaue they me suck with their brestes? Then shulde I now haue lyen still, I shulde haue slepte, and bene at rest: like as the kynges ād lordes of y^e earth, which buylde them selues speciall places: As the prynces that haue greate substaunce of golde, ⁊ their houses full of syltuer. O that I vtterly had no beyng, or were as a thīge borne out of tyme (that is put asyde) ether as yonge children, which neuer sawe the light. There must the wicked cease from their tyranny, there such as are ouerlaboured, be at rest: there are those letten out fre, which haue bene in preson, so that they heare nomore the voyce of the oppressore: There are small and greate: the bonde man, and he that is fre frō his master.

Wherefore is the light geuen, to him that is in mysery? and life vnto them, that haue heuy hertes? (Which longe for death, and it commeth not: for yf they might fynde their graue, they wolde be maruelous glad, as those that dygge vp treasure) To the man whose waye is hyd, which God kepeth backe from him.

This is the cause, that I syghe before I eate, and my roariniges fall out like a water floude. For the thyng that I feared, is come vpon me: and the thyng that I was afrayed of, is happened vnto me. Was I not happy? Had I not quyetnesse? Was I not in rest? And now commeth such mysery vpon me.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN answered Eliphaz of Theman and sayde vnto him: Yf we begynne to comon with the, peraduenture thou wilt be mys-content, but who can witholde himself from speakyng? Beholde, thou hast bene a teacher of many, and hast comforted the weery hondes.

Thy wordes haue set vp those that were fallen, thou hast refreshed the weake knees. But now that the plage is come vpon the, thou shrēkest awaye: now that it hath touched thyself, thou art faint harted. ⁴Where is now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy patience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? Considre (I praye the) who euer peryshed, beyng an innocent? Or, when were the godly destroyed? ⁵As for those that plowe wickednesse (as I haue sene myself) and sowe myschefe, they reape y^e same. For whē God bloweth vpon them, they perysh, and are destroyed throw the blast of his wrath. The roarinige of the lyon, the cryenge off the lyonesse, ⁊ y^e teth off y^e lyōs whelpes are brokē. The greate lyon perysheth, because he cā get no pray and the lyons whelpes are scaterd abrode.

There is spoken vnto me a thyng in coun-
B cell, which hath genen a terrible sounde in myne eare, with a vision in the night, ⁶when men are fallen a slepe. Soch feare and drede came vpō me, that all my bones shoke. And when the wynde passed ouer by me, the hayres of my flesh stode vp.

Then stode there one before me, whose face I knewe not: an ymage there was, and the wether was still, so that I herde this voyce: Maye a man be iustified before God? ⁷Maye there eny man be iudged to be cleue, by reason of his owne workes? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnessse amonge his owne seruauntes, and proude disobedience amonge his angels.

How moch more thē shal they (that dwell in houses of claye, whose foundation is but earth) be moth eaten? They shalbe destroyed from the mornynge vnto the euenynge: yee they shall perish, or euer they be awarre: and be taken awaye so cleue, that none of thē shall remayne, but be deed, or euer they be awarre off it.

ignorant. ^aI haue sene my self, when the foolish was depe roted, that his bewty was sodely destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the dore, and no mā to deluyer them: ^bthat his haruest was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weapened man had spoyled it, and that the thirstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth trauayle, nether commeth sorow out of ^cŷ grounde: but it is man, that is borne vnto mysery, like as the byrde for to fle.

B But now will I speake off the LORDE, and talke of God: which doth thinges, that are vnsearcheable, and marueles without nōbre: Which geueth rayne vpon the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which setteth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prosperite, to those that are in heuynesse: Which destroyeth the deuyces of the sotyll, ^dso that they are not able to perfourme the thynges that they take in hōde: which compaseth ^eŷ wyse in their owne craftynesse, and ouertroweth the counsell of the wicked: ^fIn so moch that they runne in to darcknesse by fayre daye, and grope aboute them at the noone daye, like as in the night.

^gAnd so he deluyereth the poore from the swearde, from their mouth, and from the hōde of the cruell: that the poore maye haue hope, and that the mouth of the oppressoure maye be stopped.

C Beholde, ^hhappie is the man, whom God punysheth: therefore, despise not thou ⁱŷ chastenynge of the Almighty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medicyne agayne: though he smyte, his honde maketh whole agayne.

He deluyereth the out of sixe troubles, so that in the seuenth there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of hunger he saueth ^jŷ from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

He shall kepe the from the perulous tonge so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nede to feare. ^kIn destruction and dertth thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afrayed for the bestaes of the earth: But the castels in the londe shall be confederate with the, and the bestaes of the felde shall geue the peace:

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge place shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy substance, and be nomore punyshed for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shall encrease, and that thy posterite shalbe as the grasse vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy graue in a fayre age, like as ^lŷ corne sheeues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues haue proued by experience. Therefore now that thou hearest it, take better hede to thyself.

The vi. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O that my misery weere weyed, and my punyshment layed in the balauces: for then shulde it be heuyer, then the sonde of the see. This is the cause, that my wordes are so soroufull.

For the almighty hath shott at me with his arowes, whose indignacion hath droncke vp my sprete, and ^mŷ terrible feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse roare when he hath grasse? ⁿOr crieth the oxe, whē he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thyng be eaten vnseasoned, or without salt? What taist hath ^oŷ whyte within the yoke an egg? The thinges that some tyme I might not awaye withall, are now my meate for very sorow. O that I might haue my desyre: O ^pŷ God wolde graunte me the thyng, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smyte me: that he wolde let his honde go, and hew me downe. Thē shulde I haue some cōforte: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst ^qŷ wordes of the holy one.

What power haue I to endure? Or what is myne ende, that my soule might be paciēt? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or, is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to helpe my self? Is not my strength gone from me, like as yf one withdrewe a good dede from his frende, and forsoke the feare of God? Myne owne brethren passe ouer by me as the water-broke, that hastely runneth thorow ^rŷ valleys. ^sBut they that feare the horefrost, the snowe shal fall vpon them.

for the pathes \ddot{y} they go in, are coked: they haist after vayne thinges, and shal perish. Considre the pathes off Themán, τ the wayes off Saba, wherin they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny cōfidence in them: For whē they came to opteyne the thynges that they loked for, they were brought to confucion.

C Eueñ so are ye also come vnto me: but now that ye se my mysery, ye are afrayed. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to geue me eny off youre substauce? To delyuer me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tonge: and yf I do erre, shewe me wherin.

Wherefore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken? which of you can reproue them? Sauynge only that ye are sotyll to check mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse, \AA go aboute to ouerthrowe youre owne frende. Wherefore loke not only vpon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I lye, or no. Turne in to youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferent iudges, and considre myne vngyltynesse: whether there be eny vnrigh-uousnesse in my tonge, or vayne wordes in my mouth.

The viij. Chapter.

A IS not the life off mā vpon earth a very batayll? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an hyred seruaunte? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyreth the shadowe, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I laboured whole monethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull night haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: "O when shal I ryse? Agayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be dareke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthinesse and dust: my skyne is wythered, and crompted together: \AA my dayes passe ouer more spedely, thē a weeuier can weeuie out his webbe, and are gone, or I am awarre. O remembre, that my life is but a wynde, \AA that myne eye shal nomore se the pleasures thereof, yee and that none other mans eye shall se me eny more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to naught. like as a cloude is cōsumed and vanysheed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne in to his house, nether shall his place knowe him eny more.

Therefore I will not spare my mouth, but will speake in the trouble of my sprete, in \ddot{y} bytternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a see or a whallysh, that thou kepest me so in preson? When I thynke: my bedd shall comforte me, I shall haue some refreshynge by talkynge with myself vpon my couche: \AA Thē troublest thou me with dreames, \AA makest me so afrayed thorow visions, that my soule wyssheth rather to be hanged, and my bones to be deed.

I can se no remedy, I shall lyue nomore: O spare me then, for my dayes are but vayne. \AA What is man, that thou hast him in soch reputacion, and settest so moch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and sodely doest thou trye him.

Why goest thou not fro me, ner lettest me alone, so longe till I swalow downe my spete? I haue offended, what shal I do vnto \ddot{y} , O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so heuy a burden vnto my self? Why doest thou not forgeue me my synne? Wherefore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yf thou sekest me tomorow in the mornynge, I shalbe gone.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: How longe wilt thou talke of soch thinges? how longe shal thy mouth speake so proude wordes? Doth God peruerthe the thinge that is lauffull? Or, doth the Allmightie destroye the thyng that is right? Whē thy sonnnes syyed agaynst him, dyd not he punysh thē for their wickednesse? Yf thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes, \AA make thine humble prayer to \ddot{y} Allmightie: yf thou woldest lyue a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediaty, \AA geue the the bewtie of righ-uousnesse agayne? are but of yesterdage, and conside not, that oure dayes vpon earth are but a very shadow. "They shall shewe the, they shall tell the, yee they will gladly confesse the same.

B ³ Maye a resshe be grene without moystnesse? maye the grasse growe without water? No: but (or euer it be shot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before any other herbe. Euen so goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus also shal the ypcocrytes hope come to naught. His confidence shalbe destroyed, for he trusteth in a spydres webbe.

He leeneth him vpō his house, but he shal not stonde: he holdeth him fast by it, yet shal he not endure. Oft tymes a thinge doth flourish, and men thinke that it maye abyde the Sonneshyne: it shuteth forth the braunches in his garden, it shalld many rotes, in so moch that it is like an house off stones. But yf it be taken out off his place, every man denyeth it, sayenge: I knowe the not. Lo, thus is it with him, that reioyseth in his owne doinges: and as for other, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not cast away a vertuous man, nether wil he helpe the vngodly. Thy mouth shall he fyll with laughynge, and thy lypes with gladnesse. They that hate the, shalbe confounded, and yf dwellinges of yf vngodly shal come to naught.

The iiij. Chapter.

A ¹ JOB answered, and sayde: ²As for yf I knowe it is so of a treuth, yf a man compared vnto God, can not be iustified. Yf he wil argue with him, he shall not be able to answere him vnto one amonge a thousande. He is wyse of hert, and mightie in strength. Who euer prospered, that toke parte agaynst him? He translateth the moūtaines, or euer they be awarre, and ouerthroweth them in his wrath. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers shake withall. He commaundeth the Sōne, and it ryseth not: he closeth vp the starres, as it were vnder a signet. He himself alone spredeth out yf heauens, and goeth vpon the wawes of the see. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the *vij. starres and the secrete places of the south. He doth greate thinges, such as are vnsearcheable, yee and wonders without nombre.

B Yf he came by me, I might not loke vpō him: yf he wente his waye, I shulde not perceaue it. Yf he be haisty to take any thinge awaye, who wil make him restore it agayne? Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou? "He is God, whose wrath no man maye withstōde: but the proudest of all must stonpe vnder him. How shulde I then answere him? or, what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yee though I be righteous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely subnytte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, yf he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my sprete be in rest, but fylleth me with bytternesse.

C Yf men will speake of strength, he is the strōgest of all: yf mē will speake of righteousness, who darre be my recorde? yf I will iustifie my self, myne owne mouth shall cōdemne me: yf I will put forth my self for a perfecte man, he shal proue me a wicked doer: For that I shulde be an innocent, my cōscience knoweth it not, yee I my self am weery off my life.

This one thīge wil I saye: "He destroyeth both the righteous and vngodly. And though he slaye sodenly with the scourge, yet laugheth he at the punyshment of the innocent. As for the worlde, he geueth it ouer in to the power of the wicked, such as the rulers be, wherof all londes are full. Is it not so? where is there eny, but he is soch one?

D My dayes haue bene more swifte, then a runner: they are gone sodenly, and haue sene no good thinge. They are passed awaye, as the shippes that be good vnder sale, and as the Aegle that haisteth to the pray. When I am purposed to forget my complainynge to change my countenance, and to cōforte my self: then am I afrayed of all my workes, for I knowe, thou faourest not an euell doer. Yf I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I washed my self with snowe water, and made myne hondes neuer so clene, yet shuldest thou dyppe me in yf myre, and myne owne clothes shulde defyle me. I am. Nether is there eny dayes man to reprove both the partes, or to laye his hōde betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye from me, yee let him make me nomore afrayed of him, and then shal I answeere him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in soch fearfulnessse, I can make no answeere: And why? it greueth my soule to lyue.

The x. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, now will I put forth my wordes: I wil speake out of the very heynesse off my soule, and will saye vnto God: O do not condemne me, but shewe me the cause, wherfore thou iudgest me on this maner. Thinkest thou it well done, to oppresse me, to east me of (beinge a worke of thy hondes) and to mauteyne the councill of the vngodly? Hast thou fleszshy eyes then, or doest thou loke as man loketh? Are thy dayes as the dayes of man, and thy yeares as mans yeares? that thou makest soch inquisition for my wickednesse, and searest out my synne? where as (notwithstondinge) thou knowest that I am no wicked person, & that there is no man able to deluyer me out of thine honde. "Thy hondes haue made me, & fashioned me altogether rounde aboute, wilt thou then destroye me sodely? O remembre (I beseke the) how that thou madest me of the mould of the earth, and shalt brynge me to earth agayne.

Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylck: and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with skynne and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes. Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent hede that thou tokest vpon me, hath preserued my sprete.

Though thou hydest these things in thine hert, yet am I sure, that thou remembrest thē all. Wherfore didest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not elensed me from myne offence? Yf I do wickedly, wo is me therefore: Yf I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and se myne owne misery.

Thou huntest me out (beynge in heynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bringest fresh witnesses agaynst me, thy wrath increasest thou vpon me, very many are the plagas that I am in. Wherfore hast thou brought me^a out of my mothers wombe? O that I had perished, & that no eye had sene me. Yf they had caried me to my graue, as soone as I was borne, then shulde I be now, as though I had neuer bene.

Shall not my short life come soone to an ende? O holde the frome, let me alone, that I maye ease myself a litle: afore I go thither, from whence I shal not turne agayne: Namely, to that londe of dareknesse & shadowe of death: yee in to that darek cloudy londe & deadly shadowe, where as is no ordre, but terrible feare as in the dareknesse.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered? Shulde he that babbleth moch. be commended therein? Shulde men geue eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne? Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am elene in thy sight? O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secrete wysdome) how manyfolde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou fynde out God with thy sekyng? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Allmightie? He is hyer thē heauē, what wilt thou do? Deper thē hell, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceedeth the length of the earth, and his bredth y bredth of the see. Though he turne all thinges vp syde downe, close them in, or thrust thē together, who darre check him therfore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seyth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then consider it? A vayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wyld asses foale. Yf thou haddest now a right herte, & listest vp thine hondes towarde him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, thē shuldest thou be sure, and haue no nede to feare.

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thyнке nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shulde thy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the mornyng. Then mightest thou haue comfort, in the hope that thou hast: ⁊ slepe quietly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and no mā to make the afrayed, yee many one shulde set moch by the. As for the eyes of the vngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape: their hope shalbe misery and sorow of mynde.

The xij. Chapter.

A SO Iob answered, and sayde: Then (no doute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perish with you. But I haue vnderstōdinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Yee who knoweth not these thinges? Thus he that calleth vpō God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neyghboure: the godly ⁊ innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynesse is a light despysed in ƿ hertes of the rich, ⁊ is set for them to stamble vpon.

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, ⁊ they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geueth all thinges richely with his honde.

B Axe the catell, ⁊ they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shall tell ƿ: Speake to the earth, and it shall shewe the: Or to the fyslies of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that ƿ hōde of the LORDE made all these?

⁊ In whose honde is the soule of euery luyng thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, ⁊ and the mouth in tastinge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde persones there is wysdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstōdinge. Yee with God is wysdome and strength, it is he that hath counsell ⁊ foreknowledge. Yf he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? ⁊ Yf he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, yf he witholde the waters, they drye vp: Yf he let thē go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wysdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wise men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wyttes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kynges, and gyrdeth their loynes with a boude, he ledeth awaye the prestes in to captiuyte. and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. ⁊ He taketh the verite from out of the mouth, ⁊ disapoynteth ƿ aged of their wysdome. He poureth out confucion vpon prynces, and cōforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Loke what lyeth hyd in darcknesse, he declareth it opely: and the very shadowe of death bringeth he to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: He maketh them to multiplie, and dryueth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kynges of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wādringe out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stackeringe to and fro like droncken men.

The xij. Chapter.

LO, all this haue I sene with myne eye, ⁊ herde with myne eare, ⁊ vnderstode it. Loke what ye knowe, that same do I knowe also, nether am I inferior vnto you. Neuerthelesse I am purposed to talke with the Allmightie, and my desyre is to comon with God. As for you, ye are workmasters of lyes: and vnprofitable Phisicians alltogether. Wolde God ye kepte youre tonge, that ye might be taken for wyse men? Therefore heare my wordes, and pondre the sentence of mylippes. Will ye make answer for God with lyes, and māteyne him with disceate? Wil ye accepte ƿ personne of God, and intreate for him? Shal that helpe you, when he calleth you to rekenyng? Thinke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Punysh you shall he and reprove you, yf ye do secretly accepte eny personne. Shall he not make you afrayed, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpō you? youre remembrance shalbe like the dust, ⁊ youre pryde shalbe turned to claye.

Holde youre tonges now, and let me speake. ⁊ For there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherefore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cōforte ner hope for me, yf he wil slaye me. ⁊ But yf I shewe and reprove myne owne wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why? there maye no Ypocrite come before him, Heare my wordes, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. Beholde, though sentence were geuen vpon me, I am sure to be knowne for vngilty. What is

Wilt thou be so cruell ⁊ extreme vnto a flyenge leaf, and folowe vpon drye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt vtterly vndoo me. for yf synnes of my yough? Thou hast put my fote in the stockes: ⁊ thou lokest narrowly vnto all my pathes, ⁊ marcest the steppes of my fete: where as I (notwithstandinge) must consume like as a foule carion, and as a cloth that is moth eaten.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A MAN that is borne of a woman, hath but a shorte tyme to lyue, and is full of dyuerse miseries. He cometh vp, and falleth awaye like a floure. He flyeth as it were a shadowe, and neuer continueth in one state. Thinkest thou it now well done, to open thine eyes vpon soch one, and to brynge me before the in iudgment? Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an vnclene thinge? No body. The dayes of man are shorte, yf nombre of his monethes are knowne only vnto the. Thou hast apoynted him his boundes, he can not go beyonde them. Go from him, that he maye rest a litle: vntill his daye come, which he loketh for, like as an hyrelinge doth.

B Yf a tre be cutt downe, there is some hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the braunches againe: For though a rote be waxen olde and deed in the grounde, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and brynge forth bowes, like as when it was first planted. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? ^a The floudes when they be dried vp, ⁊ the ryuers when they be emptye, are fylled agayne thorow the flowing waters of the see: ^b but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, vntill the heauen perish: he shal not wake vp ner ryse out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, vntill thy wrath were stilled: ⁊ to appoynte me a tyme, wherein thou mightest remembre me. ^c Maye a deed man lyue agaynie? ^d All the dayes of this my pilgromeage am I lokyng, when my chaunginge shal come. Yf thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeie the: ^e only despyse not the worke of thine owne handes.

For thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be not thou to extreme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their place, the waters pearse thorow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes waszshe awaye the grauell ⁊ earth: Euen so destroyest thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou prenaylest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chaungest his estate, and puttest him from the. Whether his children come to worshipe or no, he can not tell: And yf they be men of lowe degre, he knoweth not. Whye he lyueth, his flesh must haue trauayle: and whye the soule is in him, he must be in sorowe.

The xv. Chapter.

THEN answered Eliphas the Themanite. A and sayde: Shulde a wyse man geue soch an answer (as it were one that spake in the wynde) and fyll his stomacke with anger? Thou reouest with wordes, that are nothinge wroth: and speakest the thinges, which can do no good. As for shame, thou hast set it asyde, els woldest thou not make so many wordes before God: but thy wickednesse teacheth thy mouth, and so thou hast chosen the a craftie tonge. Thine owne mouth condemneth the, and not I: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answer. Art thou the first man, that euer was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secreete counsell of God, that all wyszdomme is to litle for yf? What knowest thou, yf we knowe not? What vnderstondest thou, but we can the same? With vs are olde and aged men, yee soch as haue lyued longer then thy forefathers.

thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, ŷ thy mynde is so puft vp agaynst God ⁊ letest soch wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vncléane? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amōge his owne sanctes: ⁊ yee the very hea- uens are vncléne in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryncketh wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewe the a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, ⁊ hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the loude was geuen, that no stranger shulde come amouge them.

C The vngodly despayreth all the dayes of his life, ⁊ the nombre of a tyrantes yeares is vnknowne. A fearful sounde is euer in his eares, ⁊ when it is peace, yet feareth he destruction: He beleueth neuer to be deluyered out of darknesse, the swerde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his lyuinge, he thinketh planely, that the daye of darknesse is at honde. Sorow and carefullnesse make him afrayed, ⁊ cōpasse him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost redy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, ⁊ armed himself agaynst ŷ Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, ⁊ with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with fatnesse, and maketh his body well lykynge. Therefore shall his dwellynge be in desolate cities, ⁊ in houses which no mā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones.

D He shall not be rich, nether shall his substance continue, ner increase vpon earth. He shal neuer come out of darknesse, the flame shal drye vp his braunches, with ŷ blast of the mouth of God shal he be takē awaie. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulness ner treuth, so sore is he disceaue with vanite.

He shall perish, afore his tyme be worne out, and his honde shal not be grene. He shal be pluckte of as an vntymely grape from ŷ vyne, and shal let his floure fall, as the olyue doth. For the congregacion of Ypoerites is vnfrutefull, ⁊ the fyre shal consume the houses of such, as are gredy to receaue giftes. ^c He conceaueh trauayle, he beareth myschefe, ⁊ his body bryngeth forth disceate.

The xvi. Chapter.

I JOB answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes ^a herde soch thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy vayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet eny more to saye? I coude speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with ŷ talkinge of my lypes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tōge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (wherof my wryncles beare wytnesse) there stōleth vp a dyssembler to make me answer with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasseth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy skouleth vpon me with his eyes.

They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, ^b and smytten me vpon the cheke despitefully, they haue eased thē selues thorow myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and deluyered me in to the hondes of ŷ wicked. I was somtyme in wealth, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the necke, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a marck for him to shute at. He hath compased me rounde aboute with his dartes, he hath wounded my loynes, ⁊ not spared. My bowels hath he poured vpon the grounde. He hath geuē me one wounde vpon another, and is fallē vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my skynne, and lye with my strength in the dust.

My face is swollē with wepinge, ⁊ myne ^c eyes are waxen dymme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is cleue. O earth, couer not my bloude, and let my crienge fynde no rowme. For lo, my witness is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboute in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might plete with God, as one man doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, ⁊ I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turue agayne.

The xvij. Chapter.

A MY breth fayleth, my dayes are shortened, I am harde at deathes dore. I haue diseaued no man, yet must myne eye cōtinue in heuynesse. O delyuer me, and set me by the, who shall then be able to thrust my hondes together? Thou hast with holdē their hertes from vnderstōdinge, therefore shall they not be set vp an hve. He promiseth his frēdes parte of his good, but his owne childrē spende it. He hath made me as it were a byworde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amōge thē. My countenance is heuy for very anger, ⁊ the membres of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous mē therefore shall wel cōsidre this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Ypocrite.

B The righteous wil kepe his waye, and he ŷ hath cleane handes, wil euer be stronger ⁊ stronger. As for you, turne you, ⁊ get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mā amonge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vanished awaye, which haue vexed myne herte, chaungeing the night in to daye, ⁊ ŷ light in to dareknes. Though I tary neuer so moch, yet the graue is my house, and I must make my bed in the dareke. I call corrupcion my father, and the wormes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? Or, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe in to the pytt, ⁊ lye with me in the dust.

The xvij. Chapter.

A THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marke well, and considre, we wil speake also. Wherefore are we counted as beestes, ⁊ reputed so vyle in youre sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal ŷ earth be forsaken, or the stones remoued out of their place because of ŷ? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shalbe dareke in his dwellinge, ⁊ his candle shalbe put out with him. His presumptuous goings shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shalbe taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His fote shalbe holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pyttfall in the waye.

Fearfulnesse shal make him afrayed on euery syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Hunger shalbe his substaunce, and mysfortune shall halge vpon him. He shall eate his owne skynne, yee his owne armes shall he deuoure, beyng a firstborne of death. All his comferte and hope shal be roted out of his dwellinge, very fearfulnesse shall bryng him to the kyng. Other men shall dwell in his house (which now is none of his) and brymstone shalbe scatered vpon his habitacion. His rotes shalbe dried vp beneth, ⁊ aboute shall his haruest be cut downe. His remembrance shall perish from the earth, ⁊ his name shall not be praysed in the stretes: he shalbe dryuen from the light in to dareknesse, and be cast clene out of the worlde. He shall nether haue children ner kynszfolkes amonge his people, no ner eny posterite in his countre: yonge ⁊ olde shalbe astonysed at his death. Soch are now the dwelllynges of the wicked, and this is ŷ place of him that knoweth not God.

The xix. Chapter.

IOB answered, ⁊ sayde: How lōge wil ye vex me mynde, ⁊ trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes haue ye reproofed me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me so to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhance youre selues agaynst me, ⁊ accuse me to be a wicked personne because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowe this then, ŷ it is God, which hath handled me so violētly, ⁊ hath compased me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I crie, yet violēce is done vnto me,^a I can not be herde: Though I complaine, there is none to geue sentēce with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I cā not get awaye, he hath set dareknesse in my gate.

He hath spoyled me of myne honour, ⁊ taken the crowne awaye fro my heade. He hath destroyed me on euery syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucte vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His men of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. " He hath put my brethren farre awaye fro me, and such as were of myne acquaintance, are become straügers vnto me. Myne owne kynsz folkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembrance. The seruauites and maydens of myne owne house take me for a straüger, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sight.

C When I call vpon my seruaut, he geueth me no answer: no though I praie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyfe maye not abyde my brth, I am fayne to speake fayre vnto the children of myne owne body. Yee the very deserte fooles despise me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me. All such as were my most familiers, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hangeth to my skynne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the skynne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes) for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vex me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

D O that my wordes were written, O that they were put in a boke: wolde God they were grauē with an yron pēne in leade or in stone. For I am sure, that my redemer lyueth, and that I shall rise out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this skynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are consumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occasion agaynst him. But beware of the sward, for the sward wybe avenged of wickednesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The xx. Chapter.

A THEN answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to answer. And why? my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the cheykinge & reprove, therefore am I purposed to make answer after my vnderstōdinge. Knowest thou not this, namely: that from the begynninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Ypocrytes continued but ŷ twinkle of an eye? Though he be magnified vp to the heaue, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like dounge: In so moch ŷ they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he? He vanysmeth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in ŷ night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth now no sight of him, & his place knoweth him nomore. His childrē go a begginge, their handes bringe thē to sorow and heynesse.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce, 33 which shal lie downe with him in ŷ earth. Whē wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyl he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poison of serpetes within his body. The riches ŷ he deuoureth, shal he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brokes of hony and butter: But labour shall he, & yet haue nothinge to eate. Greate traualle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shall he perish in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, 34 ŷ he left nothinge behynde, therfore his goodes shal not prospere. Though he had plenteousnesse of euery thinge, yet was he poore, & therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

For though ŷ wicked haue neuer so moch to fyl his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne ouer him: so that yf he fle the yron weapens, he shall be shott with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, & go out at his backe, and a glisteringe sward: thorow ŷ gall of him, feare shal come vpō him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnykndled fyre shal consume him, and loke what remayneth in his house, it shall be destroyed. The heauen shall declare his wickednesse, & the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substance that he hath in his house, shalbe taken awaye and perish, in the daye of the LORDES wrath. "This is the porcion that ȳ wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

The xxiij. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende youre selues. Suffre me a litle, that I maye speake also, and thē laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my sprete be thē in sore trouble? Marke me well, be abaszshed, and laye youre hāde vpon youre mouth. For whē I pondre ⁊ conside this, I am afrayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. ^aWherefore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, ⁊ increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, ⁊ their generacion before their eyes.^b Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte thē. Their bullocke gendreth, and that not out of tyme: their cow calueth, and is not vnfrutefull.

B They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the danuce. ^cThey beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welthyngesse: but sodenly they go downe to hell. They saye vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. ^dWhat maner of felowe is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vtterly no goodnesse in them, therefore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. ^eHow oft shal the candle of ȳ wicked be put out? how oft commeth their destruccion vpon them? O what sorowe shall God geue them for their parte in his wrath? ^fYee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

C And though God saue their childrē from soch sorowe, yet wil he so rewarde thē selues, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearful wrath of the Allmighty. For whath careth he, what become of his housholde after his death? whose monethes passe awaye swifter than an arowe.

In as moch thē as God hath ȳ hiest power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth now when he is mightie ⁊ at his best, rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowels are at the fattest, and his bones full of mary. Another dyeth in sorowe and heuynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, ⁊ the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrightuously. ^gFor ye saye: where is the prynces palace? where is the dwellinge of the vngodly: Axe eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will not regarde their tokens ⁊ dedes) he shal tell you, ^hthat the wicked is kepte vnto the daye of destruccion, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reprove him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngraciousnesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. Thē shal he be fayne to be buried amoge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, ⁊ there are innumerable gone before him. O how vayne is the comforte ȳ ye geue me? Are not youre answers cleane contrary to right and treuth?

The xxiij. Chapter.

SO Eliphas the Themanite gaue answer, ^a ⁊ sayde: Maye a man be copared vnto God in wysdome, though he seme to him self, for to be like him? What pleasure hath God in ȳ thou art rightuous? Now because ŷ God is hyer thē the heauens, ⁊ because thou seist ŷ the starres are so hye, wilt thou therefore saye: "Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? The xxiij. Chapter.

JOB answered, and sayd: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heuy amonge my groninges. O that I might se him ⁊ fynde him: O that I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes:

That I might knowe, what answer he wolde geue me: ⁊ that I might vnderstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he pleate agaynst me with his greate power ⁊ strength, or wyl he leane him self vtterly vpon me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I fynde him not: yf I come behynde, I eā get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pondre his workes, I can not atteyne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeth himself, ŷ I can not se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: ⁊ trieth me as ŷ golde in ŷ fyre.

Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hye strete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the cōmaundemēt of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who will turne him back? He doth as him listeth, and bryngeth to passe what he wil. He rewardeth me in to my bosome, ⁊ many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is ŷ cause, that I shrenke at his presence, so that when I considre him, I am afraied of him. For in so much as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seyng that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The xxiij. Chapter.

CONSIDERINGE then that there is no tyme hyd from the Allmightie, how happeneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? For some mē there be, that remoue other mēs londe markes: that robbe them of their cattell, and kepe the same for their owne: that dryue awaye the asse of the fatherlesse: that take ŷ wyddowes oxen for a pledge: that thrust the poore out of the waye, ⁊ oppresse the symple of the worlde together. Beholde, the wilde asses in ŷ deserte go by tymes (as their maner is) to spoyle: Yee the very wilderness ministreth foode for their children. They reape the corne felde that is not their owne: and gather the grapes out of his vynyarde, whom they haue oppressed by violence. They are the cause ŷ so many men are naked and bare, hauynge no clothes

B So that when the showers in the mountaynes haue rayned vpon them, & they be all wett, they haue none other sueoure, but to kepe them amonge the rookes.

They spoyle the suckinge fatherlesse children, and put the poore in prison : In so moch that they let them go naked without clothinge, and yet the hungrie beare the sheeues. The poore are fayne to labour in their oyle mylles, yee and to treade in their wyne presses, and yet to suffre thyrst. ^aThe whole cite crieth vnto the LORDE with sighinge, the soules of the slayne make their complaynte : But God destroyeth them not for all this, where as they (not with stödinge) are rebellious and disobedient enemies : which seke not his light and waye, ner turne agayne in to his path. ^bTymely in the mornynge do they aryse, to murthur the symple and poore, & in the night they go a stealinge.

C The eye of the vngodly is like the aduouterer, that wayteth for the darcknesse, and sayeth thus in him self : Tush, there shal no mā se me, & so he disgyseth his face. In the night season they search the houses, and hyde them selues in the daye tyme, but wil not knowe ^c light. For as soone as the daye breaketh, the shadowe of death commeth vpō them, and they go in horrible darcknesse. The vngodly is very swyft : O ^d his porciō also vpō earth were swyfter then ^e runnyngge water, which suffreth not ^f shipmā to beholde the fayre & pleasaūt vyniardes. O ^g they (for the wickednesse which they haue done) were drawn to the hell, sooner thē snowe melteth at the heate. O ^h all cōpassion vpon thē were forgottē : ⁱ their daynties were wormes : that they were clene put out of remembraunce, & vtterly hewē downe like an vnfrutefull tre. They manteyne the baren, & make them ^j they can not beare, & vnto wyddowes they do no good. They plucke downe the mightie with their power, & when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme pouerte, & takē out of the waye : yee & vtterly plucte of as the eares of corne. Is it not so ? Who wil thē reprove me as a lvar, & saye ^k my wordes are nothinge worth ?

The rrv. Chapter.

THEN answered Baldad the Suhite, & ^l sayde : Power & feare is with him aboue, that maketh peace (sittinge) in his hynesse, whose men of warre are innumerable, and whose light aryseth ouer all. ^m But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be iustified ? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman ? Beholde, the Moone shyneth no thinge in comparison to him, & the starres are vncleue in his sight. How moch more thē, mā, that is but corrupcion : and the somme of man, which is but a worme ?

The rrvj. Chapter.

IOB answered, and sayde : O how helpeth ⁿ thou the weake ? what comforte geuest thou vnto him that hath no strēth ? Where is ^o thy cōcell ^p thou shuldest geue him, which hath no wysdome ? Wilt thou so shewe thine excellent rightuousnes ? Before whom hast thou spoken those wordes ? Who made the breth to come out of thy mouth ? The giantes & worthies ^q are slayne, & lye vnder ^r worlde with their cōpanions : yee & all they which dwell beneth in the hell are not hyd frō him, & the very destruccion it self eā not be kepte out of his sight. He stretcheth out ^s north ouer the emptie, & hägeth ^t earth vpō nothinge. He byndeth ^u water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it eā not be sene, and spredeth his cloudes before it.

^v He hath cōpared the waters with certayne boundes, vntill the daye & night come to an ende. The very pilers of heauē trēble & quake at his reprove. ^w He stilleth the see with his power, & thorow his wysdome hath he set forth ^x worlde. With his sprete hath he garnished the heaucs, & with his hande hath he wounded the rebellious serpēt. This is now a shorte summe of his doynge. But who is able sufficiently to rehearce his workes ? Who can perceaue and vnderstonde ^y thondre of his power ?

The xxvij. Chapter.

THERE are places where syluer is moltē, ⁊ where golde is tryed: where yron is dygged out of the grounde, ⁊ stones resoluēd to metall. The darcknes shal once come to an ende, he can seke out the grounde of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, ⁊ the horrible shadowe, with the ryuer of water parteth he a sunder the straunge people, ſhe knoweth no good neighbourheade: such as are rude, vnmanerly ⁊ boysteous. He bryngeth foode out of the earth, ⁊ ſhe which is vnder, consumeth he with fyre. There is founde a place, whos stones are clene Saphirs, and where ſhe clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not, that no vulturs eye hath sene: wherin ſhe proude ⁊ hye mynded walke not, ⁊ where no lyon commeth. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, ⁊ ouerthroweth the mountaynes. Ryuers flowe out of the rockes, ⁊ loke what is pleasaunt, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greate floudes together, ⁊ the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How commeth a man then by wysdome? Where is the place that men fynde vnderstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she foude in the lōde of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not with me. She can not be gotten for the most fyne golde, nether maye the pryce of her be bought with eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphirs maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as once to be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome goeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cōmeth out of Inde, maye in no wyse be lickened vnto her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaunt and fayre so euer it be.

From whēce then commeth wysdome? ⁊ where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee ⁊ frō the foules of the ayre. Destruction ⁊ death saie: we haue herde tell of her with oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, ⁊ knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the worlde, and loketh vpon all that is vnder the heauē. When he weyed the wyndes, ⁊ measured ſhe wayes: when he set the rayue in ordre, and gaue the mightie floudes a lawe: Then dyd he se her, thē declared he her, prepared her and kweue her. And vnto man he sayde: " Beholde, to feare the LORDE, is wyszdome: ⁊ to forsake euell, is vnderstandinge.

The xiii. Chapter.

A SO Iob proceeded and wcte forth in his communicacion, sayenge: O y I were as I was in the monethes by past, ⁊ in the dayes whē God preserued me: when his light shyned vpon my heade: whē I wente after the same light ⁊ shyne euē throw the darknesse. As it stode with me, whē I was welthy ⁊ had ynough: whē God prospered my house: when the allmightie was with me: when my housholde folkes stode aboute me: whē my wayes ranne ouer with butter, ⁊ when the stony rockes gaue me ryuers of oyle: when I wente thorow the cite vnto the gate, ⁊ whē they set me a chayre in y strete: whē the yonge mē (as soone as they sawe me) hyd thē selues, ⁊ when the aged arose, ⁊ stode vp vnto me: whē the princes left of their talkinge, ⁊ laied their hāde to their mouth: whē the mightie kepte still their voyce, and whē their tonges cleued to the rofe of their mouthes. When all they y herde me, called me happie: ⁊ when all they y sawe me, wysshed me good. For I deluyered y poore whē he cried, ⁊ the fatherlesse y wanted helpe. He y shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good worde, ⁊ y widowes hert praised me. And why? I put vpon me righteousnes, which couered me as a garnēt, ⁊ equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the blynde, ⁊ a fote to the lame. I was a fater vnto the poore, ⁊ whē I knew not their cause, I sought it out diligētly. I brake the chafes of y vnrightuous, ⁊ plucte the spoyle out of their teth.

C Therefore, I thought verely, y I shulde haue dyed in my nest: ⁊ y my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spred out by the waters syde, ⁊ the dew laye vpō my corne. My honoure increased more ⁊ more, and my bowe was euer the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue eare, me they regarded, ⁊ with sylence they taried for my coucell. Yf I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge thē.

They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: ⁊ gaped vpon me, as the groude doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knew well it was not earnest: ⁊ this testimony of my cōtenuance pleased thē nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chefe, ⁊ sat as a kynge amonge his seruautes: Or as one that comforteth soch as be in heuynesse.

The xiii. Chapter.

BUT now they that are my inferiours ⁊ yonger then I, haue me in derision: ⁊ euē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought scorne to haue set with the dogges of my catell. The power ⁊ strēth of their hādes might do me no good, ⁊ as for their age, it is spēt ⁊ past awaye without eny profit. For very misery ⁊ hunger, they wente aboute in the wildernesse like wretches ⁊ beggers, pluckyng vpon herbes from amonge the buszshes, ⁊ the Iunipers rote was their meate. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe. Their dwellinge was beside foule brokes, yee in the caues ⁊ dennes of the earth. Vpō the drye heeth wcte they aboute crienge, ⁊ in the brome hilles they gathered them together. They were the children of fooles ⁊ vylanes, which are deed awaye frō the worlde. Now am I their songe, ⁊ am become their iestinge stocke. they abhorre me, they fle farre fro me ⁊ stayne my face with spetle. For y LORDE hath opened his quyuer, he hath hytt me, ⁊ put a brydle in my mouth. Vpon my right hāde they rose together agaynst me, they haue hurte my fete, made a waye to destroye me, ⁊ my path haue they clene marred. It was so easy for them to do me harme, that they neded no man to helpe thē. They fell vpon me, as it had bene y breakyng in of waters, ⁊ came in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfulnessse is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure vanisheth awaye more swiftly then wynde, ⁊ my prosperite departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therefore is my mynde poured full of heuynesse, ⁊ y dayes of trouble haue takē holde vpon me. My bones are pearced thorow in y night season, ⁊ my synewes take no rest. With all their power haue they chaunged my garnēt, ⁊ gyrded me therwith, as it were with a coate. I am euē as it were claye, ⁊ am become like aszshes & dust. Whē I crie vnto the, thou doest not heare me: & though I stonde before the, yet thou regardest me not. Thou art become myne enemye, & with thy violēt hāde thou takest parte agaynst me. In tymes past thou didest set me vp an bye, as it were aboute ſynde, but now hast thou geuē me a very sore fall. Sure I am, ſy thou wilt delyuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē luyinge. Now vse not mē to do violence vnto thē, ſy are destroyed all-ready: but where hurte is done, there vse thei to helpe. Dyd I wepe in ſy tyme of trouble? Had not my soule cōpassion vpō ſy poore? Yet neuerthelesse where as I looked for good, euell happened vnto me: and where as I waited for light, there came darcknesse. My bowels seeth with in me & take no rest, for ſy dayes of my trouble are come vpō me. Mekely & lowly came I in, yee & without eny displeasure: I stode vp in ſy cōgregacion, & commoned with thē. But now I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Estriches. My skynne vpō me is turned to black, & my bones are brēt with heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, & my pipe to wepinge.

The xxi. Chapter.

I MADE a couenaunt with myne eyes, ſy I wolde not loke vpō a dāsell. For how greate a porciō shal I haue of God frō aboue? & what enheritaūce frō ſy Almightye on hie? As for the vngodly & he ſy ioyneth himself to ſy cōpani of wicked doers shal not destruccion & misery come vpon him? Doth not he se my wayes, & tell all my goinges? Yf I haue cleued vnto vanite, or yf my fete haue runne to disceaue: let me be weyed in an eauen balaunce, that God maye se my innoceny. Yf so be that I haue withdrawn my fote out of the right waye, yf my hert hath folowed myne eye sight, yf I haue stayned or defyled my hōdes: O then is it reason that I sowe, and another eate: yee that my generacion and posterite be clene rote out. Yf my hert hath lusted after my neighbours wife, or yf I haue layed wayte at his dore: O then let my wife be another mans harlot, and let other lye with her. For this is a wickednesse and synne, that is worthy to be punyshed, yee a fyre that vtterly shulde consume, & rote out all my substance. Dyd I euer thinke scorne to do right vnto my seruāutes and maydens, when they had eny matter agaynst me? But seyng that God wil sytt in iudgment, what shal I do? And for so much as he wil nedes vyset me, what answere shal I geue him? He that fashioned me in my mothers wombe, made he not him also? were we not both shapen alyke in oure mothers bodies? When the poore desyred eny thinge at me, haue I denyed it them? Haue I caused ſy wyddowe stonde waytinge for me in vayne? Haue I eaten my porcion alone, that the fatherles hath had no parte with me? (for mercy grewe vp with me fro my youth, & compassion fro my mothers wombe.) Haue I sene eny man perish thorow nakednes & want of clothinge? Or, eny poore man for lack of rayment, whose sydes thanked me not, because he was warmed with ſy woll of my shepe?

Dyd I euer lyft vp my honde to hurte the fatherlesse? Yee in the gate where I sawe my self to be in auctorite: Thē let myne arme fall fro my shulder, & myne arme holes be broken fro the ioyntes. For I haue euer feared ſy vengeance & punyshmēt of God, & knew very well, ſy I was not able to beare his burthē. Haue I put my trust in golde? Or, haue I sayde to the fynest golde of all: thou art my cōfidence? Haue I reioysed because my substance was greate, and because my honde gat so moch? Dyd I euer greatly regarde the rysinge of the Sonne? Or, had I the goinge downe of ſy Moone in greate reputation? Hath my hert medled priuely with eny disceate? Or, dyd I euer kysse myne owne honde (that were a wickednesse worthy to be punyshed, for then shulde I haue denyed the God that is aboue.) Haue I euer reioysed at the hurte of myne enemye? Or, was I euer glad, ſy eny harme happened vnto him? Oh no, I neuer suffred my mouth to do such a sinne, as to wysch him euell. Yet they of myne owne housholde saye: who shal let vs, to haue oure bely ful of his flesh? I haue not suffred a stranger to lye with out, but opened my dores vnto him. Haue I euer done eny wicked dede where thorow I shamed my self before men: Or eny abhominacion, ſy I was fayne to hyde it? For yf I had feared eny greate multitude of people: Or yf I had

But yf case be that my londe crie agaynst me, or ſy the forowes therof make eny complainyte: yf I haue eaten the frutes therof vnpayed for, yee yf I haue greued eny of the plow men: Than, let thistles growe in steade of my wheate, ⁊ thornes for my barleye.

Here ende the wordes of Iob.

The xxxij. Chapter.

SO these three men wolde stryue nomore with Iob, because he helde himself a righteous man. But Eliu the sonne of Barachel the Bussite ^a of the kynred of Ram, was very sore displeasid at Iob, that he called himself iust before God. And with Iobs three frēdes he was angrie also, because they had founde no reasonable answer to ouercome him. Now taried Eliu till they had ended their communication with Iob, for why? they were elder then he. So when Eliu ſy sonne of Barachel ſy Bussite sawe, that these three men were not able to make Iob answere, he was myscontent: so that he gaue answer himself, and sayde: ^b Consideringe ſy I am yonge, ⁊ ye be men of age, I was afrayed, ⁊ durst not shewe forth my mynde, for I thought thus within my self: ^c It becōmeth olde men to speake, ⁊ the aged to teach wysdome. Euery mā ^d (no doute) hath a mynde, but it is the inspyracion of the Almightye that geueth vnderstandinge. All men are not wyse, nether doth euery aged man vnderstonde the thinge that is lauffull. Therefore wil I speake also (in so farre as I maye be herde) ⁊ wil shewe you myne opinyon. For whē I had wayted till ye made an ende of youre talkynge, ⁊ herde youre wysdome, what argumētes ye made in youre communication: yee when I had diligently pondred what ye sayde, I founde not one of you that made eny good argument agaynst Iob, or that directly coude make answere vnto his wordes: lest ye shulde prayse youre selues, to haue founde out wysdome: because it is God that hath cast him out, ⁊ no man. ^e Netherthelesse, seyng he hath not spoken vnto me, therefore wil not I answere him as ye haue done (for they were so abaszshed, that they coude not make answere, ner speake one worde) but in so moch as ye wil not speake, standinge still like dome men ⁊ makinge no answere: I haue a good hope for my parte to shappe him an answere ⁊ to shewe him my meanyng. For I am full of wordes, ⁊ the sprete that is within me, cōpelleth me. Beholde, I am as the new wyne which hath no vente, ⁊ bursteth the new vessels in sunder. Therefore wil I speake, that I maye haue vēte: I wil open my lyppes, and make answere. I wil regarde no maner of personne, no man wil I spare. For yf I wolde go aboute to please mē, I knowe not how soone my maker wolde take me awaye.

The xxxij. Chapter.

WHERFORE, heare my wordes (O Iob) ^a ⁊ herken vnto all, that I wyll saye: Beholde, I wil open my mouth, ⁊ my tonge shal speake out of my chawes. My hert shall orde my wordes a right, ⁊ my lyppes shal talke of pure wysdome. The sprete of God hath made me, ^b ⁊ the breth of the Almightye hath geuē me my lyfe. Yf thou cāst, then geue me answere: prepare thy self to stōde before me face to face. Beholde, before God am I euen as thou, for I am fashioned and made euē of the same moule. Therefore, thou nedest not be afrayed of me, nether nedest thou to feare, that my auctorite shal be to heuy for the. Now hast thou spoken in myne eares, ⁊ I haue herde ſy voyce of thy wordes: I am clene without eny fawte, ^c I am innocent, ⁊ there is no wickednesse in me. But lo, he hath pyked a quarell agaynst me, ⁊ taketh me for his enemy: he hath put my fote in the stockes, ⁊ loketh narrowly vnto all my pathes. Beholde, vnto these vureasonable wordes of thyne wil I make answere.

Shulde God be reprovod of man? ^b Why doest thou then stryue agaynst him, because he geueth the no accomptes of all his doinges? For whē God doth once commaunde a thinge, there shulde no man be curious, to search whether it be right. "In dreames and visions of the night season (when slombryng cometh vpon me,⁶ that they fall a slepe in their beddes) he rowneth them in the eares, he infourmeth them, and sheweth the plainly, that it is he, which withdraweth man from euell, deliuereth him from pryde, kepeth his soule from destruction, and his life from the swerde. he chasteneth him with sickness, and bringeth him to his bed: he laieth sore punishment vpon his bones, so that his life maye awaye with no bred, and his soule abhorreth to eate eny dayntie meate: In so moch, that his body is cleue consumed awaye, and his bones appeare no more. His soule draweth on to destruction, and his life to death. Now yf there be an angel (one amonge a thousande) sent for to speake vnto ma, and to shewe him the right waye: the LORD is mercifull vnto him, and sayeth: He shalbe deliuered, yf he fall not downe to destruction, for I am sufficiently recceiued. Than his flesh (which hath bene in misery and trouble) shalbe, as it was in his youth. For yf he submitte himself vnto God, he is gracious, and sheweth him his countenance ioyfully, and rewardeth man for his righteousnes. Such a respecte hath he vnto me. Therefore let a man cofesse, (and saye:) I offended, but he hath chastened and reformed me: I dyd vnrightously, neuerthelesse he hath not recouped me thereafter. Yee he hath deliuered my soule from destruction, and my life, that it seyth yf light. Lo, thus worketh God all waie with ma, that he kepeth his soule from perishing, and latteth him enioye the light of yf lyuinge. Marke well (O Iob) and heare me: holde the still, vntill I haue spoken. But yf thou hast eny thinge to saye, then answer me and speake, for thy answer pleaseth me. Yf thou hast nothinge, then heare me, and holde thy tonge, so shal I teach the wysdome.

The xxxij. Chapter.

ELIU proceeded forth in his comunicacion, and sayde: Heare my wordes (O ye wyse men) herken vnto me, ye yf haue vnderstandinge. For like as the mouth tasteth the meates, so the eare proueth and discerneth the wordes. "As for the iudgment, let vs seke it out amonge oure selues, yf we maye knowe what is right. And why? Iob hath sayde: I am rightuous, but God doth me wronge. I must nedes be a liar, though my cause be right: and violently am I plagued, where as I made no fault. where is there such one as Iob, yf drinketh vpon scornefulnes like water? which goeth in yf company of wicked doers, and walketh with vngodly me? For he saith: Though a man be good, yet is he naught before God. Therefore herke vnto me, ye yf haue vnderstandinge.

Farre be it from God, that he shulde meddle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Almighty, yf he shulde meddle with vnrighteous dealinge: but he rewardeth the workes of man, and causeth euery man to fynde accordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God condemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgment of the Almighty is not vnrightuous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his sprete and breth vnto him? All flesh shal come together vnto naught, and all me shal turne agayne vnto earth. Yf thou now haue vnderstandinge, heare what I saye and herken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? Yf thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punished? For he is euen the same, yf knoweth the rebellious kynge, and sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye. He hath no respecte vnto the personnes of yf lordly, and regardeth not the rich more the poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twyncklinge off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people and the tyrauntes rage, then shal they perish, and be taken awaye without hondes. And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goings. There is no darcknes ner thicke shadowe, yf can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no man shalbe suffred to go in to iudgment with God.

Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyssh and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell and darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. They that were in yf steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly me. Therefore turned they back traytorously and vnfaithfully fro hi, and wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused

But yf he hyde away his countenance, who wil turne it aboute agayne, whether it be to the people or to eny man? For the wickednesse ⁊ synne of ſ̄ people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer thē. For so moch then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. Yf I haue gone amyssse, enfourme me: yf I haue done wronge, I wil leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answer? Art thou afrayed of eny thinge, seyng thou begānest first to speake, ⁊ not I? For els the men of vnderstōdinge ⁊ wisdome that haue herde me, might saye: What cāst thou speake? As for Iob he hath nether spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O father, let Iob be well tryed, because he hath turned himself to ſ̄ wicked: yee aboute his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs, in ſ̄ he stryuet agaynst God with his wordes.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

ELIU spake morouer, and sayde: Thinkest thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, thē I ſ̄ am a synner? Therefore will I geue answer vnto the ⁊ thy frendes: loke vnto the heauē, ⁊ beholde it: cōsidre ſ̄ cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. Yf thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? Yf thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? Yf thou be righteous, what gueest thou him? Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of such an vngodly personne as thou, ⁊ of ſ̄ some of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greate crie ⁊ cōplaynte made by thē that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrantes. For such one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ād ſ̄ shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night? Which geueth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the bestes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauē.

Yf eny soch complayne, no mā geueth answer, and ſ̄ because of the wickednesse off proude tyrantes. But yf a man call vpon

God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Almighty accepte his crie? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy self before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curious and depe inquisitions. Therefore hath Iob opened his mouth but in vayne, ād folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

ELIU proceeded forth in his talkinge, ⁊ sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shall shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto ſ̄ yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, ⁊ no lye: and the knowlege wherewithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not away ſ̄ mightie, for he himself is mightie in power and wisdome.

As for the vngodly, he preserueth thē not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes away from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and cōfirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therin. But yf they be layed in preson and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes ād dedes and the synnes wherwith they haue vsed cruell violence.

He with punyshinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. Yf they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, ⁊ their yeares in pleasure ād ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, ⁊ perish or euer they be awarre. As for such as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypocrytes, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his presoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe with ſ̄ condēned. The poore deluyereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth such as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the bottomlesse pytte that is beneth: ⁊ yf thou wilt holde the quiete, he shal fyll thy table with plenteousnesse.

iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen such a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffre. For then shalt not thy cause be stilled with crueltie, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the ⁊ all soch mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But beware that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hytherto thou hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there such a gyde and lawegeuer as he? Who wil reprove him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

D O conside how greate and excellent his workes be, whom all men loave and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowledge, nether are we able to come to ⁊ experieçe of his yeares. He turneth ⁊ water to smal droppes, he dryueth his cloudes together for to rayne, "so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can sprede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpon them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth thē abudaunce of meate. In ⁊ turnynge of a hande he hydeth the light, ⁊ at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysynge vp therof sheweth he to his freudes and to the catell.

The xxxij. Chapter.

AT this my hert is astonied, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse ⁊ goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth soch a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sounde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not cōprehende. ^aWhen he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediatly the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The bestes crepe in to their dennes, ⁊ take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the breth of God, the frost commeth, ⁊ the waters are shed abrode. The cloudes do their labour in geuyng moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, accordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth thē thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o Iob) stonde still, and conside the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of coucel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his coucell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowledge of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whē the lōde is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to loke vpon, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hī, for we are vnmete because of dareknes. Shal it be tolde him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery mā seith not the light, ⁊ he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth when he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the north, but the prayse and honour off Gods feare commeth frō God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the allmightie: for in power, equite and rightuousnesse he is hyer then can be expressed. Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stōde in feare of hī?

The xxxij. Chapter.

THEN spake the LORDE vnto Iob out of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeth his mynde with foolysh wordes? Gyrde vp thy loynes like a mā, for I will question the, se thou geue me a dyrecte answer. Where wast thou, when I layed ⁊ foundations of the earth? Tell planely yff thou hast vnderstandinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spred ⁊ lyne vpon it? The xxxiiij. Chapter.

KNOWEST thou the tyme when the wilde ^l gotes brige forth their yōge amōge the stony rockes? Or layest thou wayte when the hūdes vse to fawne? Rekenest thou the monethes after they ingendre, ^l \hat{y} thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast their yonge ones, τ when they are deluyered off their trauailey τ payne? How their yōge ones growe vp τ waxe greate thorow good fedinge? who letteth the wilde asse go fre, or who lowseth the bōdes of the Moole? Vnto whō I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, τ the vntilled loude to be their dwellinge place. That they maye geue no force for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryer: but to seke their pasture aboute the moūtaynes, τ to folowe vpon the grene grasse. Wyll the vnicorne be so tame as to do ^m \hat{y} seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribbe? Cāst thou bynde ^m \hat{y} yocke aboute him in thy forowes, to make him plowe after the in ⁿ \hat{y} valleis? Mayest thou trust hī (because he is strōge) or cōmitte thy labour vnto hī? God hath taken wisdome from him, & hath not geuen him vnderstandinge. When his tyme is, he flyeth vp an hye, and caretch nether for horse ner man.

C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or lerned him to bowe downe his neck with feare: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a greshopper, where as the stoute neyenge that he maketh, is fearfull? he breaketh \hat{y} grounde with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyuers rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilde glistre: yet ruscheth he in fearsly, and beateth vpon the grounde. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, tush (sayeth he) for he smell-eth the batell afarre of \hat{y} noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshaunke flyeth towards the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hye at thy commaundement? He abydeeth in the stony rockes, ad vpon the hye toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. ^a His yonge ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deed body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Morouer, God spake vnto Iob and sayde: Can he that stryueith with the Allmightie, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? Iob answered the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answeere the, therefore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye nomore.

all \hat{y} proude, loke well, that thou makest all soch as be stubburne, to obeye: treade all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast thē downe in to the myre, and couer their faces with darcknesse: Then will I confesse also, that thyne owne right honde hath sauēd the.

Beholde, the cruell beaste (whom I made with the) which eateth haye as an ox: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the nauell of his body. He spredeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his vaynes are stiff. His shyattes are like pipes off brasse, his rygge bones are like stanes of yrō. First when God made him, he ordered the wyldernesse for him, \hat{y} the mountaynes shulde geue him grasse, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amōge the redes in the Mosses, the fennes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wylowes of the broke couer him rōunde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Iordane without eny trauayle. Who darre laye honde vpon him openly, and vndertake to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, ad laye a snare for him?

C Darrest thou drawe out ^cLeuiathan with an angle, or bynde his tonge with a snare? Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chafes thorow with an aule? Wyl he make many fayre wordes with the (thynkest thou) or flatre the? Wyl he make a couenauent with the? Or, art thou able for to compell him to do the contynual seruyce? Wilt thou take thy pastyme with him as with a byrde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye bew him in peces, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? Canst thou fyll the nett with his skynne, or \hat{y} fysh pānyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to considere what harme might happē the there thorow and not to touch him. agayne? All things vnder heauen are myne. I feare him not, whether he threaten or speake fayre. Who lifeth him vp and stripeth him out of his clothes, or who taketh him by the bytt of his brydle? Who openeth the dore of his face? for he hath horrible tethe rounde aboute. His body is couered with scales as it were with shyldes, lockte in, kepte, and well copacte together. One is so ioynd to another, that no ayre can come in: Yee one hangeth so vpon another, and sticke so together, that they can not be smndered. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the morninge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrels there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remaineth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioynd so strayte one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, and as fast as the stythe that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the waves heuy. Yff he drawe out the swerde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yro, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not away for him that bendeth the bowe, and as for slynge stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like fy sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boyle like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oyntment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkyng place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. Yff a man will cōsidre all hye thinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

counsell so secrete, but it shall be knowne? Therefore haue I spoken vnwysely, seynge these thinges are so hye, and passe myne vnderstandinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answere me vnto the thinge that I will axe the. I haue geuen diligent care vnto the, and now I se fy with myne eyes. Wherefore I geue myne owne self fy blame, and take repentance in the dust and ashes.

Now whē the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Iob, he sayde vnto Eliphas fy Themanite: I am displeasid with the and thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thinge fy is right before me, like as my seruauit Iob hath done. Therefore take vij. oxen and seuen rammes, and go to my seruauit Iob,^d offre vp also for youre selues a brentofferynge, and let my seruauit Iob praye for you. Him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spokē fy thinge which is right, like as my seruauit Iob hath done.

So Eliphas the Themanite, Baldad fy Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite wcte their waye, and did acordynge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the personne off Iob, and the LORDE turned him vnto Iob, whē he prayed for his frendes: "Yee the LORDE gaue Iob twyse as moch as he had afore.

And thē came there vnto him all his brethren, all his sisters with all them that had bene off his acquātance afore, and ate bred with him in his house, wondringe at him, and comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought vpon him. "Euery mā gaue him a shepe and a Iewell of golde.

And the LORDE made Iob richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. sounes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, po-uerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In all the londe were none founde so fayre, as the daughters of Iob, and their father gaue them enheritaunce amonge their brethren. After this lyued Iob xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, and his childers children vnto the fourth generacion. And so he dyed, beinge olde and of a perfecte age.

The Psalter.

The first psalme.

BLESSED is \hat{y} man, \hat{y} goeth not in the counsell of \hat{y} vngodly: \hat{y} abydeth not in the waye off synners, τ sytteth not in \hat{y} seate of the scornfull. But delyteth in the lawe of \hat{y} LORDE, τ exerceyseth himself in his lawe both daye and night. Soch a mā is like a tre plāted by \hat{y} water syde, \hat{y} brīgeth forth his frute in due season.

B His leeuēs shal not fall off; \hat{a} d loke what soeuer he doth, it shal prospere. As for the vngodly, it is not so with them: but they are like the dust,^d which \hat{y} wynde scattereth awaye from of the grounde. Therefore the vngodly shal not be able to stonde in the iudgmēt, \hat{y} nether the synners in the congregacion off the righteous. For the LORDE aloweth \hat{y} waye of the righteous, but the waye of the vngodly shal perishe.

The ij. A psalme of Dauid.

BWHY do the Heithē grudge? why do the people ymagyn vayne thinges? The kynges of the earth stōde vp, and the rulers are come together, agaynst the LORDE \hat{a} d agaynst his anoynted. Let vs breake their bondes a sunder, and cast a waye their yocke from vs. Neuerthelesse, he that dwelleth in heauen, shall^e laugh thē to scorne: yee euen the LORDE himself shall haue them in derision. Then shal he speake vnto them in his wrath, and vexe them in his sore displeasure. Yet haue I set my kyng vpon my holy hill of Sion. As for me I will preach the lawe, wherof the LORDE hath sayde vnto me: Thou art my sonne,^f this daye haue I begotten the. Desyre off me, and I shall geue the the Heithen for thine enheritaunce, Yee the vttest-most partes of the worlde^g for thy possession. B Thou shalt rule them with a rodde of yron,^h and breake thē in peces like an erthen vessell.

Be wyse now therefore (o ye kynges) be warned, ye that are iudges of the earth. Serue the LORDE with feare, and reioyse before him with reuerence. Kysse the sonne, lest the LORDE be angrie, and so ye perish from the right waye. For his wrath shalbe kindled shortly: blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

WHRY are they so many (o LORDE) \hat{y} trouble me? a greate multitude are they, that ryse agaynst me. Yee many one there be that saye off my soule: there is no helpe for him in God. Sela. But thou (o LORDE) art my defender, my worshipec, \hat{a} d the lifter vp of my heade. I call vpon the LORDE with my voyce, and he heareth me out of his holy hill. Sela. I layed me downe and slepte, but I rose vp agayne, for the LORDE susteyned me. I am not afrayed for thousandes of the people, that cōpasse me rounde aboute. Vp LORDE, and helpe me, o my God: for thou smyttest all myne enemies vpon the cheke bones, and breakest the teth of the vngodly. Helpe belongeth vnto the LORDE, therefore let thy blessynge be vpon thy people.

The iiij. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE me whē I cal, o God of my righteousness, thou that comfortest me in my trouble: haue mercy vpon me, and herken vnto my prayer. O ye sonnes off men: how longe will ye blaspheme myne honoure? why haue ye soch pleasure in vayne, τ seke after lyes? Sela. Knowe this, that the LORDE dealeth maruelously with his saynte: and when I call vpon the LORDE, he heareth me. ^m Be angrie, but synne not: comō with youre owne hertes vpō youre beddes, τ remēbre youre selues. lice of righteousnes, & put youre trust in \hat{y} LORDE. There be many \hat{y} saye: who wil do vs eny good? where as thou (o LORDE) hast shewed vs the light of thy countenaunce. Thou reioycest myne herte, though their encrease be greate both in corne & wyne. Therefore wil I laye me downe in peace, & take my rest: for thou LORDE only settest me in a sure dwellinge.

The v. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE my wordes (o LORDE) consider my callinge. O marke the voyce of my petition, my kynge & my God: for vnto the wil I make my prayer. Hearre my voyce by tymes (o LORDE) for early in the morninge wil I gett me vnto the, yee & \hat{y} with diligēce. For thou art not the God \hat{y} hath pleasure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwel with the. Soch as be cruell maye not stoude in thy sight, thou art an enemie vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE abhorreth the bloude thurstie and disceatfull. But as for me, ¹I wil come in to thy house, enen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: and in thy feare wyll I worshippe towarde thy holy tēple. Ledde me (o LORDE) in thy righteousnesse, because of myne enemies, and make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faithfulness in their mouthes: they dissemble in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceaue. Punysh them (o God) that they maye perish in their owne ymaginacions: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodlinesse, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse: yee let them euer be geuyng of thanks, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioyfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the righteous: and with thy fauorable kyndnes thou defendest him, as with a shyld.

The vi. A psalme of Dauid.

OH LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: ¹Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. Hauemercy vpon me (o LORDE) for I am weake: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe? Turne the (o LORDE) & delyuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remēbreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanks in the hell? I am weery of gronyng: Euery night washe I my bedde, & water my couche with my teares. My countenaunce is changed for very inward grefe, I cōsume awaye, I haue so many enemies. ²Awaye fro me all ye wicked doers, for the LORDE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge. The LORDE hath herde myne humble petitiō, the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemies shalbe cōfounded & sore vexed: yee they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

The vij. A psalme of Dauid.

OLORDE my God, in \hat{y} do I trust: ¹saue me fro all thē \hat{y} persecute me, & delyuer me. Lest he hantch vp my soule like a lyon, & teare it in peces, whyle there is none to helpe. O LORDE my God, yff I haue done eny soch thinge: yf there be eny vnrighteousnes in my hādes: Yff I haue rewarded euell vnto thē \hat{y} dealt friendly with me or hurte thē \hat{y} without eny cause are myne enemies: Then let myne enemie persecute my soule, & take me: yee let hī treade my life downe in the earth, & laye myne honoure in the dust. Sela. Stōde vp (o LORDE) in thy wrath, lift vp thyself ouer the furious indignaciō of myne enemies: aryse vp (for me) in the vengeance that thou hast promysed. ²That the congregacion of the people maye come aboute the, for their sakes therefore lift vp thyself agayne. The LORDE is iudge ouer the people: Auenge me then (o LORDE) accordinge to my righteousnes & innocency. Oh let the wickednes of the vngodly come to an ende: but manteyne the iust, thou righteous God, \hat{y} triest the very hertes & the reynes. My helpe cōmeth of God, ³which preserueth them \hat{y} are true of herte. God is a righteous iudge, & God is euer threateninge. Yf men wil not turne, he hath whet his swerde: he hath bent his bowe & made it ready. He hath prepayred him the weapons of death, & ordered his arrows to destroye. ⁴Beholde, he vnauayleth with myschefe, he hath cōceaued vnhappyngnesse, and

"For his vnhappyenes shall come vpon his owne heade, & his wickednes shall fall vpon his owne pate. As for me, I will geue thanks vnto the LORDE for his rightuousnes sake, and wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hiest.

The liij. A psalme of Dauid.

OLORDE oure gouernoure: how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde? how excellent is thy glory aboue the heauens? "Out of the mouth of the very babes & sucklings thou hast ordened prayse, because of thine enemies, y^e thou mightest destroye the euenie and the auenger. For I conside thy heauens, euen the worke off thy fyngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. "Oh what is man, y^e thou art so myndfull of him? ether the sonne of mā that thou visitest him? "After thou haddest for a season made him lower thē the angels, thou crownedst him with honoure & glory. "Thou hast set him aboue the workes off thy bondes: thou hast put all thinges in subieccion vnder his fete. All shepe and oxen, yee and the beastes of the felde. The foules of the ayre: the fysh of the see, and what so walketh thorow the wayes of the see. O LORDE oure gouernoure, how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde?

The ir. A psalme of Dauid.

IWIL geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole herte. "I wil speake of all thy maruelous workes. I wil be glad & reioyse in the, yee my songs wil I make of thy name, o thou most hiest. Because thou hast dryuē myne enemies abacke, they were discōfited, & perished at thy presence. For thou hast manteyned my right and my cause: thou systest in the Trone that art the true iudge. Thou rebukest the Heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou puttest out their name for euer and euer. The enemies swerdes are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthrowen their cities, their memoriall is perished with thē. But y^e LORDE endureth for euer, he hath prepared his seate vnto iudgmēt. He gouerneth y^e worlde with rightuousnes & ministrereth true iudgmēt vnto the people. The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defence in the tyme of trouble. Therefore they y^e knowe thy name, put their trust in y^e: for thou (LORDE) neuer faylest thē, that seke the. "O prayse the LORDE, which dwelleth in Sion, shewe y^e people of his doinges. And why? he maketh inquisition for their bloude, and remembreth them: "he forgetteth not the complaynte of the poore. Haue mercy vpō me (o LORDE) conside the trouble that I am in amōge myne enemies, thou that listest me vp from y^e gates of death. That I maye shewe all thy prayes within the portes off the doughter Sion, and reioyse in thy sauynge health. As for the Heithen, they are sunckē downe in the pytte that they made: in the same nette, which they spred out priuely, is their owne fote takē. Thus y^e LORDE is knowne to execute true iudgment, whē the vngodly is trapped in the workes of his owne handes. Sela. The wicked must be turned vnto hell, and all the Heithen y^e forget God. But the poore shal not allwaye be out of remembrance, the paciēt abydinge of such as be in trouble shal not perish for euer. Vp LORDE, let not man haue the vpper hāde, let the Heithē be cōdemned before the. O LORDE, set a scolemaster ouer thē, that the Heithē maye knowe them selues to be but mē. Sela.

WHYY art thou gone so farre of, o LORDE? wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Whye y^e vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginacions which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desyre, the cuetous blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he defyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: "Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauayle & sorow. He sytteth lurkyng in the gardens, that he maye pryuely murthur the innocent, his eyes are set vpon the poore. He lyeth waytinge secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rayush the poore, yee to raiush the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyth he, then oppresseth he & casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so ŷ he will neuer se it. Aryse o LORDE God, lift vp thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherefore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it? This thou seist, for thou considrest the mysery and sorowe: The poore genueth himself ouer in to thy hande, and committeth him vnto the, for thou art the helper of the frendlesse. Breake thou ŷ arme off the vngodly and malycious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for euer, ye Heithen shal perish out off his londe. LORDE, thou hearest the desyrous longinge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The i. A psalme of Dauid.

In the LORDE put I my trust: how will ye then saye to my soule: that she shulde fle as a byrde vpon youre hill? For lo, the vngodly haue bēt their bowe, and made redy their arrowes in the quyuer: "that they maye pryuely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundation haue they cast downe, what cā the rightuous thē do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: ^h He cōsidereth it with his eyes, ⁱ his eye lyddes beholde the children of men. The LORDE seith both the rightuous and vngodly, but who so deliteth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempest: this rewarde shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is rightuous, and he loueth rightuousnes, his countenance beholdeth the thige ŷ is iust.

The ii. A psalme of Dauid.

HELPE LORDE, for there is not one saynte more: very fewe faithfull are there amonge the children off men. Euery man telleth lyes to his neyghboure, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rote out all disceatfull lippes, and the tonge that speaketh proude thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde preuaile: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs? Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, & because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp (sayeth the LORDE) I wil helpe thē, and set thē at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: ^e euē as ŷ syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. Kepe thē therefore (o LORDE) and preserue vs frō this generacion for euer. And why? when vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the children of men, all are full of ŷ vngodly.

The iij. A psalme of Dauid.

HOW longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE? for euer? how longe wilt thou hyde thy face fro me? Oh how lōge shall I seke counsell in my soule? how longe shall I be so vexed in my herte? how longe shal myne enemie triumphe ouer me? Considre, and heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemie saye: I haue preyed agaynst hī, for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my hert is ioyfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so louyngly with me. (Yee I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most byest.)

vnder their lippes.* Their mouth is full of cursing and bytternes, their fete are swift to shed bloude.* Destruction & wretchednes are in their wayes, ad the waye of peace haue they not knowne: there is no feare off God before their eyes.* How can they haue vnderstandinge, y^e worke myschefe, eatinge vp my people, as it were bred, & call not vpō y^e LORDE?

Therefore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondesth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the coucell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. "Oh y^e the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORDE wolde deluyuer his people out of captiuyte. Thē shulde Iacob reioyce, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The xliij. A psalme of Dauid.

LORDE, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? ^a who shall rest vpō thy holy hill? Euen he y^e ledeth an vncorrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ad that speaketh the treuth from his herte. He y^e vseth no disceat in his tonge: he that doth no euell to his neyghboure, & slaundreth not his neyghbours. He y^e setteth not by the vngodly but maketh moch of thē that feare the LORDE: he y^e sweareth vnto his neyghboure & dispoynnteth him not. ^a He that geueth not his money vpon vsury, and taketh no rewarde agaynst the innocēt. Who so doth these thinges, shal neuer be remoued.

The xli. A psalme of Dauid.

PRESERUE me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y^e LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they y^e runne after another, shall haue greate trouble. Their drynkofferynges of bloude will not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my mouth. ^d The LORDE himself is my good and my porcion, thou manteynest my enheritaūce. The lott is fallen vnto me in a fayre grounde, yee I haue a goodly heretage. I will thanke the LORDE for geuyng me warnyng: my reynes also haue chastened me in the night season. Afore honde sawe I God allwayes before me, ^c for he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be moued.

Therefore dyd my hert reioyce, & my tunge was glad, my flesh also shall rest in hope. For why? thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, ^e nether shalt thou suffre thy saynte to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye with thy countenance. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for euermore.

The xli. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE y^e right (O LORDE) ^a cōsidre my cōplaynte: herken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayned mouth. Let my sentence come forth frō thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equall. ^c Thou hast proued & visited myne herte in the night season: thou hast tried me in the fyre, & hast founde no wickednes in me: for I vtterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me frō the workes of men, in y^e waye off the murthurer. Oh ordre thou my goynges in thy pathes, that my fote steppes slippe not. For vnto the I erie, heare me o God: enclyne thine eares to me, and herke vnto my wordes. Shewe thy maruelous louinge kindnesse. thou that sauest them which put their trust in the, from soch as resist thy right honde. Kepe me ^b as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges.^d From the vngodly that trouble me, fro myne enemies which compass my soule rounde aboute.

Which manteyne their owne welthyngnesse with oppression, & their mouth speaketh proude thinges. They lye waytinge in oure waye on euery syde, turnyng their eyes downe to the grounde. Like as a lyon that is gredy of his pray, & as it were a lyons whelp lurrekyng in his denne. Vp LORDE, dispoynnt him & cast him downe: deluyuer my soule with thy swerde from the vngodly. Frō the men of thy honde (o LORDE) from the men off the worlde, which haue their porcion in this life: whose belies thou fyllest with thy treasure.

The rliij. A psalme of Dauid when he was deliuered from the honde off Saul.

I WILL loue the (o LORDE) my strēgth. The LORDE is my sauoure, my refuge, my Sauoure: my god, my helper i whō I trust: my buckler, y^e horn of my health, & my protectiō. I wil praise y^e LORDE & call vpon him, so shal I be safe fro myne enemies. The sorowes of death cōpassed me,^a & the brokes of vngodlynes made me afraied. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpo me. Yet in my trouble I called vpo the LORDE, & cōplayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy tēple, & my cōplaynte came before hī, yee eue in to his eares. The earth trembled & quaked, the very fōndaciōs of the hilles shoke & were remoued, because he was wrothe. There wēt a smoke out of his nostrils, & a cōsumynge fyre out of his mouth, so y^e coales were kyndled at it. He bowed the heauē & came downe, & it was darcke vnder his fete. He rode vpo the Cherubins & dyd fle: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made dareknesse his paylyon rounde aboute hī, with darcke water & thicke cloudes to couer him. At the brightnes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones & coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out of y^e heanē, & the heyth gaue his thondre with hale stones & coales of fyre. He sent out his arowes & scatred thē, he cast sore lighteninges, & destroyed thē. The springes of waters were sene, & the foundaciōs of the rōude worlde were discouered at thy chiding (o LORDE) at the blastinge & breth of thy displeasure. He sent downe fro the heyth to fetch me, & toke me out of greate waters. He deliuered me fro my stronge enemies, and fro my foes which were to mightie for me. They preuented me in the tyme of my trouble, but y^e LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also in to lyberte: & deliuered me, because he had a faouere vnto me. The LORDE shall rewarde me after my rightuous dealyng, & acordinge to the clēnesse of my hōdes shal he recōpense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, & haue not behaued myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, & cast not out his commaundemētes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hī, & wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therefore shal y^e LORDE rewarde me after my rightuous dealinge, & acordinge vnto y^e clēnesse of my hōdes in his eye sight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, & with y^e innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the elene thou shalt be elene & with the frowarde thou shalt be frowarde. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, & brige downe the hye lokes of the proude. Thou lightest my cādle, o LORDE my God: thou makest my dareknesse to be light. For in the I can discōit an hoost of mē: yee in my God I cā leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the fyre: he is a shyld of defence, for all them that trust in him. For who is God, but the LORDE? Or, who hath eny strength, but oure God? It is God that hath gyrded me with strēgth and made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my fete like hartes fete, and set me vp an hye. He teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a bowe off stele. Thou hast geuē me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correctiō maketh me greate. Thou hast made rowme ynough vnder me for to go, that my fote steppes shulde not slyde. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stonde, but fall vnder my fete. Thou hast gyrded me with strength vnto y^e batell, thou hast throwē them all downe vnder me, that rose vp agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backes vpon me, thou hast destroyed thē y^e hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe thē: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde thē not. I will beate them as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as y^e claye in the stretes. The xxvii. A psalme of Dauid.

THE very heauēs declare the glory off God,^c ād the very firmamēt sheweth his hādye worke. One daye telleth another, and one night certifieth another. There is nether speech ner lāguage, but their voyces are herde amōge thē. Their soide is gone out in to all londes,^d and their wordes in to the endes of the worlde.

In thē hath he sett a tabernacle for ŷ Sōne, which cōmeth forth as a brydegrome out of his chambre, and reioyseth as a giante to rīn his course. It goeth forth frō the one ende of the heauen, and runneth aboute vnto the same ende agayne, and there maye no mā hyde himself frō the heate therof. The lawe of the LORDE is a perfecte lawe, it quickeneth the soule. The testimony of ŷ LORDE is true, and geueth wisdome euen vnto babes. The statutes of the LORDE are right, and reioyse the herte: ŷ cōmaudemēt of ŷ LORDE is pure, and geueth light vnto the eyes.

The feare of the LORDE is cleane, and endureth for euer: the iudgmentes of the LORDE are true and righteous altogether. More pleasant are they then golde,^e yee then moch fyne golde: sweter then hony and the hony combe. These thy seruauant kepeth,^f and for kepinge of them there is greate rewarde. Who can tell, how oft he offendeth? Oh elēse thou me fro my secrete fautes. Kepe thy seruante also from presumptuous synnes, lest they get the dominion ouer me: so shal I

The xxiij. A psalme of Daud.

MY God, my God: why hast thou forsaken me?^a ⁊ wordes of my cōplaynte are farre fro my health. O my God, I crie in the daye tyme, but thou hearest not: and in the night season also I take no rest. Yet dwellest thou in the Sanctuary, o thou worshippe of Israel. Oure fathers hoped in the, they trusted in the, ⁊ thou dydest delyuer them. They called vpon the, and were helped: they put their trust in the, and were not cōfounded. But as for me, I am a worme and no man: a very scorne of mē and the outcast of the people. All they ŷe me, laugh me to scorne:^b they shute out their lippes, and shake their heades. He trusted in God,^c let him delyuer him: let him helpe hī, yf he wil haue him.

But thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wōbe:^d thou wast my hope, when I hauged yet vpon my mothers brestes. I haue bene left vnto the euer sence I was borne, thou art my God, eue fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me thē, for trouble is harde at honde, and here is none to helpe me. Greate bulles are come aboute me, fatt oxen close me in on euery syde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaringe lyon.

‘I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my hert in the myddest off my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My strength is dried vp like a potsherde, my tunge cleueth to my goomes, and thou hast brought me in to the dust of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the cōcell of ŷ wicked hath layed sege agaynst me. They pearsed my hondes and my fete, I might haue tolde all my bones: as for them, they stode staringe and lokiuge vpon me. They haue parted my garmentes amonge them,^e ⁊ cast lottes vpon my vesture.

C But be not thou farre fro me, o LORDE: thou art my succoure, haist the to helpe me. Delyuer my soule from the swerde, my dear-

Saue me from the lyons mouth, and heare me frō amonge the hornes off the vnicornes.^f So will I declare thy name vnto my brethren,^g in the myddest off the congregacion will I prayse the. O prayse the LORDE ye that feare him: Magnifie him all ye sede of Iacob, ⁊ let all ŷ sede of Israel feare hī. ‘For he hath not despysed ner abhorred the myserable estate of the poore: he hath not hyd his face for me, but whē I called vnto him, he herde me. I wil prayse the in the greate congregacion, and performe my voves in the sight off all thē that feare the. The poore shal eate ⁊ be satisfied: ^h they ŷ seke after ŷ LORDE shal prayse him: youre herte shal lyue for euer.

All the endes of the worlde shal remembre them selues, ⁊ be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generacions of the Heithen shal worshippe before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he shal be the gouernoure of ŷ Heithen. All soch as be fat vpō earth, shal eate also and worshippe: All they that lye in the dust, and lyue so hardly, shall fall downe before him. The sede shall serue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They shal come, ⁊ declare his rightuousnes: vnto a people that shal be borne,ⁱ whō the LORDE hath made.

THE LORDE is my shepherde,^m I can wante nothings. He fedeth me in a grene pasture, ⁊ ledeth me to a fresh water. He quickeneth my soule, ⁊ bringeth me forth in the waye of rightuousnes for his names sake. ‘Though I shulde walke now in the valley of the shadowe of death, yet I feare no euell, for thou art with me: thy staffe ⁊ thy shephoke cōforte me. Thou preparent a table before me agaynst mine enemies: thou anoyntest my heade with oyle, ⁊ fyllest my cuppe full. B As for me, whē I was in prosperite, I sayde: Tush, I shal neuer fall more. (And why? thou LORDE of thy goodnesse haddest made my hill so strouge.) But as soone as thou turnedest thy face for me, I was brought in feare. The cried I vnto \hat{y} (O LORDE) yee vnto \hat{y} LORDE made I my prayer. What profit is there in my bloude, ^b yf I go downe to corrupcion? Maye the dust geue thanks vnto \hat{y} ? Or shal it declare thy faithfulnessse? Heare (O LORDE) and haue mercy vpon me: LORDE be thou my helper. And so thou hast turned my heuynesse in to ioye: thou hast put of my sack cloth, τ gyrded me with gladnesse. That my honour might syng prayes vnto the with out ceassynge: O LORDE my God, I wil geue thanks vnto the for euer.

The xxx. A psalme of Dauid.

A IN the, O LORDE, is my trust: let me neuer be put to cofucion, ^c but deluyer me in thy rightuousnesse. Bowe downe thine eare to me, make haist to deluyer me: be thou my stronge rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde τ my castell: O be thou my gyde, τ lede me for thy names sake. Drawe me out of the nett \hat{y} they haue layed priuely for me, ^d for thou art my strēth.

In to thy hondes I commende my sprete: thou hast deluyered me O LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowne my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not deluyered me ouer in to the hōdes of the enemy, but hast set my fete in a large rowne. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORDE, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heuynesse, yee my soule and my body. My life is waxen olde with heuynesse, and my yeares with mournynge. My strēth fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprofte amonge all myne enemies, my neighbours τ they of myne owne acquauntaunce are afrayed of me: they \hat{y} se me in the strete, cōveye them selues for me. I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.

For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: euery man abhorreth me: they haue gathered a council together agaynst me, and are purposed to take a waye my life.

But my hope is in \hat{y} O LORDE, τ I saye: thou art my God. My tyme is in thy honde: deluyer me from the honde of myne enemies, τ from them \hat{y} persecute me. Shewe thy seruaunt the light of thy countenance, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (o LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confucion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyenge lippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdanedly τ despitefully speake agaynst the rightuous. O how greate and manfolde is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare \hat{y} ? O what thinges bringest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

Thou hydest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tongues. Thanks be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greete kyndnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodane feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheles, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORDE (all ye his sayntes) for the LORDE preserueth the faithfull, and plenteously rewardeth he the proude doer. ^e Be strōge therfore τ take a good herte vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORDE.

Therefore I confessed my synne vnto the, and hyd not myne vnrighuousnesse. ^a I saide: I will knowlege myne offence, and accuse my self vnto the LORDE, and so thou forgauest me the wickednesse of my synne.

The xxxiiij. A psalme of Dauid.

^a REIOYSE in \ddot{y} LORDE (o ye righteous) ^b for it becommeth well the iust to be thankfull. Prayse the LORDE with harpe: ^c synge psalmes vnto him with the lute and instrument of ten strynges. Singe him a new songe, yee synge lustely vnto him τ with a good corage. For the worde of \ddot{y} LORDE is true, and all his workes are faithfull. He loueth mercy τ iudgment, \ddot{y} earth is full of the goodnesse of the LORDE. ^d By the worde of the LORDE were the heauens made, τ all the hoostes of them by \ddot{y} breth of his mouth. He gathereth \ddot{y} waters together as it were in a bottell, ^e τ laieth vp the depe in secrete. Let all the earth feare the LORDE, and let all them that dwell in the worlde, stōde in awe of him. For loke what he sayeth, it is done: ^f and loke what he cōmāndeth, it stondeth fast. ^g The LORDE bryngeth the counsell of the Heithen to naught, and turneth the deuyces of the people.

to generacion. ⁱ Blessed are the people that holde the LORDE for their God, τ blessed are the folke whom he hath chosen to be his heretage. ^j The LORDE loketh downe from heauen, τ beholdeth all the childeur of men: from his stronge seate he considreth all them \ddot{y} dwell in the worlde. ^k He only hath fashioned all the hertes of them, τ knoweth all their workes. A kyuge is not helped by his owne greate hoost, nether is a giante saued thorow the might of his owne strēgth.

^l A horse is but a vayne thyng to saue a man, it is not the power of his strēgth that can deluyer him. ^m Beholde, the eye of the LORDE loketh vnto them that feare him, τ put their trust in his mercy. That he maye deluyer their soules from death, and to fede them in the deare tyme. Let oure soule patiently abyde the LORDE, for he is oure helpe and shilde. before his face, so longe till his abominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrightuousnesse and disceate,^a he wil not be lerned to do good.

He ymagineth myschefe vpon his bedde, he will come in no good waye, ner refuse the thinge that is euell. ^bThy mercy (O LORDE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faithfulness vnto the cloudes. Thy rightuousnesse stondesth like the stronge mountaynes, τ thy iudgment like the greate depe. Thou LORDE, preseruest both mē τ beestes. ^cHow precious is thy mercy (O God) that the children of men maye put their trust vnder \mathfrak{y} shadowe of thy wynges? They shalbe satisfied with the plētousnesse of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. ^dFor by the is \mathfrak{y} well of life, τ in thy light, shall we se light. O sprede forth thy louynge kyndnesse vnto them that knowe the, τ thy rightuousnes vnto thē that are true of hert. O let not the fote of pryde ouertake me, O let not the hande of \mathfrak{y} vngodly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, τ are not able to stōde.

The xxxvi. A psalme of Dauid.

FRETT not thy self at the vngodly, be not thou enuius agaynst the euell doers. ^eFor thy shall soone be cut downe like \mathfrak{y} grasse, τ be wythered euen as \mathfrak{y} grene herbe. Put thou thy trust in \mathfrak{y} LORDE, τ be doinge good: so shalt thou dwell in the londe, τ verely it shal fede the. Delyte thou in the LORDE, τ he shal geue the thy hertes desyre. ^fCōmitte thy waye vnto \mathfrak{y} LORDE, set thy hope in him, and he shal brynge it to passe. Yee he shall make thy rightuousnesse as cleare as the light, τ thy iust dealinge as the noone daye. Holde the still in \mathfrak{y} LORDE, and abyde paciētly vpon him: but greue not thy self at one that hath prosperite, and lyueth in abhominacion. Leauē of from wrath, let go displeasure, let not thy gelousy moue the also to do euell. For wicked doers shal be roted out, but they that paciētly abyde the LORDE, shal enheret the londe.

Suffre yet a litle whyle, τ \mathfrak{y} vngodly shal be clene gone: thou shalt loke after his place, τ he shal be awaye. ^gBut the meke spreted shal possesse the earth, τ haue pleasure in moch rest. The vngodly layeth wayte for the iust, τ gasnzsheth vpon him with his tethe.

But \mathfrak{y} LORDE laugheth him to scorne,^h for he seith \mathfrak{y} his daye is cōminge. The vngodly drawe out the swerde τ bende their bowe, to cast downe \mathfrak{y} symple τ poore, and to slaye soch as go \mathfrak{y} right waye. Neuertheless, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shalbe brokē. ⁱA small thinge \mathfrak{y} the rightuous hath, is better then greate riches of the vngodly. For the armes of \mathfrak{y} vngodly shalbe broken, but the LORDE vpholdeth the rightuous. The LORDE knoweth the dayes of the godly, τ their enheritaūce shal endure for euer. They shal not be confounded in \mathfrak{y} perulous tyme, τ in \mathfrak{y} dayes of death they shall haue ynough. As for \mathfrak{y} vngodly, they shall perishe: τ whē \mathfrak{y} enemies of \mathfrak{y} LORDE are in their floures, they shal cōsume, yee euen as the smoke shal they cōsume awaye. The vngodly ^kboroweth and paieth not agayne, but the rightuous is mercifull τ liberrall. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: τ they whom he curseth, shalbe roted out. The LORDE ordreth a good mans goynge, τ hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him with his hāde. ^lI haue bene yonge, τ now am olde: yet sawe I neuer the rightuous forsakē, ner his sede to seke their bred. The rightuous is euer mercifull, τ lēdeth gētly, therefore shal his sede be blessed. Fle frō euell, τ do \mathfrak{y} thinge that is good, so shalt thou dwell for euer.

13 PUT me not to rebuke (Oh LORDE) in thine anger: ^a Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. For thy arrowes stick fast in me, and thy honde presseth me sore. (o thou mightie) with worshipec and renouwe. Good lucke haue thou with thine honoure, ryde on with the treuth, mekenesse ⁊ rightuousnes: ⁊ thy right hōde shal teach ſ wōderfull thinges. Thy arrowes are sharpe, the people shalbe subdued vnto the, euen in the myddest amonge the kynges enemies.

Thou hast loued rightuousnesse, ⁊ hated iniquite: wherfore God (which is thy God) hath anoynted the with the oyle of gladnes aboute thy felowes. All thy garmentes are like myrre, Aloes ⁊ Cassia, when thou comest out of thine yuerie palaces in thy beutifull glory. Kynges daughters go in thy goodly araye, ⁊ vpon thy right hōde stondesth the quene in a vesture of the most fyne golde. Herken (o daughter) considre, ⁊ enclyne thine eare: forget thine owne people, ⁊ thy fathers house. So shal the kyngc haue pleasure in thy beutie, for he is thy LORDE, ⁊ thou shalt worshipec him. The daughters of Tyre shal be there with giftes,^b the riche amonge the people shal make their supplicacion before the. The kynges daughter is all glorious within, hir clothinge is of wrought golde. She shalbe brought vnto the kyngc in rayment of nedle worke, and maydens after her: soch as be next her shalbe brought vnto the. With ioye and gladnesse shal they be brought, and go in to the kynges palace. In steade of thy fathers thou hast gotten children, whom thou shalt make prynces in all londes. I wil remembre thy name from one generaciō to another: therefore shal the people geue thankes vnto the, worlde without ende.

3 IN oure troubles and aduersite, we haue I founde, that God is oure refuge, oure strength and helpe. Therefore wil we not feare, though the earth fell, and though the hillcs were caried in to the myddest of the see.

Though the waters of the see raged ⁊ were neuer so troublous, ⁊ though the mountaynes shoke at the tēpest of the same. Sela.

^d For there is a floude, which with his ryuers reioyseth ſ cite of God, the holy dwellynge of the most hyest. God is in ſ myddest of her, therefore shall she not be remoued: for God helpeth her, ⁊ ſ right early. The Heithen are madd, the kyngdomes make moch adoo: but whē he sheweth his voyce, ſ earth melteth awaye. The LORDE of hoostes is with vs, the God of Iacob is oure defence. 33

Sela. O come hither, ⁊ beholde ſ workes of the LORDE, what destruccionē he hath brought vpon ſ earth. He hath made warres to ceasse in all the worlde: he hath broken the bowe, he hath knapped the speare in sonder, ⁊ brēt the charettes in the fyre. Be still thē ⁊ confesse ſ I am God: I wil be exalted amonge the Heithē, ⁊ I wil be exalted vpon earth. The LORDE of hoostes is with vs, the God of Iacob is oure defence. Sela.

3 O CLAPPE youre hōdes together (all ye people) O syngē vnto God with the voyce of thākesgeuyngc. For the LORDE the most hyest is to be feared, ⁊ he the greate kyngc vpon all ſ earth. He shal subdue the people vnder vs, ⁊ the Heithē vnder oure fete. He choseth vs for an heretage, the beutie of Iacob whom he loued. Sela. God is gone vp with a mery noyse, ⁊ the LORDE with the sounde of the trōpet. O syngc prayses, syngc prayses vnto God: O syngc prayses, syngc prayses vnto oure kyngc.

For God is kyngc of all the earth, O syngc prayses vnto him with vnderstandinge.

God is kingc ouer the Heithē, God sitteth in his holy seate. The prynces of the people are gathered together vnto the God of Abraham: for God is farre farre hyer exalted, then the mightie lordes of the earth

3 GREATE is ſ LORDE ⁊ hvelie to be prayed, in ſ cite of oure God, euē vpon his holy hill. The hill of Sion is like a fayre plāte, wherof all the lōnde reioyseth: vpon the north syde lyeth the cite of the greate kingc.

The xliij. A psalme of the children of Corah.

O HEARE this, all ye people: pondre it well, all ye that dwell vpon the earth.

Hye & lowe, riche & poore, one with another. My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstondinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe. Wherfore shulde I feare the euell dayes, whē the wickednesse of my heles cōpaseth me rounde aboute? They that put their trust in their good, & boast them selues in the multitude of their riches. No man maye deliuer his brother, ner make agreement for him vnto God.

^bFor it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for euer. Yee though he lyue lōge, & se not y graue. ^cFor it shal be sene, y soch wyse mē shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignoraunt and foolish, & leaue their goodes for other. Loke what is in their houses, it cōtinueth still: their dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth. Neuertheless mā abydeh not in soch honoure, but is cōpared vnto y brute beastes, & becōmeth like vnto the.

This waie of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it with their mouth.

Sela. They lye in the hell like shepe, death shal gnawe vpon them, & the rightuous shal haue dominacion of them in the mornyng by tymes: their strēgh shal consume, & hell shal be their dwellinge. But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell, when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou afrayed, when one is made riche, & the glory of his house increased. ^dFor he shal cary nothinge awaye with him when he dyeth, neither shal his pompe folowe him. Whye he lyueth, he is counted an happe man: & so lōge as he is in prosperite, mē speake good of him. But whē he foloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light eny more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compared vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

The xliij. A psalme of Asaph.

THE LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the worlde from the rysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sion apareth the glorious beutie of God. ^aOure God shal come, and not kepe sylence: there goeth before him a consuminge fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, those y set more by the couenaunt than by eny offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his rightuousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprove the not because of thy sacrifice, thy burntofferings are allwaye before me. ^bI wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner goates out of thy foldes. For all the beestes of the felde are myne, and thousandes of cattell vpon the hilles.

I knowe all the foules vpon the mountaynes, and the wilde beastes of the felde are in my sight. ^cYf I be hongrie, I wil not tell the: for y whole worlde is myne, and all that therein is. The l. A psalme of Dauid.

HAUE mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes. ⁊ acordinge vnto thy greate mercies, do awaie myne offences.

Wash me well from my wickednesse, ⁊ clense me from my synne.^a For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges,^b and shuldest ouer come when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the treuth, and hast shewed me secrete wyszdome. ^cO reconcile me with Isope, and I shal be clene: wash thou me, and I shalbe whyter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face from my synnes, and put out all my myszdedes. ^dMake me a clene hert (o God) and reuue a right sprete within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy sprete from me.

O geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablish me with thy fre sprete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloudegyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy rightuousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

^eFor yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde geue it the: but thou delytest not in burntofferynge. The sacrifice of God is a troubled sprete, ^fa broken and a cōtrite hert (o God) shalt thou not despise. O be fauorable and gracious vnto Sion, that the walles of Ierusalem maye be buylded. WHY boastest thou thy self (thou Ty-raunt) that thou canst do myschefe? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge ymagineth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou louest vngraciousnesse more thē good, to talke of lyes more then rightuousnesse. Sela.

Thou lonest to speake all wordes y maye do hurte. O thou false tōge. Therefore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the luyunge. Sela.

The rightuous shal se this, ⁊ feare, and laugh him to scorn. ^aLo, this is the mā, y toke not God for his strēgh, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, ⁊ was mightie in his wickednesse. The liij. A psalme of Dauid.

THE foolish bodies saye in their hertes: ^aTush, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abominable in their wickedneses: there is not one, that doth good. God loked downe from heauen vpō the children of men, to se yf there were eny that wolde vnderstonde, or seke after God. ^bBut they are all gone out of y waye, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none y doth good, no not one. How cā they haue vnderstandinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bred, ⁊ call not vpon God? They are afrayed, where no feare is: for God breaketh the bones of them that besege the: thou putteth them to confusion, for God despiseth them. The liiij. A psalme of Dauid.

HEARE my prayer (o God) and hyde not thy self fro my petition. Take hede vnto me and heare me, how piteously I mourne & cōplayne. The enemy crieth so, & the vngodly commeth on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschefe, so maliciously are they set agaynst me. My herte is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a doue, that I might fle somewhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroye their tonges (o LORDE) and deuyde them, ^b for I see vnrightuousnes & strife in ^c cite. This goeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschefe and vyce are in the myddest of it.

But it is thou my companyon, ^e my gyde and myne owne familier frēde. We had swete and secrete comunicacion together, and louingly walked we together in ^f house of God.

^d Let death come hastily vpon them, and let them go downe quick in to hell, for wickednes is amonge them in their dwellinges.

As for me, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shall helpe me. In the eueninge, mornyng and at noone daye wil I mourne

It is he that delyuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite for me: for they are many agaynst me. Yee euen God that endureth for euer, shal heare me, and bryngue them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why? they feare not God. Yee they laye hondes vpon such as be at peace with him, and so thei breake his couenant. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. ^e O cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal norish the, and not leaue the righteous in vnquietnesse. They vexe me daylie in my wordes: all ^g they ymagin, is to do me euell. They holde altogether, & kepe them selues close: they marck my steppes, how they maye catch my soule. But in vayne, for it shal escape thē: and why? thou (o God) in thy displeasure shalt cast downe soch people. Thou tellest my flittinges, thou puttest my teares in thy botell, and nombrest them. When so euer I call vpon the, myne enemies are put to flight: wherby I knowe, that thou art my God. In Gods worde wil I reioyse, in the LORDES worde wil I comforte me. God, thou knowest my symplenesse, and my fautes are not hyd from the. Let not them that trust in the (o LORDE God of hoostes) be ashamed for my cause: let not those \hat{y} seke the, be confounded thorow me, o God of Israel. And why? for thy sake do I suffre reprofe, shame couereth my face. I am become a straunger vnto my brethren, and an aleaunt vnto my mothers children. ^bFor the zeale of thine house hath euen eaten me, and the rebukes of them that rebuked the, is fallen vpon me. I wepte and chastened my self with fasting, and that was turned to my reprofe. ^cI put on a sackcloth, and therefore they iested vpon me. They that satt in the gate, spake agaynst me, and the dronckardes made songes vpon me. But LORDE, I made my prayer vnto the in an acceptable tyme: Hear me (o God) with thy greate mercy τ sure helpe. Take me out of the myre, \hat{y} I syncke not: Oh let me be deluyered frō thē \hat{y} hate me, τ out of \hat{y} depe waters. dwel in their tentes. For they persecute him whom thou hast smytten, τ besyde thy woundes they haue geuen him moo. Let them fall frō one wickednesse to another, τ not come in to thy rightuousnesse. Let thē be wypped out of \hat{y} boke of the luyinge, τ not be written amonge the rightuous. As for me, I am poore τ in heuynesse, let thy helpe defende me, o God. That I maye prayse \hat{y} name of God with a songe, τ magnifie it with thankesgeuyng. This shal please the LORDE better then a bullocke, that hath hornes τ hofes. O conside this τ be glad (ye that be in aduersite) seke after God, τ youre soule shal lyue.

For the LORDE heareth the poore, τ despyseth not his prisoners. Let heauen τ earth praise him, the see τ all that moueth therein. For God wil saue Sion, τ buylde the cities of Iuda, that men maye dwell there, τ haue thē in possession. The sede of his seruaunts shal theret it, τ they that loue his name, shal dwell therein.

inges had wel nye slipte. And why? I was greued at \hat{y} wicked,^a to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plaged like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puff vp in pryde, α ouerwhelmed with crueltie and vnrighuousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, α their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therefore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auantage. ^bTush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it? is there knowlege in the most hyest? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospere in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then cense my hert in vayne (thought I) ϵ α wash my hondes in innocency? Wherfore shulde I be then punyshed daylie, α be chastened euery mornynge? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I wete in to \hat{y} Sanctuary of God, α considered the ende of these men. Namely, how thou hast set thē in a slippery place, ^cthat thou maiest cast thē downe headlynges α destroye thē. O how sodenly do they consume, perish, α come to a fearfull ende? ^dYee euen like as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thou their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, α it wente euen thorow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignoraunt, and as it were a beest before the. Neuerthelesse, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou ledest me with thy coücel, and afterwarde receauest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen? there is nothinge vpō earth, that I desyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my herte fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. ^eFor lo, they that forsake the, shal perishe, thou destroyest all them that committe fornicacion agaynst the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put my trust in the LORDE God, and to speake of all thy workes.

The lxxiiij. A psalme of Asaph

O GOD, wherfore doest thou cast vs so cleane awaye? why is thy wrath so hote agaynst \hat{y} shepe of thy pasture? O thinke vpon thy congregacion, whom thou hast purchased frō the begynnyng: the staff of thine inheritance, whom thou hast redemed, euen this hill of Sion wherin thou dwellest. Treade vpon them with thy fete, α cast them downe to the grounde, for the enemye hath destroyed alltogether in the Sactuary. Thy aduersaries roare in thy houses, α set vp their banners for tokens. Men maye se the axes glistre aboue, like as those that hewe in the wod. They cutt downe ϵ all the sylinge worke of \hat{y} Sactuary with bylles α axes. They haue set fyre vpon thy Sactuary, they haue defiled \hat{y} dwellynge place of thy name, euc̄ vnto the groūde. Yee they saye in their hertes: Let vs spoyle thē all together, thus haue they brent vp all the houses of God in the loude. I sayde vnto the madde people: deale not so madly, & to the vngodly: set not vp youre hornes. Set not vp youre hornes an hie, & speake not with a stiff necke. For promociō commeth nether from the east ner from the west, ner yet frō the wyldernesse. And why? God is the iudge: he putteth downe one & setteth vp another. For in the honde of the LORDE there is a cuppe full of stronge wyne, & he poureth out of the same: As for the dregges therof, all ſ̄ vngodly of the earth shal drynke them, & sucke them out. But I wil talke of the God of Iacob, & prayse him for euer. All the hornes of the vngodly will I breake, & ſ̄ hornes of the righteous shalbe exalted.

The lxxv. A psalme of Asaph.

IN Iuda is God knowne, his name is greate in Israel. At Salem is his tabernacle, & his dwellinge in Sion. There breaketh he the arrowes of the bowe, & ſ̄ shyld, & the swerde & the whole battayll.

Sela. Thou art of more honoure & might thē the hilles of robbers. The proude shalbe robbed & slepe their slepe, & ſ̄ mightie shalbe able to do nothinge with their hōdes. Whē thou rebukest them (o God of Iacob) both the charrettes & horsmen shal fall on slepe. Thou art feareful, for who maye abyde in thy sight, when thou art angrie? When thou latest thy iudgment be herde from heauen, the erth trembleth & is still. Yee when God aryseth to geue iudgment, & to helpe all them that be in aduersite vpon earth. Sela.

When thou punyshest one man, he must knowlege, that thou art redy to punysh other mo. Loke what ye promise vnto the LORDE your God, se that ye kepe it, all ye that be rōnde aboute him: brynges presentes vnto him ſ̄ ought to be feared. Which taketh awaye the breth of prynces, & is wonderfull amōge the kynges of the earth.

The lxxvi. A psalme of Asaph.

I CRIED vnto God with my voyce, & yee euen vnto God cried I with my voyce, & he herde me. In the tyme of my trouble I sought the LORDE, I helde vp my hondes vnto him in the night season, for my soule refused all other comforte. When I was in heynesse, I thought vpō God: whē my hert was vexed, then dyd I speake.

Sela. Thou heldest myne eyes wakyng, I was so feble, that I coude not speake. Then remembered I the tymes of olde, & the yeares that were past. I called to remembrance my songe in the night, I commoned with myne owne herte, and sought out my sprete. Wil the LORDE cast out for euer?

Will he be nomore intreated? Is his mercy cleane gone? Is his promise come vtterly to an ende for euermore? Hath the LORDE forgotten to be gracious? Or, hath he shut vp his louynge kyndnesse in displeasure? Sela. At the last I came to this poynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish? the right honde of the most hiest can change all.

Therefore wil I remembre the workes of the LORDE, and call to mynde thy wonders of olde tyme. I wil speake of all thy workes, and my talkynge shalbe of thy doinges.

Thy waye (o God) is holy, who is so greate & mightie as God? Thou art the God, that doth wonders, thou hast declared thy power amonge the people. Thou with thine arme hast delyuered thy people, euen the sonnes of Iacob and Ioseph. Sela. The waters sawe ſ̄ (o God) ſ̄ waters sawe ſ̄, & were afrayed: ſ̄ depthes were moued. The lxxvij. A psalme of Asaph.

HEARE my lawe (o my people) encline youre eares vnto \hat{y} wordes of my mouth. ^aI wil open my mouth in parables, and speake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowne, and such as oure fathers haue tolde vs. That we shulde not hyde them from the children of the generacions to come: but to shewe the honoure of the LORDE, his might and wonderfull workes that he hath done. He made a couenaunt with Iacob, ^band gaue Israel a lawe, which he comaunded oure forefathers to teach their children. That their posterite might knowe it, and the children which were yet vborne.

To the intent \hat{y} when they came vp, they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God, τ not to forget what he had done, but to keepe his comaundementes. ^cAnd not to be as their forefathers, a frowarde and ouerthwarte generacion, a generacion that set not their herte a right, and whose sprete was not true towarde God. Like as the children of Ephraim, which beyng harnesssed and carienge bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenaunt of God, τ wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgot what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egipte, euen in the felde of Zoan. ^dHe deuyded the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. ^eIn the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloaue the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the stony rocke. He brought waters out of the stony rocke, so that they gushed out like the ryuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hiest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their hertes, and required meate for their lust. ^fFor they spake agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wyldernesse, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the watery streames gushed out, and the streames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and proude flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth: so the fyre was kyndled in Iacob, and heuy displeasure agaynst Israel.

Because they beleued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he comaunded the cloudes aboue, and opened the dores of heauen. ^gHe rayned downe Manna vpō them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then ate they angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. ^hHe made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fethered foules like the sonde of \hat{y} see. He let it fall amōge their tētes rōude aboute their habitaciōs. So they ate τ were fylled, for he gaue them their owne desyre. ⁱThey were not dispoyned of their lust.

But whyle \hat{y} meate was yet in their mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came vpō thē, slewe \hat{y} welthiest of thē, τ smote downe \hat{y} chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, ^kand beleued not his wōderous workes. Therefore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and sodenly their yeares were gone. When he slewe them, they sought him, and turned them early vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hie God was their redemer. Neuertheless, they dyd but flater him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, nether continued they in his couenaunt. But he was so mercifull, that he forgave their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath awaye, and wolde not suffre his whole displeasure to aryse. ^lFor he considered \hat{y} they were but flesh: euen a wynde that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how oft haue they greued him in the wilderness? How many a tyme haue they prouoked him in the deserte? ^mThey turned backe τ tempted God, and moued the holy one in Israel. They thought not of his hæde, in ȳ daye when he delyuered them from the hande of ȳ enemie. How he had wrought his miracles in Egipte, and his wõders in the londe of Zoan. How he turned their waters in to bloude, so that they might not drynke of the ryuers.^a How he sent lyse amonge them, to eate them vp, and frogges to destroye them. How he gaue their frutes vnto the catipiller, and their labour vnto the greshopper. ^bHow he bett downe their vynyards with hayle stones, and their Molbery trees with the frost. How he smote their cattell with haylestones, and their flockes with hote thõder boltes. How he sent vpon them ȳ furiousnesse of his wrath, anger & displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euell angels. ^cWhen he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciõ, and spared not their soules from death, yee and gaue their cattell ouer to the pestilence. ^dWhen he smote all the firstborne in Egipte, the most principall and mightiest in ȳ dwellings of Ham.

J But as for his owne people, he led them forth like shepe, and caried them in the wyl-dernesse like a flocke. He brought them out safely, that they shulde not feare, and ouerwhelmed their enemies with the see. He caried them vnto the borders of his Sanctuary: euen in to this hill, which he purchased with his right hande. ^eHe dyd cast out the Heithen before them, caused their londe to be deuoyed amonge them for an heretage, and made ȳ tribes of Israel to dwell in their têtes. For all this they tempted and displeasd the most hye God, and kepte not his couenaunt. But turned their backs and fell awaye like their forefathers, startinge asyde like a broken bowe. And so they greued him with their hie places, & prouoked him with their ymages. When God herde this, he was wroth, and toke sore displeasure at Israel. ^fSo that he forsoke the tabernacle in Silo, euen his habitacion wherin he dwelt amonge men. ^gHe delynered their power in to captiuyte, and their glory in to the enemies hõde. He gaue his people ouer in to the swerde, for he was wroth with his heretage.

The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydés were not geuen to mariage.

Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giaunte refreshed with wyne. ^hHe smote his enemies in ȳ hynder partes, and put them to a perpetual shame. He refused the tabernacle of Ioseph, and chose not the trybe of Ephraim. Neuertheless, he chose ȳ trybe of Iuda, euē the hill of Sion which he loued. ⁱAnd there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed ȳ fundacion of it like ȳ grounde, that it might perpetually endure. ^kHe chose Dauid also his seruauit, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was followinge the yowes greate with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Iacob his people, and Israel his inheritance. So he fed them with a faithfull and true hert, and ruled them with all ȳ diligence of his power.

O GOD, ȳ Heithen are fallen in to thine heretage: thy holy temple haue they defyled, and made Ierusalem an heape of stones. ^mThe deed bodies of thy seruauentes haue they geuen vnto ȳ foules of the ayre to be deuoured, and the flesh of thy sayntes vnto ȳ beestes of the londe. Their bloude haue they shed like water on euery syde of Ierusalem, and there was no mā to burie them. ⁿWe are become an open shame vnto oure enemies, a very scorne and derision vnto them that are rounde aboute vs.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou be angrie? shal thy gelousy burne like fyre for euer? Poure out thy indignacion vpon the Heithen that knowe the not, ^oand vpon the kyngdomes that call not vpon thy name.

Thou hast put awaye myne acquitaunce farre fro me, & made me to be abhorred of them: I am so fast in preson, that I can not get forth. ^b

My sight fayleth for very trouble: LORDE, I call daylie vpō the, and stretch out my hondes vnto the. ^c Doest thou shewe wonders amonge the deed? Can the physiciās rayse them vp agayne, that they maye prayse the? / Maye thy louyngē kyndnes be shewed in the graue, or thy faithfulness in destruction? Maye thy wonderous workes be knowne in the darcke, or thy righteousnes in the londe where all thinges are forgottē?

Vnto the I crie (o LORDE) and early ^c cōmeth my prayer before the. LORDE, why puttst thou awaye my soule? Wherefore hydest thou thy face fro me? My strength is gone for very sorow and misery, with fearfulness do I beare thy burthens. Thy wrothfull displeasure goeth ouer me, the feare of the oppresseth me. They come rounde aboute me daylie like water, and compase me together on euery syde. My louers and frēdes hast thou put awaye fro me, and turned awaye myne acquaintance.

For I haue sayde: mercy shal be set vp for euer, thy faithfulness shalt thou stablish in the heauens. ^a I haue made a couenaunt with my chosen, I haue sworne vnto Dauid my seruaunt. Thy seide wil I stablish for euer, and set vp thy Trone from one generacion to another. Sela.

O LORDE, the very heauens shal prayse thy wonderous workes, ^b yee τ thy faithfulness in \ddot{y} congregacion of the sayntes. For who is he amonge the cloudes, that maye be cōpared vnto the LORDE? ^c Yee what is he amonge the goddes, that is like vnto the LORDE? God is greatly to be feared in the counsell of the sayntes, τ to be had in reuerence of all thē that are aboute him. O LORDE God of hoostes, who is like vnto the in power? thy trueth is rounde aboute the. ^d Thou rulest the pryde of the see, thou stillest the wawes therof, whē they arise. Thou breakest the proude, like one that is wounded, thou scatrest thine enemies abrode with thy mightie arme. The heauens are thine, the earth is thine: thou hast layed the foundaciō of the roude worlde and all that therein is. Thou hast made the north and the south, Tabor and Hermon shal reioyse in thy name. Thou hast a mightie arme, stronge is thy hande, and hys is thy right hande. Rightuousnes and equite is the habitacion of thy seate, mercy and trueth go before thy face. Blessed is the people (o LORDE) that can reioyse in the, and walketh in the light of thy countenance. Their delite is in thy name all the daye longe, and thorow thy rightuousnesse they shalbe exalted. For thou art the glory of thy strength, τ thorow thy fauoure shalt thou lift vp oure hornes. ^e The LORDE is oure defence, and the holy one of Israel is oure kynge. Thou spakest somtyme in visiōs vnto thy sayntes, and saydest: I haue layed helpe vpon one that is mightie, I haue exalted one chosen out of the people. ^f I haue founde Dauid my seruaunt, with my holy oyle haue I anoynted him. My honde shal holde him fast, and my arme shal strength him. The enemye shal not ouercome him, and the sonne of wickednesse shal not hurte him. I shal smyte downe his foes before his face, and plage them that hate him.

My trueth also τ my mercy shalbe with him, and in my name shal his horne be exalted. ^g I wil set his honde in the see,^h and his right honde in the floudes. He shal call me: thou art my father, my God, and the strength of my saluacion. And I wil make him my firstborne, hyer then the kinges of the earth.

My mercy wil I kepe for him for euermore, and my couenaunt shall stonde fast with him. His seide wil I make to endure for euer, yee and his Trone as the dayes of heauen. ⁱ But yf his childre forsake my lawe, and walke not in my iudgements. Yf they breake myne ordinaunces, and kepe not my commaundementes. I wil vyset their offences with the rodde, and their synnes with scourges. Neuerthelesse, my louynge kyndnesse wil I not vterly take from him, ner suffre my trueth to fayle. My couenaunt wil I not breake, ner disanulle the thinge \ddot{y} is gone out of my lippes. I haue sworne once by my holynesse, that I wil not fayle Dauid. His seide shal endure for euer, and his seate also like as the Sonne before me. ^j He shal stonde fast for euermore as the Moone, and as the faithfull witnesse in heauen.

Sela. But now thou forsakest and abhorrest thine anoynted, and art displeasid at him. Thou hast turned backe the couenaunt of thy seruaunt, and cast his crowne to the grounde. Thou hast ouer throwne all his hedges,^k and brokē downe his stronge holdes. Al they that go by, spoyle him, he is become a rebuke vnto his neighbours. Thou settest vp the right hāde of his enemies, and makest all his aduersaries to reioyse. Thou hast taken awaye the strength of his swerde, and geuest him not victory in the battayll. Thou hast put out his glory, and cast his Trone downe to the grounde. The dayes of his youth hast thou shortened, and couered him with dishonoure. Sela.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou hyde thy self? For euer? shal thy wrath burne like fyre? O remembre how shorte my tyme is, hast thou made all men for naught? ^l What man is he that lyueth, and shal not se death?

The lxxxij. Psalme.

A prayer of Moses the man of God.

LORDE, thou art oure refuge from one generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or euer the earth & the worlde were made, thou art God from cuerlastinge and worlde with out ende. Thou turnest man to destruccion, Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne ye children of men. ^b For a thousande yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

As soone as thou scatrest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye sodenly like the grasse. ^c In the mornynge it is grene and groweth vp, but in the euenynge it is cutt downe and wythered. For we consume awaye in thy displeasure, and are afrayed at thy wrothfull indignacion. Thou settest oure miszdedes before the, and oure secrete synnes in the light of thy countenance. For when thou art angrie, all oure dayes are gone, we brynge oure yeares to an ende, as it were a tayle that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & though men be so stronge that they come to iij. score yeares, yet is their strength then but laboure and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy fearfull & terrible displeasure? ^d O teach vs to nombre oure dayes, that we maye applie ^e oure hertes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (o LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruautes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of oure life. Comforte vs agayne, now after the tyme that thou hast plagued vs, and for the yeares wherin we haue suffred aduersite.

WHO so dwelleth vnder ŷ defence of the most hyst, & abydeth vnder ŷ shadowe of ŷ almightie: He shal saye vnto ŷ LORDE: o my hope, & my stronge holde, my God, in whō I wil trust. For he shal deliuer the frō the snare of the hunter, & frō the noysome pestilence. He shal couer the vnder his wynges, that thou mayest be safe vnder his fethers: his faithfulness and trueth shal be thy shyld and buckler. So ŷ thou shalt not nede to be afrayed for eny bugges by night, ner for arowe that flyeth by daye.

They shal beare the in their hondes, that thou hurte not thy fote agaynst a stone.

Thou shalt go vpō the Lyon and Adder, the yonge Lyon and the Dragon shalt thou treade vnder thy fete. Because he hath set his loue vpon me, I shal delyuer him: I shal defende him, for he hath knowne my name.

Take hede, ye vnwise amonge the people: o ye fooles, when wil ye vnderstōde? He that planted the eare, shal he not heare? he that made the eye, shal he not he se? ^l He that nurtureth the Heithen, and teacheth a man knowlege, shal not he punysh? The LORDE knoweth the thoughtes of men, that they are but vayne. Blessed is the mā, whom thou lernest (o LORDE) and teachest him in thy lawe. That thou mayest geue him pacience in tyme of aduersite, vntill the pytte be dygged vp for the vngodly. For the LORDE wil not fayle his people, neither wil he forsake his inheritance. And why? iudgment shalbe turned agayne vnto rightuousnesse, and all soch as be true of hert shal folowe it. Who ryseth vp with me agaynst the wicked? who taketh my parte agaynst the euell doers? ^m If the LORDE had not helped me, my soule had almost bene put to sylece.

Wilt thou haue eny thinge to do with the stole of wickednesse, which ymagineth myschefe in the lawe? They gather them together agaynst the soule of the righteous, & condemne the innocent bloude. He shewed his wayes vnto Moses, and his workes vnto the children of Israel. °The LORDE is full of compassion and mercy, longe sufferinge, and of greate goodnesse. He wil not allwaye be chydynge, nether wil he kepe his anger for euer.

He hath not dealt with vs after oure synnes, ner rewarded vs accordinge to oure wickednesses. °For loke how hye the heauē is in comparison of the earth, so greate is his mercy also towarde them that feare him.

Loke how wyde the east is from the west, so farre hath he set oure synnes from vs.

Yee like as a father pitieth his owne children, euen so is the LORDE mercifull vnto thē that feare him. °For he knoweth wherof we be made, he remembreth that we are but dust. That a man in his tyne is but as grassse, ⁊ flourisheth as a floure of the felde.

For as soone as the wynde goeth ouer it, it is gone, and the place therof knoweth it nomore. But the mercifull goodnesse of y^e LORDE endureth for euer and euer, °vpon them y^e feare him, and his rightuousnesse vpon their childers children. Such as kepe his couenaunt, and thinke vpon his commaundementes to do them. The LORDE hath prepared his seate in heanē, and his kyngdome ruleth ouer all. O prayse the LORDE ye angels of his, ye that be mightie in strēgth, fulfillinge his commaundement, that mē maye heare the voyce of his wordes. O prayse the LORDE all ye his hoostes, ye seruauntes of his, that do his pleasure. O speake good of the LORDE all ye workes of his, in euery place of his dominion: prayse thou the LORDE, o my soule.

The ciiij. Psalme.

PRAYSE the LORDE o my soule: ° O LORDE my God, thou art become exceedinge glorious, thou art clothed with maiesty and honoure. Thou deckest thy self with light, as it were with a garment, thou spredest out the heauen like a curtayne.

Thou voltest it aboue with waters, thou makest the cloudes thy charet, and goest vpon the wynges of the wynde. °Thou makest thine angels spretes, and thy ministers flammes of fyre. Thou hast layed y^e earth vpon hir foundation, that it neuer moueth at eny tyme. Thou couerest it with the depe like as with a garnēt, °so that the waters stonde about the hilles. °But at thy rebuke they fle, at the voyce of thy thonder they are afrayed. (Then are the hilles sene alofte, ⁊ the valleys beneth in their place which thou hast appointed for thē.) °Thou hast set them their boundes, which they maie not passe, that they turne Above vpon the hilles haue the foules of the ayre their habitation. and syngue amonge the braunches. Thou watreth the hylles from aboue. the erth is fylled with ȳ frutes of thy workes. Thou bryngest forth grasse for the catell. and grene herbe for the seruyce of men. ⁊ Thou bryngest fode out of the earth: wyne to make glad ȳ herte of mā, oyle to make him a chearfull countenance, ⁊ bred to strength manis herte. The trees of the LORDE are full of sappe, euen the trees of Libanus which he hath planted. There make the byrdes their nestes, and the fyrrer trees are a dwellinge for the storcke. The hilles are a refuge for the wyld goates, and so are the stony rockes for ȳ conyes. Thou hast appoynted the Moone for certayne seasons, the Sonne knoweth his goinge downe. Thou makest darcknesse, that it maye be night, wherin all the beastes of the forest do moue. Yee and the yonge lyons which roare after the praye, and seke their meate at God. But when the Sonne ariseth, they get them awaye together, and lye them downe in their demes. ⁊ Then goeth man forth to his worke, and to till his londe vntill the euenynge. O LORDE, how manifeole are thy workes, right wysely hast thou made thē all: yee the earth is full of thy riches. So is this greate and wyde see also, wherin are thinges crepinge innumerable, both small and greate beastes. There go the shippes ouer, ⁊ there is that Leuiathan, whom thou hast made, to take his pastyme therin.

They wayte all vpō the, that thou mayest geue them meate in due season. ⁊ Whē thou geuest it them, they gather it: whē thou openest thine honde, they are fylled with good.

But when thou hydest thy face, they are sorowfull: ⁊ yf thou takest awaye their breth, they dye, ⁊ are turned agayne to their dust.

Agayne, when thou latestt thy breth go forth, they are made, and so thou renewest the face of the earth. The glorious magesty of the LORDE endureth for euer, and the LORDE reioyseth in his workes. The earth trēbleth at the loke of him, ⁊ he doth but touch ȳ hilles and they smoke. I will syngue vnto the LORDE as longe as I lyue, I wil prayse my God whyle I haue my beinge. O that my wordes might please him, for my ioye is in the LORDE. As for synners, they shal be cōsumed out of the earth, and the vngodly shal come to an ende: ⁊ but prayse thou the LORDE, o my soule. Halleluya.

The ciiiij. Psalm.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name: ⁊ tell the people what thinges he hath done. O let youre songes be of him: prayse him, and let youre talkynge be of all his wonderous workes. Geue his holy name a good reporte, let their hertes reioyse that seke the LORDE.

Seke the LORDE, and his strength, seke his face euermore. Remembre the maruelous workes that he hath done, his wonders and the iudgements of his mouth. O ye seide of Abraham his seruaunt, ye children of Jacob his chosen. He is the LORDE oure God, whose punyshmentes are thorow out all the worlde. He is allwaye myndfull of his couenaunt, and promyse that he made to a thousande generacions.

Yee the couenaunt that he made with Abraham, and the ooth that he swore vnto Isaac. And appoynted the same vnto Iacob for a lawe, and to Israel for an euerlastinge testament. Sayenge: vnto the wil I geue the londe of Canaan, the lott of youre heretage. When there was yet but a fewe of them, and they straungers therin. worde came, and till the worde of \hat{y} LORDE had tried him. ^aThen sent the kinge and caused him be deluyered, the prynce of the people bad let him go. He made him lorde of his house, τ ruler of all his substaunce. That he might enfourme his prynces after his wil, and teach his Senatours wysdome. ^bIsrael also came in to Egipte, and Iacob was a straunger in the lode of Ham.

Whose hert turned, so that they hated his people, and dealt vntruly with his seruantes.

^dThen sent he Moses his seruaunt, and Aaron whom he had chosen. These dyd his tokens amōge them, and wonders in the londe of Ham. ^eHe sent darcknesse and it was darcke, for they were not obedient vnto his worde.

He spake the worde, τ their came all maner of flies τ lise in all their quarters.

He gaue them hale stones for rayne, and flammes of fyre in their lode. He smote their vynyards τ fige trees, and destroyed the trees that were in their coastes. He spake \hat{y} worde,^h and their came greshoppers τ eatirpillers innumerable.

These ate vp all the grasse in their lode, and deuoured the frutes of their grofide.

ⁱHe smote all \hat{y} first borne in their lode,^j euen the chefe of all their substaunce. He brought them forth with syluer τ golde, there was not one feble personne amōge their trybes. Egipte was glad of their departinge, for they were afraied of thē.

^kHe spred out a cloude to be a couerynge, and fyre to geue light in the night season.

^lAt their desyre, there came quales, and he fylled them with the bred of heauē. ^mHe opened the rocke of stone, τ the waters flowed out: so that ryuers ranne in the wilderness.

For why, he remembered his holy promyse which he had made vnto Abraham his seruaunt. Thus he brought forth his people with ioye, and his chosen with gladnesse.

And gaue them the lodes of the Heithē, where they toke the labours of the people in possession. That they might kepe his statutes, and obserue his lawes. Halleluya.

The cx. Psalme. Halleluya.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. ^aWho can expresse \hat{y} noble actes of the LORDE, or shewe forth all his prayse? Blessed are they that allwaye kepe iudgment, and do rightuousnes. Remember vs (o LORDE) accordinge to the fauoure that thou bearest vnto thy people: o vyset vs with thy sauinge health. That we might see the pleasure of thy chosen, that we might reioyse in the gladnesse of thy people, and geue thanks with thine inheritance. ^bWe haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Oure fathers regarded not thy wonderes in Egipte, they kepte not thy greate goodnesse in remembrance: but were dishobediēt at the see, euē at the reed see. Neuertheles, he helped thē for his names sake, that he might make his power to be knowne. He rebuked the reed see, and it was dried vp: ^cso he led thē thorow the depe as in a wilderness. Thus he saued them from the honde of the hater, τ deluyered them from the honde of the enemy.

As for those \hat{y} troubled them, the waters ouerwhelmed thē, there was not one of thē left. ^dThen beleued they in his worde, and songe prayse vnto him. But within a whyle they forgat his workes, τ wolde not abyde his counsell. ^eA lust came vpō them in the wilderness, so that they tempted God in the deserte. Yet he gaue them their desyre, and sent thē ynough at their willes. They angered Moses in the tētes,^f and Aaron the saynte of the LORDE. So the earth opened τ swallowed vp Dathan, and couered the congregaciō of Abiram. The fyre was kyndled in their company, the flame brent vp the vngodly. ^gThey made a calfe in Horeb, and worshipped the moltē ymage. Thus they turned his glory in to the similitude of a calfe, \hat{y} eateth haye. They forgat God their Sauoure, which had done so greate thinges in Egipte. Wonderous workes in the londe of Ham, and fearfull things in the reed see. So he sayde he wolde haue destroyed them, had not Moses his chosen stonde before him in \hat{y} gappe: to turne awaie his wrothfull indignacion, lest he shulde destroye thē.

Yee they thought scorue of y^e pleasant
londe, and gaue no credence vnto his worde.

But murmured in their tentes, and herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE.

Then lift he vp his honde agaynst them, to ouerthrowe them in the wildernes. To cast out their sede amonge the nacions, and to scatter them in the londes. ^bThey ioyned them selues vnto Baal Peor, and ate the offeringes of the deed. Thus they prouoked him vnto anger with their owne inuencions, and the plage was greate amonge them.

Then stode vp Phineas and executed iustice, ^cso the plage ceased. ^dAnd that was counted vnto him for rightuousnesse, amonge all posterites for euermore. They angered him also at the waters of strife, ^eso that Moses was punyshed for their sakes. Because they prouoked his sprete, and he tolde th^e plainly with his lippes. Nether destroyed they the Heithen, ^fas the LORDE commaunded them. But were mengled amonge the Heithen, and lerned their workes.

In so moch that they worshipped their ymages, which turned to their owne decaye.

Yee they offred their sonnes and their daughters vnto deuels. And shed the innocent bloude of their sonnes and of their daughters, whom they offred vnto the ymages of Canaan, so that the londe was defyled with bloude. Thus were they stayned with their owne workes, and wente a whoringe with their owne inuencions. Therefore was the wrath of the LORDE kyndled agaynst his people, in so moch that he abhorred his owne enheritance. And gaue them ouer in to the honde of the Heith^e, and they that bated them, were lordes ouer them. Their enemies oppressed th^e, and had them in subieccion. Many a tyme dyd he deliuer them, but they prouoked him with their owne inuencions, and were brought downe for their wickednesse. Neuerthelesse wh^e he sawe their aduersite, he herde their complainte. ^gHe thought vp^o his couenaunt, and pitied th^e, acordinge vnto the multitude of his mercies. Yee he made all those y^e had led them awaye captiue, to pitie them. Deliyer vs (o LORDE oure God) ^hgather vs from amōge the Heithen: that we maye geue thanks to thy holy name, ⁱand make oure boast of thy prayse. ^kBlessed be the LORDE God of Israel for euerlastinge and worlde without ende, and let all people saye: Amen, Amen. Halleluya.

The cxi. Psalme.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, ^land his mercy endureth for euer. Let them geue thākes whom the LORDE hath redemed, ^mand deliyuered from the hande of the enemye. And gathered th^e out of the londes, frō the east, frō the west, frō the north ⁿand frō the south.

They wente astraye in the wilderness in an vtroden waye, ^ofounde no cite to dwell in. Hungrie ^pand thirstie, ^qand their soule faynted in th^e. So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, ^rand he deliyuered th^e from their distresse. He led th^e forth by ^sthe right waie, ^tand they might go to ^uthe cite where they dwelt.

^vO that m^e wolde prayse the goodnesse of the LORDE, ^wand the wonders that he doth for the childr^e of m^e. ^xFor he satisfied the emptie soule, ^yand fylled the hongrie soule with good.

So they cried vnto the LORDE in their trouble, ^{ac}and he deliyuered them out of their distresse. These men see the workes of the LORDE, and his wonders in the depe. For at his worde,^b the stormy wynde aryseth, and lifteth vp the wawes therof.

They are caried vp to the heauen, and downe agayne to the depe, their soule melteth away in the trouble. They relye to and fro, they stacker like a droncken man, and are at their wittes ende. So they crie vnto the LORDE in their trouble, and he deluyereth thē out of their distresse. He maketh the storme to ceasse, so that the wawes are still.

The righteous wil cōsidre this and reioyse, the mouth of all wickednesse shall be stopped. Who so is wyse, and pondreth these things well, shall viderstonde the louynge kyndnesses of the LORDE.

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

GOD, my hert is ready to synge, and to laue geue prayse. Awake (o my glory) awake lute and harpe, I my selfe will awake right early. I wil geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) amonge the people, I wil synge prayses vnto the amonge the Heithē.

For the greatnesse of thy mercy is higher then the heauens, and thy faithfulnessse reacheth vnto the cloudes. Set vp thy self (o God) aboute the heauē, and thy glory aboute all the earth. That thy beloued maye be deluyered: helpe then with thy right hande, and heare me. God hath spoken in his Sanctuary (which thinge reioyseth me.) I will deuyde Sichem, and mete out the valley of Suchoth. Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strēth of my heade, Iuda is my captaine. Moab is my wash pottle, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who wil lede me in to the stronge cite? Who wil brynge me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it (o God) which hast cast vs out: thou God, why wentest not forth with oure hoostes? O be thou oure helpe in trouble, for vayne is the helpe of man. Thorow God we shall do greate actes, for it is he why shal treade downe oure enemies.

HOLDE not thy tōge, o God of my prayse. For the mouth of the vngodly, yee and the mouth of the disceatfull is opened vpon me, and speake agaynst me with false tōges. They compase me aboute with wordes of hatred, and fight agaynst me without a cause. For the loue that I had vnto them, they take now my contrary parte, but I geue my self vnto prayer.

remembraunce in the sight of the LORDE, and let not the synne of his mother be done awaye.

Let them be allwaye before the LORDE, but as for the memoriall of them selues, let it perish from out of the earth. And that because his mynde was not to do good, but persecuted the poore helpless, and him that was vexed at the herte, to slaye him. His delite was in cursynge, and therefore shall it happē vnto him: he loned not blessing, and that shall be farre frō him. He clothed him self with cursynge like as with a rayment: yee it wente in to his bowels like water, and like oyle in to his bones. Let it be vnto him as the cloke that he hath vpon him, and as the gyrdle that he is gyrded withall. Let it thus happen from the LORDE vnto myne enemies, and to those that speake euell agaynst my soule. But deale thou with me (o LORDE God) accordinge vnto thy name, for swete is thy mercy. O delyuer me, for I am helpless & poore, & my herte is wounded within me. I go hence like ŷ shadowe that departeth, and am dryuen awaye as ŷ greshoppers. My knees are weake thorow fastynge, my flesh is dried vp for want of fatnesse. I am become a rebuke vnto them, they loke vpon me^d and shake their heades. Helpe me o LORDE my God, oh saue me for thy mercies sake. That they maye knowe, how that this is thy hande, and that thou hast done it. Though they curse, yet blesse thou: and let them be cōfounded, that ryse vp agaynst me, but let thy seruauent reioyse. Let myne aduersaries be clothed with their owne shame, as with a cloake.

As for me, I wil geue thanks vnto the LORDE with my mouth, and prayse him amonge the multitude. ^bFor he stondeth at the right hande of the poore, to saue him from such as condemne his soule.

The LORDE vpon thy right honde, shal smyte euen kynges in the daye of his wrath. He shal be iudge amonge the Heithen, he shal fyll them with deed bodies, and smyte in sonder the heades ouer dyuerse countres. He shal drynke of the broke in the waye, therefore shal he lift vp his heade.

The cix. Psalme. Halleluia.

IWIL geue thanks vnto the LORDE with my whole herte: secretly amonge the faithfull, and in the congregacion. The workes of the LORDE are greate, ^fsought out of all thē that haue pleasure therein. His worke is worthy to be prayed and had in honoure, and his rightuousnesse endureth for euer. The mercifull & gracious LORDE hath so done his marvelous workes, ŷ they ought to be had in remēbrauce. ^gHe geueth meate vnto thē ŷ feare him, he is euer myndfull of his couenaūt.

He sheweth his people the power of his workes, that he maye geue them the heretage of the Heithen. The workes of his hōdes are verite & iudgment, all his cōmaudemētes are true. The cxiij. Psalme. Halleluya.

PRAISE the LORDE (O ye seruauntes)
O prayse the name of the LORDE.^b Blessed be the name of the LORDE, frō this tyme forth for euermore. The LORDES name is worthy to be praysed, ^c frō the rysinge vp of the Sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. The LORDE is hye aboue all Heithen, and his glory aboue the heauēcs. Who is like vnto the LORDE oure God, ȝ hath his dwellinge so hye, which humbleth himself, to beholde that is in heauen and earth? ^d Which taketh vp the symple out of the dust, and lifeth the poore out of the myre. That he maye set him amonge the prynces, euen amonge the prynces of his people. Which maketh the baren woman to kepe house, and to be a ioyfull mother of children. Halleluya.

The cxiij. Psalme.

WHEN Israel came out of Egipte, ⁊ the house of Iacob ^e from amonge that straunge people. Iuda was his Sāctuary, Israel his dominion. ^f The see sawe that, and fled, Iordan turned backe. The mountaynes skipped like rammes, ⁊ the litle hilles like yonge shepe. What ayled the (o thou see) that thou fleddest? and thou Iordan, that thou turnedest backe? Ye mountaynes, that ye skipped like rammes? and ye litle hilles, like yonge shepe? The earth trembled at the presence of the LORDE, at the presence of the God of Iacob. ^g Which turned the harderocke in to a stondinge water, ⁊ the flynst stone in to a sprynginge well.

Here the Hebrues begynne the cxv. psalme.

B Not vnto vs (o LORDE) not vnto vs, but vnto thy name geue the prayse, for thy louinge mercy and faithfulness. Wherefore shal the Heithen saye: ^h where is now thy God?

As for oure God, he is in heauen, he doth what souer it pleaseth him. Their ymagēs are but syluer and golde, euen the worke of mens hōdes. ⁱ They haue mouthes, and speake not: eyes haue they, but they se not.

They haue eares, and heare not: noses haue they, but they smell not. They haue handes and handle not, fete haue they, but they can not go, nether can they speake thorow their throte. They that made them, are like vnto them, and so are all such as put their trust in them. But let Israel trust in ȝ LORDE, for he is their succoure ⁊ defence.
Let the house of Aaron put their trust in ȝ
LORDE, for he is their succoure ⁊ defence. ^k
They that feare the LORDE, let thē put their trust in the LORDE, ^l for he is their succoure and defence. The LORDE is myndefull of vs, ⁊ blesseth vs: he blesseth ȝ house of Israel, he blesseth ȝ house of Aaron. Yee he blesseth all them that feare the LORDE, both small ⁊ greate. ^m The LORDE encrease you more ⁊ more: you, and youre childrē. For ye are ȝ blessed of the LORDE, which made heauen ⁊ earth.
All the whole heauens are the LORDES, but the earth hath he geuē vnto ȝ childrē of men. ⁿ The deed prayse not the (o LORDE)
nether all they that go downe in to sylence.
But we will prayse the LORDE, from this tyme forth for euermore. Halleluya.

The cxiij. Psalme.

I AM wel pleased, ȝ the LORDE hath herde ȝ voyce of my prayer. That he hath enclined his eare vnto me, therefore wil
I call vpo him as longe as I lyue. ^o The snares of death cōpased me rounde aboute.
the paynes of hell gat holde vpon me, I founde trouble and heynnesse. Then called I vpon ȝ name of the LORDE: o LORDE, delyuer my soule. Gracious is ȝ LORDE ⁊
rightuous, yee oure God is mercifull.

The LORDE preserueth ȝ symple, I was brought downe, and he helped me. Turne

The cvb. Psalme.

This psalme do the Hebrues ioyn vnto it that goeth before, and it is with them the cxvi. psalme.

I BELEUED, and therefore haue I spokē, but I was sore troubled. I sayde in my haist: All men are lyers.

What rewarde shal I geue vnto \hat{y} LORDE, for all the benefites \hat{y} he hath done vnto me? I wil receaue the cuppe of saluaciō, and call vpon the name of the LORDE.

I wil paye my vowes in the presence of all his people, right deare in the sight of \hat{y} LORDE is the death of his sayntes. O LORDE, I am thy seruaunt, I am thy seruaunt, and the sonne of thy handmayden, thou hast broken my boudes in sonder. I wil offre the ⁴the sacrifice of thankes geuyng, and wil call vpon the name of the LORDE. I wil paye my vowes vnto the LORDE in the sight of all his people, in the courtes of the LORDES house, euē in the myddest of the, o Ierusalem. Halleluya.

The cvbi. Psalme.

O PRAYSE the LORDE all ye Gentiles. I laude him all ye people. ⁶For his mercifull kyndnes is euer more and more toward vs, and the truth of the LORDE endureth for euer. Halleluya.

The cvbij. Psalme.

O GEUE thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. ⁴Let Israel now confesse, \hat{y} his mercy endureth for euer. Let the house of Aaron now confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. Yee let thē now that feare the LORDE, confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. I called vpon the LORDE in trouble, and the LORDE herde me at large. The LORDE is my helper, ⁴I wil not feare what man doeth vnto me. The LORDE is my helper, and I shal se my desyre vpon myne enemies. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidence in man. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put eny confidēce in prynces. All Heithen compassed me rounde aboute, but in the name of the LORDE wil I destroye thē.

They kepte me in on euery syde, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them.

They came aboute me like bees, and were as hote as the fyre in the thornes, but in the name of the LORDE I wil destroye them.

They thrust at me, that I might fall, but the LORDE was my helpe. ⁷The LORDE is my strēth, and my songe, and is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye and myrth is in the dwellynges of \hat{y} rightuous, for \hat{y} right hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victory.

The right hande of the LORDE hath the preemynence, the right hāde of the LORDE hath gottē the victory. I wil not dye, but lyue, and declare the workes of the LORDE.

The LORDE hath chastened and correcte me, but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death.

⁸Open me the gates of rightuousnes, \hat{y} I maye go in there thorow, and geue thākes vnto the LORDE. This is the dore of the LORDE, the rightuous shall entre in thorow it.

I thanke the, \hat{y} thou hast herde me, and art become my saluaciō. ⁹The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDES doinge, and it is maruelous in oure eyes. This is the daye which the LORDE hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it. Helpe now o LORDE, o LORDE sende vs now prosperite.

¹⁰Blessed be he that cōmeth in the name of the LORDE, we wish you good lucke, ye that be of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE, and hath shewed vs light: O garnish the solempne feast with grene braunches, euē vnto the hornes of \hat{y} altar. Thou art my God, and I wil thanke the: thou art my God, and I wil prayse the. O geue thanks vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.

The cxiij. Psalme.

¶ LIFT vp myne eyes vnto the hilles, frō whence cometh my helpe? My helpe cōmeth euen from the LORDE, which hath made heauen and earth. He will not suffre thy fote to be moued, and he ŷ kepeth the, slepeth not. Beholde, he that kepeth Israel, doth nether slombre ner slepe. The LORDE himself is thy keeper, the LORDE is thy defence vpon thy right honde. So that the Sonne shal not burne the by daye, nether the Moone by night. The LORDE preserueth the from all euell, yee it is the LORDE that kepeth thy soule. The LORDE preserueth thy goinge out and thy cōmyng in, from this tyme forth for euermore.

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

¶ WAS glad, when they sayde vnto me: we wil go in to the house of the LORDE. Oure fete shal stonde in thy gates, O Ierusalem. Ierusalē is buylded as a cite, that is at vnite in it self. For there ŷ trybes go vp, euen the trybes of the LORDE: to testifie vnto Israel, to geue thanckes vnto the name of the LORDE. For there is the seate of iudgement, euē the seate of the house of Dauid. O praye for the peace of Ierusalē, they shal prospere that loue the. Peace be within thy walles, and plenteousnes within thy palaces. For my brethren and companions sakes, I wil wish the prosperite. Yee because of ŷ house of the LORDE oure God, I wil seke to do the good.

The cxiij. Psalme.

¶ VNTO the lift I vp myne eyes, ^a thou ŷ dwellest in the heauens. Beholde, euen as the eyes of seruauētes loke vnto the handes of their masters: and as the eyes of a mayden vnto the handes of hir mastresse, euen so oure eyes wayte vpon the LORDE oure God, vtill he haue mercy vpō vs. Haue mercy vpō vs (o LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, for we are vtterly despyed. Oure soule is fylled with the scornfull reprofe of the welthy, & with \hat{y} despitefulnesse of the proude.

The cxxij. A psalme of Dauid.

IF the LORDE had not bene of oure syde (now maye Israel saye) Yf the LORDE had not bene of oure syde, whē mē rose vp agaynst vs: ^aThey had swallowed vs vp quycke, when they were so wrothfully displeasēd at vs. ^bYee the waters had drowned vs, the streame had gone ouer oure soule.

The depe waters of the proude had gone euē vnto oure soule. But praysed be \hat{y} LORDE, which hath not geuen vs ouer for a pray vnto their teth. Oure soule is escaped, euen as a byrde out of the snare of \hat{y} fouler: \hat{y} snare is brokē, and we are delyuered. ^cOure helpe stōdeth in the name of the LORDE, which hath made heauen and earth.

The cxxiiij. Psalme.

THEY that put their trust in \hat{y} LORDE, are euē as the mount Sion, ^dwhich maye not be remoued, but stōdeth fast for euer. The hilles stonde aboute Ierusalem, euen so stondesth the LORDE rounde aboute his people, frō this tyme forth for euermore. That the rodd of the vngodly come not in to the lott of the righteous, lest the righteous put their honde vnto wickednesse. Do wel (o LORDE) vnto those that be good and true of herte. As for such as turne backe vnto their owne wickednesse, ^ethe LORDE shal lede them forth with the euell doers: but peace be vpon Israel.

The cxxv. Psalme.

WHEN the LORDE turneth agayne \hat{y} captiuyte of Sion, then shal we be like vnto them that dreame. Thē shal oure mouth be fylled with laughter, and oure tonge with ioye. Then shal it be sayed amonge the Heithen: the LORDE hath done greate thinges for them. Yee the LORDE hath done greate thinges for vs already, wherof we reioyse. Turne oure captiuyte (o LORDE) as the ryuers in the south. ^fThey that sowe in teeres, shal reape in ioye. He \hat{y} now goeth his waye wepige & beareth forth good sede, shal come agayne with ioye, and brynge his sheaues with him.

The cxxvi. A psalme of Salomon.

EXCEPT the LORDE buylde the house, ^gtheir labour is but lost that buylde it. ^h

Excepte the LORDE kepe the cite, the watchman waketh but in vayne. ⁱIt is but lost labour that ye ryse vp early, and take no rest, but eate the bred of carefulnesse: ^jfor loke to whom it pleaseth him, he geueth it in slepe. Lo, children and \hat{y} frute of the wombe are an heretage and gift, that cometh of the LORDE. Like as the arowes in the hōde of the giaūte, euē so are the yonge childrē.

Happie is the mā, \hat{y} hath his quyuer full of them: they shal not be ashamed, when they speake with their enemies in the gate.

The cxxvij. Psalme.

BLESSED are all they ^kthat feare the LORDE, & walke in his wayes. For thou shalt eate the laboures of thine owne hondes: o well is the, happie art thou. Thy wife shalbe as a frutefull vyne vpon the walles of thy house. Thy children like the olyue braunches rōude aboute thy table. Lo, thus shal \hat{y} mā be blessed, \hat{y} feareth the LORDE. ^lThe LORDE shal so blesse the out of Sion, that thou shalt se Ierusalē in prosperite all thy life longe. Yee that thou shalt se thy childers childrē, & peace vpō Israel.

The cxxviii. Psalme.

MANY a tyme haue they fought agaynst ^mme fro my youth vp (maye Israel now saie). Yee many a tyme haue they fought agaiſt me fro my youth vp, but they haue not ouercome me. The plowers plowed vpō my backe, & made lōge forowes. But the righteous LORDE hath hewen \hat{y} yocke of \hat{y} vngodly in peces. Let them be confounded & turned backwarde, as many as haue euell will at Sion. ⁿLet thē be euē as the haye vpon the house toppes, which wythereth afore it be pluckte vp.

Wherof the mower fylleth not his hande, nether he that byndeth vp the sheaues, his bosome. So that they which go by, saye not so moch as: the LORDE prospere you, we wish you good lucke in the name of the LORDE.

ICRIE vnto the LORDE with my voyce, I yee euē vnto the LORDE do I make my supplicacion. I poure out my complaynte before him, and shewe him of my trouble. When my sprete is in heuynesse, for thou knowest my path: in the waye where in I walke, haue they preuely layed a snare for me. I loke vpon my right honde & se, there is no man that wil knowe me. I haue no place to fle vnto, no man careth for my soule. Therefore do I erie vnto the (o LORDE) and saye: thou art my hope and my porcion, in the londe of the luyngē. Cōsidre my complaynte, for I am brought very lowe. HEARE my prayer (o LORDE) considre my desyre: answer me for thy truth & righteousnesse sake. And entre not in to iudgment with thy seruaunt, for in thy sight shal no man luyngē be iustified. ^d For the enemie persecuteth my soule, he smyteth my life downe to the grounde, he layeth me in the darknesse, as the deed men of the worlde. Therefore is my sprete vexed within me, and my herte within me is desolate. Yet do I remēbre the tymes past, ^e I muse vpō all thy workes, yee I exercise my self in the workes of thy hondes. ^f I stretch forth my hondes vnto the, my soule crieth vnto the out of the thyrstie londe. Oh let me heare thy louynge kyndnesse by tymes in the mornynge, for in the is my trust: shewe thou me the waye that I shulde walke in, for I lift vp my soule vnto the. Delyuer me (o LORDE) fro myne enemies, for I resorte vnto the.

Teach me to do the thinge that pleaseth the, for thou art my God: let thy louynge sprete lede me forth vnto the londe of righteousnesse. That oure garners maye be full and plenteous with all maner of stoare: that oure shepe maye brynge forth thousandes and hundreth thousandes in oure villages. That oure oxen maye be stronge to labour, that there be no myschaunce, no decaye, and no complayninge in oure stretes.

Happie are the people that be in such a case: yee blessed are the people, which haue the LORDE for their God.^b

The cxiij. A psalme of Dauid.

I WIL magnifie the (o my God τ kyng) I wil prayse thy name for euer τ euer. Every daye wil I geue thanks vnto the, and prayse thy name for euer and euer. Greate is the LORDE, τ maruelous worthy to be prayسد, there is no ende of his greatnesse. One generacion shal prayse thy workes vnto another, and declare thy power. As for me I wil be talkige of thy worshippe, thy glory, thy prayse and woderous workes.

So that men shal speake of the might of thy maruelous actes, and tell of thy greatnes.

The memoriall of thy abundaunt kyndnes shal be shewed, and mē shal synge of thy righteousness. The LORDE is gracious and mercifull, longe sufferyng τ of greate goodnesse. The LORDE is louyng vnto euery man, and his mercy is ouer all his workes.

All thy workes prayse the (o LORDE) and thy sayntes geue thanks vnto the. They shewe the glory of thy kyngdome, and talke of thy power. That thy power, thy glory

τ mightynesse of thy kyngdome might be knowne vnto men. Thy kyngdome is an cuerlastinge kyngdome, τ thy dominion endureth thorow out all ages. The LORDE vpholdeth all such as shulde fall, and lifteth vp all those that be downe. The eyes of all wayte vpon the, and thou geuest them their meate in due season. Thou openest thine hāde, and fyllest all thinges lyuyng with plenteousnesse. The LORDE is righteous in all his wayes, τ holy in all his workes. The LORDE is nye vnto all them that call vpon him, yee all such as call vpon him faithfully.

He fulfilleth the desyre of them that feare him, he heareth their crye, and helpeth them.

The LORDE preserueth all them that loue him, but scattereth abroad all the vngodly.

My mouth shal speake the prayse of the LORDE, And let all flesh geue thanks vnto his holy name for euer and euer. Halleluya.

The cxlv. Psalme.

PRAYSE the LORDE (o my soule:) whyle I lyue wil I prayse the LORDE, yee as lōge as I haue eny beyng, I wil synge praises vnto my God. O put not youre trust in pryces, ner in the childe of man, for there is no helpe in thē. For when \ddot{y} breth of man goeth forth, he shal turne agayne to his earth, and so all his thoghtes perishe. Blessed is he that hath \ddot{y} God of Iacob for his helpe, and whose hope is in the LORDE his God. Which made heauen and earth, \ddot{y} see and all that therin is, which kepeth his promise for euer. Which helpeth them to right \ddot{y} suffre wronge, which fedeth \ddot{y} hongrie. The LORDE lowseth men out of preson, the LORDE geueth sight to the blynde.

The LORDE helpeth thē vp that are fallen, the LORDE loueth the righteous. The LORDE careth for the straungers, he defendeth \ddot{y} fatherlesse and wyddowe: as for the waye of \ddot{y} vngodly, he turneth it vpsyde downe. The LORDE thy God (o Sion) is kyng for euermore, and thorow out all generacions. Halleluya.

PRAYSE ⁊ LORDE o Ierusalē, praye thy God o Sion. For he maketh fast ⁊ barres of thy gates, ⁊ blesseth thy childrē within ⁊. He maketh peace in thy borders, ⁊ fylleth ⁊ with ⁊ floure of wheate. The ende of the Psalter.

SELA. In the psalter this worde Sela commeth very oft, and (after the mynde of the īterpreters) it is asmoch to saye as, allwaye, contynnally, for euer, forsoyth, verely, a liftinge vp of the voyce, or to make a pause and earnestly to consider, and to ponder the sentēce.

The Proverbes of Salomon.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The wysdome of God calleth vs by the mouth of Salomō, exorteth vs, and geueth vs warnyng to eschue the wicked : whose vngodly cōuersacion in worde and worke, and punyshment also of the same, is here descrybed.

Chap. II.

How wysdome maye be gotten, and what profit commeth of it.

Chap. III.

He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience : he commendeth wysdome, & requyret us to cleue vnto the same.

Chap. IIII.

A fatherly exortacion vnto wysdome, with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the mēbres of oure body frō euell.

Chap. V.

He exorteth vnto wysdōe, and to beware of harlottes : he telleth what harme maye folowe therout, whē men medle with such : he teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their married wyues, and descrybeth the ende of the vngodly.

Chap. VI.

He warneth men to beware of suertishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to labour, sheweth the wikednesse of false tonges, and requyret men to beware of aduoutry, because it is more perlous then theft or felony.

Chap. VII.

He exorteth vnto wysdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt happeneth vnto such as encline to the prouocaciōs and desyres of the flesh.

Chap. VIII.

Wysdome calleth men swetely vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wysdome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vnto her.

Chap. IX.

Wysdome crieth vpō the ignoraūt, and promiseth them greate thinges. The foolish maner of a light woman.

Chap. X.

From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, louely and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it : Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurte therof.

Chap. XXXI.

Wysdome warneth vs to beware of euell women, and descrybeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behaoure of an honest married wyfe.

THESE are the prouerbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kyng of Israel : to lerne wysdome, nurtoure, vnderstandinge, prudence, rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstandinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal cōme by more wysdome : and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstonde a parable, and the interpretacion therof : the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speeches of the same. ^aThe feare of the LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome. But fooles despyse wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

MY sonne, heare thy fathers doctryne, and forsake not the lawe of thy mother: for that shal brynge grace vnto thy heade, ⁊ shal be a cheyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, cōsente not vnto symers,^a yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for bloude, ⁊ lurke preuely for the innocēt wythout a cause: let us swalowe thē vp like y^b hell,^c let us deuoure thē quyeke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyles. Cast in thy loitt amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou with them, refrayne thy fote frō their wayes. For their fete rūne to euell, ⁊ are haistie to shed bloude. But in vayne is y^b net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. Yee they thē selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of thē wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all such as be couetous, that one wolde rauysh anothers life.

Wyszdone crieth without,^d ⁊ putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before y^b congregacion in y^b open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow y^b cite, sayenge: O ye childrē, how lōge wil ye loue childyshnesse? how longe wil y^b scorners delyte in scornynge, ⁊ y^b vnwyse be enemics vnto knowlege? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstōde my wordes. CSeinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my cōcels haue ye despysed, and set my correcciōs at naught. Therefore shal I also laugh in youre destruccion, and mocke you, when y^b thinge that ye feare cōmeth vpon you: euen whē y^b thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in sodenly like a storme, and youre miserye like a tempest: yee whā trouble and vyynessee cōmeth vpon you. Then shal they call vpō me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And y^b because they hated knowlege, and receaued not y^b feare of y^b LORDE, but abhorred my counsell, and despysed my correccion. Therefore shal they eate y^b frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled with their owne counceles: for y^b turnynge awaye of y^b vnwyse shal slaye thē, ⁊ y^b prosperite of fooles shalbe their owne destruccion. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell safely,^e and haue ynough without eny feare of euell.

The ij. Chapter.

MY sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, ⁊ kepe my cōmaundemētes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstōdinge. For yf thou criest after wysdome, ⁊ callest for knowlege: yf thou sekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: Thē shalt thou vnderstōde y^b feare of the LORDE, and fynde y^b knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geueth wysdome,^f out of his mouth commeth knowlege and vnderstōdinge. He preserueth y^b welfare of the righteous, and defendeth them y^b walke innocently: he kepeth them in y^b right path, and preserueth y^b waye of his sayntes. BThen shalt thou vnderstōde rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. Yf wysdome entre in to thine herte, and thy soule delyte in knowlege: then shal counsell preserue the, and vnderstōdinge shal kepe the. That thou mayest be delyuered frō y^b euell waye, and from the man y^b speaketh frowarde things. From such as leaue the hie strete, and walke ī y^b wayes of darcknesse: which reioyse in doyng euell, and delyte ī wicked thinges: whose wayes are croked, and their pathes slauderous.

CThat thou mayest be delyuered also from the straunge woman, and from her that is not thine owne: which geueth swete wordes, forsaketh the huszbande of hir youth, and forgetteth the couenaunt of hir God. For hir house is enclyned vnto death, and hir pathes vnto hell. All they that go in vnto her, come not agayne, nether take they holde of the waye of life.

That thou mayest walke in y^b good waye, and kepe the pathes of the righteous. For the iust shal dwell in the londe, and the innocentes shal remayne in it: but the vngdyd shalbe roted out of y^b londe, and the wicked doers shalbe taken out of it.

So shalt thou fynde fauoure and good vnderstandinge in ſ̄ sight of God and men. Put thy trust in ſ̄ LORDE with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordre thy goings. ^aBe not wyse in thine owne conceate, but feare ſ̄ LORDE and departe from euell: so shal thy navel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

B ^bHonoure the LORDE with thy substance, ⁊ with ſ̄ firstlings of all thine increase: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despye not the chastenyng of ſ̄ LORDE, nether faynte when thou art rebuked of him. For whō the LORDE loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wyszdome, ⁊ opteyneth vnderstandinge, for th^e gettinge of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, ⁊ the profit of it is better then golde. Wyszdome is more worth thē precious stones, ^c⁊ all ſ̄ thynges ſ̄ thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, ⁊ vpon hir left hande is riches ⁊ honour.

Hir wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tre of life ^d to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

Then shalt thou walke safely in thy waye, ⁊ thy fote shal not stomble. Yf thou slepest, thou shalt not be afrayed, ^ebut shalt take thy rest ⁊ slepe swetely. Thou needest not to be afrayed of eny sodane feare, nether for the violent rusinge in of the vngodly, when it commeth.

For the LORDE shal be besyde the, ⁊ kepe

thy fote ſ̄ thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shulde haue it, so longe as thine hande is able to do it. Saye not vnto thy neghboure: go thy waye ⁊ come agayne, tomorrow wil I geue the: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neghboure, seyng he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Stryue not lightly with eny man, where as he hath done ſ̄ no harme. ^fFolowe not a wicked man, and chose none of his wayes: for the LORDE abhorreth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORDE is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellinges of the righteous.

As for the scornefull, he shal laugh thē to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue honour in possession, but shame is the promociō that fooles shal haue.

Chc iiii. Chapter.

Get the wyszdome, get the vnderstandinge, forget not ſ̄ wordes of my mouth, ⁊ shrēke not from them. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue the: loue her, and she shal kepe the. The chefe poynte of opteyne wyszdome is, that thou be wyllyng to opteyne wyszdome, and before all thy goodes to get the vnderstandinge. Make moch of her, ^hand she shal promote the: Yee yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge the vnto honour.

B She shal make the a gracious heade, and garnish the with ſ̄ crowne of glory. Hearre my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that the yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe the the ſ̄ waye of wyszdome, and lede the in the right pathes. So that yf thou goest therein, there shal no straytnesse hynder the: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. The v. Chapter.

MY sonne, geue hede vnto my wysdome, ⁊ bowe thine eare vnto my prudēce: ⁊ thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nourtoure.

For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge hony combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at ⁊ last she is as bitter as wornwood, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir steppes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vustedfast are hir wayes, that thou canst not knowe them. Hearre me therfore (o my sonne) and departe not frō the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye ⁊ dores of hir house. That thou geue not thine honoure vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell.

That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, ⁊ that thy labours come not in a straunge house. Yee that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes) and then saye: Alas, why hated I nourtoure? why dyd my hert despyse correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, ⁊ herkened not vnto them that in-fourmed me? I am come almost in to all mysfortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne sprīges. Let thy welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, ⁊ not straungers with the. Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louyng is the hynde, and frendly is the Roo: let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another womā? For eury mā's wayes are open in the sight of the LORDE, and he pōdereth all their goings. The wickednesses of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greate foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The vi. Chapter.

Therfore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come ī to thy neighbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, ⁊ intreate thy neighbour: let not thine eyes slepe, ner thine eye lyddes slomber. Saue thy self as a doo frō ⁊ honde, ⁊ as a byrde frō the hōde of the fouler. Go to the Emmet (thou slogarde) cōsidre hir wayes, ⁊ lerne to be wyse. She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, ⁊ gathereth hir foode together ī ⁊ haruest. There be sixe thynges, which the LORDE hateth, & the seuenth he vtterly abhorreth: ^c A proude loke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte ^γ goeth aboute with wicked ymaginaciōs, ^b fete that be swift in rennyng to do myschefe, a false wytnesse ^γ bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethren. My sonne, kepe thy fathers cōmaundemētes, & forsake not ^γ lawe of thy mother. Put thē vp together in thine herte, and hynde thē aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art aslepe, & ^γ when thou awakest, thou mayest talke of thē (For the commaundement is a lanterne, and the lawe a light: yee chastenyng & nurtoure is ^γ waye of life) that they maye kepe the frō the euell woman, ^a & frōm the flaterynge tonge of the harlott: ^γ thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be takē with hir fayre lokes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bred, but a maried woman wil hunt for ^γ precious life. Maye a man take fyre in his bosome, and his clothes not be brent? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth in to his neighbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. ^d Men do not vtterly despyse a thefe, that stealeth to satisfie his soule, when he is hongerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seuen tymes asmoch, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so cōmitteth aduourtie with a womā, he is a foole, and bryngeth his life to destruccion. He getteth him self also shame & dishonoure, soch as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wrath of the mā will not be ^γ treated, no though thou woldest ofre him greate giftes to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

The viij. Chapter.

^a MY sonne, kepe my wordes, & laye vp my cōmaundemētes by the. ^f Kepe my cōmaundemētes & my lawe, euē as the aple of thine eye, & thou shalt lyue. Bynde them vpon thy fyngers, & wryte thē in the table of thine hert. Saye vnto wysdome: thou art my sister, and call vnderstandinge thy kynswoman: ^a that she maye kepe ^γ frō ^γ straūge womā, & frō ^γ harlot which geneth swete wordes. For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thorow the trelies, & behelde the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye towards the harlottes house in the twilight of the euenynge, when it begāne now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a disceatfull, wāton & an vnstedfast womā: whose fete coude not abyde in ^γ house, now is she without, now ī ^γ stretes, & lurketh ī eury corner) she caught ^γ yōge mā, kyssed him & was not ashamed, sayēge: I had a vowe to paye, & this daye I performe it. Therefore came I forth to mete the, that I might seke thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue deckte my bed with coueringes & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrre, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye together, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of moneye with him, who can tell whē he cōmeth home? ^c Thus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flaterynge lippes she wanne him.

Immediatly he foloweth her, as it were an oxe led to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where fooles are punyshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darte: like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parell of his life lyeth there vpō. Hearre me now therefore (o my sonne) and mareke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaid in hir pathes. For many one hath she wōuded and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Hir house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

Stondeth she not in the hyc places in the stretes & wayes? doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childre of mē) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto knowlege o ye ignorant, be wyse in herte o ye fooles. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate matters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkynge of ŷ trueth, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are rightuous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therin. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstōde, & right to thē that fynde knowlege. Receaue my doctrine therfore and not syluer,^a & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, yee all the thinges that thou cast desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

B I wysdome haue my dwellynge with knowlege, and prudent counsell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and ŷ eschynge of euell. As for pryde, disdayne, an euell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wicked thiges, I vitterly abhorre thē. I can geue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstandinge, I haue strength.

Thorow me, kynges reigne: ^b thorow me, prīces make iust lawes. Thorow me, lordes beare rule, and all iudges of ŷ earth execute iudgment. I am louynge vnto those that loue me, and they that seke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are with me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is better thē golde & precious stone, & myne increase more worth then fyne syluer. I walke in ŷ waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudgment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to increase their treasure.

C The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnyng of his wayes, or euer he beganne his workes afore tyme. ^c I haue bene ordered frō euerlastige, & frō ŷ begynnyng or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundations of ŷ mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. ^d For when he made the heauens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordre: when he hanged the cloudes aboue: when he fastened the sprynges of the depe: ^e When he shutt the see within certayne bowndes, that ŷ waters shulde not go ouer their marckes. When he layed the foundations of the earth, I was with him, ordryng all thinges, delytynge daylie & reioysynge allwaye before him. As for the roude cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my delyte is to be amōge the children of men.^f

Therefore harken vnto me (o ye children) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nourtoure, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is ŷ man that heareth me, watchynge daylie at my gates, & geuyng attendaunce at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal optayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The ii. Chapter.

WYSDOME hath buylded herself an house, and bewen out seven pilers: she hath slaughted, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crie vpō the hiest place of the cite: Who so is ignorant, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bred, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. Forsake ignoraūce, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstandinge.

Who so reproueth a scornfull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, stayneth himself.

Reproue not a scorner, lest he owe the euell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil loue the. Geue a discrete man but an occasion, & he wilbe the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome, ^g & the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderstandinge. For thorow me thy dayes shalbe prolonged, and the yeares of thy life shal be many. Yf thou be wyse, thy wysdome shal do thy selfe good: but yf thou thinkest scorne therof, it shalbe thine owne harme. A foolish reslesse woman, full of wordes, and

Who so is ignorant (sayeth she) let him come hither, and to the vnwyse she sayeth: stollen waters are swete, & the bred that is preuely eaten, hath a good taist.

But they cōsider not that death is there, and that hir gesteres go downe to hell.

The r. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

A WYSE sonne maketh a glad father, but an vndiscrete sonne is the heynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wickedly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuousnesse deluyeth from death. ^a The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth ^ȝ vngodly frō his desyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quycke laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Sommer, is wyse: but he that is slogish in haruest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louynge and fauorable is the face of the rightuous, but ^ȝ fore heade of the vngodly is past shame, and presumptuous.

The memoriall of the iust shall haue a good reporte, but the name of the vngodly shal styneke. A wyse man wil receaue warnynge, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face.

B He that leadeth an innocent life, walketh surely: ^a but who so goeth a wrōge waye, shalbe knowne. He ^ȝ wynketh with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shalbe beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but ^ȝ mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vp strife, ^b but louie couereth ^ȝ multitude of synnes.

In ^ȝ lippes of him ^ȝ hath vnderstōdinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but ^ȝ rodde belōgeth to ^ȝ backe of ^ȝ foolish. Wyse mē laye vp knowlege, but ^ȝ mouth of ^ȝ foolish is nye destruccion. The rich mās goodes are his strōge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

The rightuous laboureth to do good, but the vngodly vseth his increase vnto synne.

C To take hede vnto ^ȝ chastenynge of nurture, is ^ȝ waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wrōge. Dissemblynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slaunder, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysest of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the rightuous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne foly. ^c The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for carefull trauaile, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly & maketh but a sporte of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to beware of soch.

The thinge that the vngodly are afrayed of, shal come vpon them, but the rightuous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer & is nomore sene, but the rightuous remayneth sure for euer. As vyneger is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto ^ȝ eyes, euē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of ^ȝ LORDE maketh a lōge life, but ^ȝ yeares of ^ȝ vngodly shal be shortened. The pacient abydinge of the rightuous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geueth a corage vnto ^ȝ godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. ^d The rightuous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, ^e but ^ȝ vngodly shal not remayne in the londre. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the rightuous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

The ri. Chapter.

A FALSE balance is an abhominacion vnto the LORDE, ^a but a true weight pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealyng of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaithfulnesse of the despyers shalbe their owne destruccion. ^b Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but rightuousnesse deluyeth frō death. The rightuousnesse of ^ȝ innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. The rightuousnesse of the iust shal deluyeth them, but the despyers shalbe taken in their owne vngodlynesse. When an 33 vngodly man dyeth, his hope is gone, the confidence of riches shal perish. The rightuous shalbe deluyered out of trouble, ⁊ the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thorow ſ̄ mouth of ſ̄ dyssembler is his neghboure destroyed, but thorow knowlege shal the iust be deluyered. ^a When it goeth well with the rightuous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but when the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slaunder of his neghboure, but a wyse man wil kepe it secreet. ^b A dyssemblynge person wil discour preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. ^c Where no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealth. ^d He that is suertye for a straunger, hurteth himself: but he that meddeth not with suerteshippe, is sure. A gracious womā manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne riches. He ſ̄ hath a gentle liberal stomacke, is mercifull: but who so hurteth his neghboure, is a tyraūt.

^e The labour of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth rightuosnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as rightuousnes bryngeth life, euē so to cleue vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. It shal not helpe ſ̄ wicked, though they laye all their hondes together, but the sede of the rightuous shalbe preserued. A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a rynge of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust labour for peace and traūquylite, but the vngodly for disquyetnesse.

^f Some man geueth out his goodes, and is the richer, but ſ̄ nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothinge, and yet is euer in poerte. ^g He that is lyberall in geuynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vp his corne, shalbe cursd amonge the people: but blessinge shal light vpon his heade that selleth it. He that laboureth for honesty fyndeth his desyre: but who so seketh after myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. He that trusteth in his riches, shal haue a fall,

Who so maketh disquyetnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heretage, and the foole shal be seruaunt to the wyse.

The frute of the rightuous is as the tre of life, a wyse man also wynneth mens soules. ⁱ Yf ſ̄ rightuous be recōpēsed vpō earth, how moch more thē the vngodly ⁊ ſ̄ synner?

The xij. Chapter.

WHO so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformerd: but he that hateth to be reprod, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE; but ſ̄ wicked wyl he condemne. A man cā not endure in vngodlynesse, but ſ̄ rote of ſ̄ righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir huszbonde: but she that behaueh herself vnonestly, is a corrupcion in his bones. The thoughtes of ſ̄ righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye wayte for bloude, but the mouth of ſ̄ righteous wil deluyer them. Or euer thou canst turne the aboute, the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde.

A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despysed. A simple man which laboureth and worketh, is better thē one that is gorgious and wanteth bred.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his catell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. ^m He that tilleth his lōde, shal haue plenteusnesse of bred: but he ſ̄ foloweth ydylnes, is a very foole. The desyre of ſ̄ vngodly hunteth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. ⁿ The wicked falleth in to the snare thorow ſ̄ malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Euery man shal enioye good acordinge to the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his hādes shal he be rewarded. ^o Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be coiteced. A foole vttereth his wrath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgeueth wronge. A iust man will tell the trueth, ⁊ shewe the thinge ſ̄ is right: but a false wytnesse disceaueh. A slaundersonne pricketh like a swerde, but a wyse mans tonge is wholsome. A true mouth is euer constāt, but a dyssemblinge tōge is soone chaunged. They that ymagin euell in their mynde, wil disceauē: but the counceilers of peace shal haue ioye folowing thē. There shal no mysfortune happen vnto the iust, but the vngodly shal be fylled with misery. ^aThe LORDE abhorreth disceatfull lippes, but they that labour for treuth, please him. He that hath vnderstōdinge, can hyde his wysdome: but an vndiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligēt hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Heuynesse discourageth ŷ herte of man,^b but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberrall vnto his neighbour, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceauē them selues. A disceatfull man shal fynde no vātage, but he that is content with that he hath,^c is more worth thē golde. In the waye of righteousnesse there is life, as for eny other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The iiii. Chapter.

A WYSE sonne wyll receaue his fathers warnynge, but he ŷ is scornefull, wyll not heare when he is reprovēd. A good mā shal enjoye the frute of his mouth, but he that hath a frowarde mynde, shalbe spoyled. He that kepeth his mouth, kepeth his life: but who so speaketh vnadysed, fyndeth harme. The slogarde wolde fayne haue, and can not get his desyre: but the soule of the diligent shal haue plenty. A righteous man abhorreth lyes, but the vngodly shameth both other and himself. Righteousnesse kepeth the innocēt in the waye, but vngodlynesse shal ouerthrowe the synner.

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge:^d agayne, some mē are poore hauynge greate riches. With goodes euery man deuyereth his life, and the poore wyl not be reprovēd. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull,^e but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysement, there is wyszdome. Hastely gottē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tarienge for a thinge that is dyffered, greueth ŷ herte: but when the desyre cometh, it is a tre of life. Who so despyseth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the cōmaundement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstōdinge geueth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despysers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly messaiger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitoure is wholsome. He that thinketh scorne to be reformed, commeth to pouerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honoure. When a desyre is brought to passe, it delyteth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschuet euell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a cōpanyō of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschefe foloweth vpon synners, but the righteous shal haue a good rewarde. Which their childers childrē shal haue in possessiō, for^f the riches of the synner is layed vp for ŷ iust. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the felde of the poore, and shalbe increased out of measure. ^gHe that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, holdeth him euer in nurture. The righteous eateth, and is satisfied, but ŷ bely of the vngodly hath neuer ynough.

The iiii. Chapter.

A WYSE womā vpholdeth hir house, but a foolish wife plucketh it downe.

Who so feareth the LORDE, walketh in the right path: and regardeth not him that abhorreth the wayes of the LORDE. In the mouth of the foolish is the boostinge of lordshipe, but ŷ lippes of ŷ wyse wilbe warre of soch. Where no oxen are, there the crybb is emptie: but where the oxen labour, there is moch frute. A faithfull wytnesse wyl not dyssemble, but a false recorde wil make a lye.

A scornefull body sekeh wyszdome, and fyndeth it not: but knowlege is easy to come by, vnto him that wil vnderstōde. ^hSe ŷ thou medle not with a foole, and do as though thou haddest no knowlege. The wyszdome of him that hath vnderstōdinge is, to take hede vnto his waye, but the foolishnesse of the vnwyse disceaueth. Fooles make but a sporte of

B synne, but there is fauourable loue amōge the righteous. The herte of him that hath vnderstandinge wil nether dispare for eny sorow, ner be to presumptuous for eny sodane ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe ouerthrowne, but the tabernacles of ꝑ righteous shal florish. ^aThere is a waye, which some men thinke to be right, but the ende therof ledeth vnto death. The herte is soroufull euen in laughter, and the ende of myrth is heynesse. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl beware of soch. An ignoraut body beleueth all thinges, but who so hath vnderstandinge, loketh well to his goinges. A wyse man feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpatient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

The euell shal bowe them selues before ꝑ good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the dores of the righteous. The poore is hated euen of his owne neyhbours, but the riche hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neyhboure, doth amysse: ^bbut blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that ymagin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpō good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulness. Diligēt labour bryngeth riches, but where many wayne wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignorance of fooles is very foolishnesse. A faithfull wytnesse delyuereth soules, but a lyar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto his he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the snares of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the conficiō of the prynce. Pacience is a token of wysdome, but wrath and haistie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A mery herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth awaye the bones. ^cHe that doth a poore man wrōge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is afrayed of euery parrill, but the righteous hath a good hope euē in death. Wysdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderstandinge, and he wyl teach them that are vnlearned. ^dRightuousnes setteth vp the people, but wyckednesse bryngeth folke to destruction. A discrete seruaunt is a pleasure vnto ꝑ kyng, but one ꝑ is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The xv. Chapter.

A SOFTE aswere^e putteth downe displeasure, but forwarde wordes prouoke vnto anger. A wyse tonge commendeth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in euery place, both vpon ꝑ good and badd. A wholesome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a broken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he ꝑ taketh hede whan he is reprovcd, shal haue ꝑ more vnderstōdinge.

In the house of the righteous are greate riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysordre. A wyse mouth poureth out knowlege, but ꝑ herte of the foolish doth not so. ^fThe LORDE abhorreth ꝑ sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominaciō vnto ꝑ LORDE, but who so foloweth righteousnes, him he loueth. He that forsaketh ꝑ right strete, shalbe sore punyshed: ^gwho so hateth correccion, falleth in to death. The hell with hir payne is knowne vnto the LORDE, how moch more then the hertes of men?

slouthfull is full of thornes, but \hat{y} strete of the righteous is well clenched. A wyse sonne maketh a glad father, but an vndiscrete body shameth his mother. A foole reioyseth in foolish thinges, but a wyse man loketh well to his owne goinges. Vnaduysed thoughtes shal come to naught, but where as are men \hat{y} can geue counsell, there is stedfastnesse. O how ioyfull a thinge is it, a man to geue a conuenient answer? O how pleasaunt is a worde spoken in due season? The waye of life ledeth vnto heauē, \hat{y} a man shulde beware of hell beneth.

D The LORDE wyl breake downe \hat{y} house of \hat{y} proude, but he shal make fast \hat{y} borders of \hat{y} wyddowe. The LORDE abhorreth \hat{y} ymaginacions of \hat{y} wicked, but pure wordes are pleasaunt vnto him. The couetous man wrutteth vp his owne house, but who so hateth rewardes, shal lyue. A righteous mā museth in his mynde how to do good, but \hat{y} mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth \hat{y} prayer of the righteous. Like as \hat{y} clearnesse of \hat{y} eyes reioyseth \hat{y} herte, so doth a good name fede \hat{y} bones. The eare \hat{y} harkeneth vnto wholesome warnynge, and enclyneth therto, shall dwell amonge \hat{y} wyse. He that refuseth to be reformed, despyseth his owne soule: but he that submytteth himself to correccion, is wyse.

The xvi. Chapter.

A THE feare of \hat{y} LORDE is \hat{y} right scyēce of wysdome, and lowlynes goeth before honoure. A man maye well purpose a thinge in his harte, but \hat{y} answer of \hat{y} tonge cōmeth of \hat{y} LORDE. ^aA mā thinketh all his waies to be clene, but it is \hat{y} LORDE \hat{y} fashioneth \hat{y} myndes. ^cCommytte thy workes vnto \hat{y} LORDE, and loke what thou deuysest, it shal prosper. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne sake, yee τ when he kepeth \hat{y} vngodly for \hat{y} daye of wrath.

The LORDE abhorreth all presumptuous τ proude hertes, there maye nether strength ner power escape. With louynge mercy τ faithfulness synnes be forgeuen, and who so feareth \hat{y} LORDE eschueth euell. When a mans wayes please \hat{y} LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle thinge with righteousnes, the greate rentes wrongeously gotten. ^dA mā deuyseth a waye in his herte, but it is \hat{y} LORDE \hat{y} ordreth his goinges. When \hat{y} prophesy is in \hat{y} lippes of \hat{y} kynge, his mouth shal not go wrōge in iudgment. ^eA true measure τ a true balauce are \hat{y} LORDES, he maketh all weigthes. It is a greate abhominaciō when kynges are wycked, for a kynge seate shulde be holden vp with righteousness.

Righteous lippes are pleasaūt vnto kynges, and they loue him \hat{y} speaketh \hat{y} trueth.

The kynges displeasure is a messaunger of death, but a wyse man wyl pacifie him.

The cherefull countenaunce of \hat{y} kynge is life, and his louynge fauoure is as the euenynge dewe. ^fTo haue wysdome in possession is better then golde, and to get vnderstandynge, is more worth then syluer. ^gThe path of \hat{y} righteous eschueth euell, τ who so loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne soule.

Presumptuousnes goeth before destruccio, and after a proude stomake there foloweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde with the lowly, then to deuyde \hat{y} spoyles with \hat{y} proude. He \hat{y} handleth a matter wysely, opteyneth good: τ blessed is he, ^h \hat{y} putteth his trust in \hat{y} LORDE. Who so hath a wyse vnderstandinge, is called to counsell: but he \hat{y} can speake fayre, getteth more riches. Vnderstandinge is a well of life vnto him \hat{y} hath it, as for \hat{y} chastenynge of fooles, it is but foolishnesse. The herte of the wyse enfourmeth his mouth, and amendeth \hat{y} doctryne in his lippes.

Fayre wordes are an hony combe, a refreshynge of \hat{y} mynde, τ health of \hat{y} bones.

ⁱThere is a waye \hat{y} men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeth vnto death. A troublous soule disqueteth hir selfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. ^jAn vngodly personne stereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whote burnynge fyre.

A frowarde body causeth strife, and he \hat{y} is a blabbe of his tonge, maketh deuysion amonge prynces. A wicked mā begyleth his neighbour, τ ledeth him \hat{y} waye \hat{y} is not good.

He that wyncketh with his eyes, ymagineth myschefe: and he \hat{y} byteth his lippes, wyl do

A pacient man is better then one that is ströge: and he that can rule him selfe, is more worth then he yf wyrmeth a cite. The lottes are cast in to the lappe, but their fall stödeth in the LORDE.

The xviij. Chapter.

BETTER is a drye morsell with quyetnesse, thē a full house and many fatt catell with stryfe. ^b A discrete seruauit shal haue more rule then the sonnes yf haue no wysdome, and shal haue like heretage with the brethren. ^c Like as syluer is tried in the fyre and golde in the furnace, euen so doth the LORDE proue the hertes. A wicked body holdeth moch of false lippes, τ a dyssemblynge persone geueth eare to a disceatfull töge. ^d Who so laugheth yf poore to scorne, blasphemeth his maker: and he yf is glad of another mans hurte, shal not be vnpunyshed. Childers children are a worshippe vnto the elders, and the fathers are the honoure of the children. An eloquent speech becömeth not a foole, a dyssemblynge mouth also besemeth not a prynce. Liberalite is a precious stone vnto him that hath it, for where so euer he becömeth, he prospereth. Who so couereth another mans offence, seketh loue: but he yf discloseth the faute, setteth frendes at variance. One reprove only doth more good to him yf hath vnderstödunge, then an C. stripes vnto a foole. A sedicious persone seketh myschefe, but a cruell messanger shal be sent agaynst him. It were better to come agaynst a she Bere robbed of hir whelpes, then agaynst a foole in his foolishnes. ^e Who so rewardeth euell for good, the plage shal not departe frō his house. ^f He yf soweth discorde τ strife, is like one yf dyggeth vp a water broke: but an open enemie is like the water yf breaketh out τ rēneth abrode. The LORDE hateth as well him yf iustifieth yf vngodly, as him yf condempeth the innocēt. What helpeth it to geue a foole money in his hōde, where as he hath no mynde to bye wysdome? He is a frende that allway loueth, ^g and in aduersite a man shal knowe who is his brother. Who so promiseth by the hande, τ is suertie for another, he is a foole. He yf loueth strife, delyteth in synne: τ who so setteth his dore to hye, seketh after a fall. Who so hath a frowarde herte, opteyneth no good: and he yf hath an ouerthwarte tonge, shal fall in to myschefe. An vnwyse body bryngeth him selfe in to sorowe, and yf father of a foole can haue no ioye. ^h A mery herte maketh a lusty age, but a sorowfull mide dryeth vp yf bones. The vngodly taketh giftes out of the bosome, to waist the wayes of iudgment. ⁱ Wysdome shyneth in yf face of him yf hath vnderstondinge, but yf eyes of foolles wandre thorow out all lödes. ^k An vndiscrete some is a grefe vnto his father, and heuynesse vnto his mother yf bare him. To punysh yf innocent, and to smyte yf prynces yf geue truc iudgmēt, are both euell. He is wyse and discrete, yf tempereth his wordes: ^l and he is a mā of vnderstödunge, yf maketh moch of his sprete. ^m Yee a very foole (when he holdeth his tonge) is counted wyse, and to haue vnderstödunge, when he shutteth his lippes.

The xviij. Chapter.

WHIO so hath pleasure to sowe discorde, ⁿ piketh a quarell in euery thinge. A foole hath no delyte in vnderstödunge, but only in those thinges wherin his herte reioyseth. Where vngodlynes is, there is also diszdayne: τ so there foloweth shame τ dishonoure. The wordes of a mā's mouth are like depe waters, and the well of wysdome is like a full streame. ^o It is not good to regarde yf persone of the vngodly, or to put backe yf righteous in iudgmēt. A foolles lippes are euer brawlinge, and his mouth prouoketh vnto batayll. A foolles mouth is his owne destruction, and his lippes are yf snare for his owne soule. The wordes of a slaunderer are very woüdes, and go thorow vnto the ynmōst partes of the body. Who so is slouthfull and slacke in his labour, is yf brother of him yf is a waister. The name of yf LORDE is a stronge castell, yf righteous flyeth vnto it, and shalbe saued. But yf rich mā's goodes are his stronge holde, yee he taketh them for an hye wall röüde aboute him. that geueth sentēce in a matter before he heare it, is a foole, and worthy to be confounded. A good stomacke dryncth away a mā's disease, but whā ſprete is vexed, who maye abyde it? A wyse herte laboureth for knowlege, and a prudent eare seketh vnderstandinge. Liberalite bryngeth a man to honour and worshippe, ⁊ setteth him amonge greate men.

The righteous accuseth hī self first of all, yf his neighbour come, he shal fynde him. The lot pacifieth ſ variaūce, ⁊ parteth ſ mightie asunder. The vnite of brethren is stronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely shalbe satisfied with the frute of his owne mouth, and with the increase of his lippes shal he be fylled. Death and life stonde in the power of the tonge, he that loueth it, shal enioye the frute therof. ^aWho so fyndeth a wife fyndeth a good thynge, ⁊ receaueth an wholesome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh supplicacion and prayeth mekely, but the riche geueth a rough answer.

A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frēdshipe, and sticketh faster vnto him then a brother.

The xix. Chapter.

BETTER is the poore ^b that lyueth godly, hū the blasphemers that is but a foole. Where no discrecion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swifte on fote, stambleth hastily. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, ⁊ then is his herte vnpacient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsakē of his owne frendes. ^cA false wytnesse shal not remaine vnpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude hāgeth vpō greate men, ⁊ euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his brethren: yee his owne frendes forsake him, ⁊ he that geueth credēce vnto wordes, getteth nothinge. He that is wyse, loueth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstandinge, shal prospere. A false wytnesse shal not remaine vnpunished, ⁊ he ſ speaketh lyes shal perishe. Delicate ease becōmeth not a foole, moch more vnsemlly is it, a boude man to haue ſ rule of prynces. A wyse man putteth of displeasure, ⁊ it is his honour to let some fautes passe.

O geue eare vnto good counsell, ⁊ be content to be reformed, that thou mayest be wyse hereafter. ^dThere are many deuices in a mā's herte, neuertheless the cōcell of ſ LORDE shal stōde. It is a mans worshippe to do good, ⁊ better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyssembler. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstandinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithful mā? Who so ledeith a godly and an innocent life, ^ahappie shal his children be, whom he leaueth behynde him.

B A kynge that sytteth in iudgment, and loketh well aboute him, dryueth awaye all euell. Who can saye: ^bmy hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his concusacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare τ the sight of \tilde{y} eye, \tilde{y} LORDE hath made thē both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto ponerte: but opene thine eyes, τ thou shalt haue bred ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) when they haue it, but when it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

C A mouth of vnderstōdunge is more worth then golde, many precious stones, and costly Iewels. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger, τ take a pledge of him for \tilde{y} vnknowne mans sake. Euery mā liketh the bred that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thorow counsell the thinges that men deuise go forwarde: τ with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Medle not with him that bewrayeth secretes, and is a slauderer, and disceaueth with his lippes. ^cWho so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of darcknesse. The heretage that commeth to haistely at the first, shal not be prayd at the ende.

D Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put thy trust in the LORDE, τ he shal defende \tilde{y} . ^dThe LORDE abhorreth two maner of weightes, and a false balace is an euell thinge. ^eThe LORDE ordreth euery mā's goings, for what is he, that vnderstandeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blasphemate that which is holy, ^f τ then to go aboute with vovwes. A wyse kynge destroyeth

The xxi. Chapter.

THE kynges hert is in the hande of the LORDE, like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whyther so euer he wyll. Euery man thinketh his owne waye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth \tilde{y} hertes. ⁱTo do rightuousnesse and iudgmēt is more acceptable to the LORDE thē sacrifice.

A presumptuous loke, a proude stomacke, τ the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuyses of one that is diligent, brynge plentifulous: but he \tilde{y} is vnaduyced, commeth vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches with \tilde{y} disceatfulness of his tonge, he is a foole, τ like vnto them that seke their owne death. The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruccion, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the forwarde are straunge, ^jbut \tilde{y} workes of him \tilde{y} is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder \tilde{y} house toppe, then with a braulinge woman in a wyde house.

When the scornfull is punyshed, the ignoraunt take \tilde{y} better hede: τ when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vnderstandinge. The righteous enfourmeth the house of the vngodly, but \tilde{y} vngodly go on still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the cryēge of the poore, ^khe shal erie himself and not be herde. A preuy rewarde pacieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stilleth furiousnesse.

It is better to dwell in a wyldernesse, ^a thē with a chydinge and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is greate treasure and plenteousnesse, but a foolish body spendeth vp all. Who so foloweth rightuousnesse and mercy, syndeth both life, rightuousnesse and honour. A wyse man wynneth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength ^y they trust in, he bryngeth it downe. Who so kepeth his mouth and his tonge, ^b the same kepeth his mouth from troubles. He ^y is proude ⁊ presumptuous, is called a scornfull mā, which in wrath darre worke maliciously.

The voluptuousnesse of the slouthfull is his owne death, for his hādes wyll not labour.

He coueteth and desyreth all the daye longe, but the righteous is allway geuyng ⁊ kepeth nothinge backe. ^c The sacrifice of the vngodly is abhominacion, for they offre the thinge ^y is gotten with wickednes. ^d A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he ^y wilbe content to heare, shal allway haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth rashly, but the iust reformeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, ^e there is no vnderstandinge, there is no counsell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst ^y daye of battayll, but the LORDE geueth the victory.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A GOOD name is more worth then greate riches, ^f and louyng fauoure is better then syluer and golde. Whether riches or pouerte do mete vs, it commeth all of God. A wyse man scyth the plage and hydeth himself, but the foolish go on still and are punyshed. The ende of lowlynes ⁊ the feare of God, is riches, honour, prosperite and health. Speares and suares are in ^y waye of the forwarde, but he ^y wil kepe his soule, let him fle frō soch. The eyes of ^y LORDE preserue knowlege, but as for ^y wordes of ^y despyteful, he bryngeth them to naught. The slouthfull body sayeth: there is a lyō with out, I might be slayne in ^y strete. My sonne, bowe downe thine eare, and herken vnto the wordes of wysdome, applye thy mynde vnto my doctryne: for it is a pleasaunt thinge yf thou kepe it in thine herte, and practise it in thy mouth: that thou mayest allway put thy trust in the LORDE. Haue not I warned ^y very oft with counsell and lerninge? ⁱ I might shewe ^y the treuth, and that thou with the verite mightest answere them ^y laye any thinge against ^y? The xv. Chapter.

^h THESE also are Salomons prouerbes, which the men of Ezechias kinge of Iuda gathered together. It is the honour of God to kepe a thinge secrete. ⁱ but ⁊ kings honour is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, ⁊ earth is depe, and ⁊ kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take ⁊ drosse from ⁊ syluer, ⁊ there shalbe a cleane vessell therof.

Take awaye vngodlinesse frō ⁊ kyng, ⁊ his seate shalbe stablished with rightuousnes.

Put not forth thy self in ⁊ presence of ⁊ kyng, ⁊ prease not in to ⁊ place of greate men.

Better it is ⁊ it be sayde vnto ⁊: ^j come vp hither, then thou to be set downe in ⁊ presence of ⁊ prynce, whom thou seyst with thine eyes. ^k Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happlie thou ordre thy self so at ⁊ last, ⁊ thy neyghboure put ⁊ to shame. Handle thy matter with thy neyghboure himself, ⁊ discouer not another mans secrete: lest whan men heare therof, it turne to thy dishonoure, ⁊ lest thine euell name do not cease. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dyshe.

The correccion of the wyse is to an obedient eare, a golden cheyne and a Iewel of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the harvest, so is a faithfull messaunger to him that sent him, ⁊ refreszsheth his masters mynde.

Who so maketh greate boasts ⁊ geueth nothinge, is like cloudes ⁊ wynde without rayne. ^l With pacience maye a prynce be pacified, ⁊ with a soft tonge maye rigorounes be brokē. Yf thou findest hony, eate so much as is sufficiēt for ⁊: lest thou be ouerfull, ⁊ per breake it out agayne. Withdrawe thy foote frō thy neyghbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth false wytnesse agaynst his neyghboure, he is a very speare, a swerde ⁊ a sharpe arowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten toth and a slippery foote. Who so syngeth a songe to a wicked herte, clotheth hī with ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalke. Yf thine enemye hunger, fede him: ^m yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpō his heade, and the LORDE shal rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenance a back byters tonge. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rose, ⁿ then with a braulyng woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a sprynge ⁊ is destroyed.

The xviij. Chapter.

LIKE as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in haruest: euen so is worshippe vnseemly for a foole. Like as f byrde and the swalowe take their flight and fle here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not light vpon a man. ^b Vnto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a brydle, and a rodde to the fooles backe. Geue not the foole an answere after his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make f foole an answere to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceate. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that cōmitteth eny thinge to a foole. Like as it is an vnseemly thige to haue legges t yet to halte, eue so is a parable in f fooles mouth.

He f setteth a foole in hye dignite, f is eue as yf a man dyd cast a precious stoue vpō f galous. A parable in a fooles mouth, is like a thorne f pricketh a droncken man in f hande. A man of experience discerneth all thinges well, but who so hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne afresh. Yf thou seyest a man f is wyse in his owne conceate, there is more hope in a foole then in hi. ^d The slouthfull sayeth: there is a leoparde in f waye, and a lyon in f myddest of the stretes. Like as the dore turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedd. ^e The slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh him self wyser, then vij. men that sytt and teach.

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one f taketh a dogg by f eares. Like as one shutede deadly arowes and dartes out of a preuy place, euen so doth a dyssembler with his neighoure, And then sayeth he: I dyd it but in sporte. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out: and where the bacbyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd f fyre: euen so doth a braulinge felowe stere vp variance. A slaundersers wordes are like flattery, but they pearse f inwarde partes of f body. Vnvenomous lippes t a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered with syluer drosse. An enemie dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ynagineth myschefe: but whā he speaketh fayre, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominaciōs in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shal be shewed before the whole congregacion. ^a Who so dyggeth vp a pytt, shal fal therin: and he f weltreth a stone, shal stamble vpon it hymselfe.

A dyssemblynge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a flaterige mouth worketh myschefe.

The xviij. Chapter.

MAKE not thy boost of tomorow, for ^a thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another mā prayse the, t not thine owne mouth: yee other folkes lippes, and not thyne. ^b The stone is heuy, and the sonde weightie: but a fooles wrath is heuyer then they both. Wrath is a cruell thige, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde envye? ^c An open rebuke is better, then a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a louer, but f kysses of an enemie are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an honycombe: but vnto him that is hōgrie, euery sower thinge is swete. He that oft tymes flytteth, is like a byrde f forsaketh hir nest. The herte is glad of a swete oymntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that cū geue good counsell, reioyseth a mans neighoure. The rrbiiij. Chapter.

A THE vngodly flyeth no man chasyng him,^d but the righteous stondesth stiff as a lyon. Because of synne ŷ londe doth oft change hir prynce: but thorow men of vnderstandinge ⁊ wyszdoma a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynuall rayne that destroyeth ŷ frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse ŷ vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. ^eWicked men discern not the thinge ŷ is right, but they that seke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. / A poore man ledyng a godly life, is better then the riche that goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstandinge: but he ŷ fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vaūtage ⁊ wynnyng, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. ^fHe that turneth away his care from hearinge ŷ lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so ledeth ŷ righteous in to an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pytt, but ŷ just shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thinketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstandinge, cā perceauē him wel ynough. ^gWhen righteous men are in prosperite, the doth honoure flourish: but when the vngodly come vp, ŷ state of men chaungeth. He that hydeth his synnes, shall not prospere: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shall haue mercy. Well is him that stōdeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischefe. Like as a roaringe lyon and a hongrie beer, euen so is an vngodly prynce ouer the poore people.

Where the prynce is without vnderstandinge, there is greate oppression ⁊ wronge: but yf he be soch one as hateth couetousnesse, he shal longe raigūe. ^hHe that by violēce sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagate vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to scoure him. ⁱWho so leadeth a godly and an innocēt life, shalbe safe: but he that goeth frowarde wayes, shall once haue a fall. He ŷ tyllēth his londe,^j shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth ydilnesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faithfull man is greatly to be commēded, but he that maketh to moch haist for to be riche, ^kshal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of persones in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euen for a pece of bred. He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shall come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shall fynde more fauoure at ŷ last, thē he that flatreth him. Who so robbeth his father and mother,^l and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a murtherer.

He that is of a proude stomacke, stereth vp strife: but he that putteth his trust in ŷ LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. ^mHe that geueth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth away his eyes from soch as be in necessite, shall suffre greate pouerte himself.

A HE that is stiffnecked & will not be reformed, shal sodenly be destroyed with out eny helpe. ^a Where \hat{y} righteous haue the outy hande, \hat{y} people are in prosperite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, there \hat{y} people mourne. Who so loueth wysdome, maketh his father a glad man: ^b but he \hat{y} kepeth hartlottes, spcedeth away \hat{y} he hath. With true iudgment \hat{y} kynge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man \hat{y} taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flatreth his neyghboure, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of \hat{y} wicked is his owne snare, but \hat{y} righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considreth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderstandyng. Wicked people brynge a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. ²Who so laugheth his father to scorne, and setteth his mothers commaundement at naught: the rauens pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yonge Aegles.

³There be thre thynges to hye for me, and as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

The waye of an Aegle in \hat{y} ayre, \hat{y} waye of a serpent ouer \hat{y} stone, \hat{y} waye of a shippe in \hat{y} see, τ \hat{y} waye of a mā with a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyfe \hat{y} breaketh wedlocke, which wyppeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, τ sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme. C Thorow thre thynges the earth is disquieted, τ the fourth maye it not beare: Thorow a seruauēt \hat{y} beareth rule, thorow a foole \hat{y} hath greate riches, thorow an ydle houswife, τ thorow an handmayden \hat{y} is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thynges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wyszdome they excede the wyse. ⁴The Eunnettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in \hat{y} haruest.

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder laboureth with hir hādes, τ \hat{y} in \hat{y} kynges palace.

There be thre thynges \hat{y} go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the gooddiest of all. A Lyon which is kyng of beastes, τ geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kyng \hat{y} goeth forth with his people.

Yf thou be so foolish to magnifie thy self, or medlest with eny soch thyng, thē laye thine hāde vpon thy mouth. Who so chyrneth mylck, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife.

poore, τ of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, τ wyne vnto those \hat{y} mourne: that they maye drynke it, τ forget their misery τ aduersite. Be thou an aduocate τ stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme τ succourles. With thy mouth defende \hat{y} thyng \hat{y} is lauffull and right, and \hat{y} cause of \hat{y} poore and helplesse.

Who so fyndeth an honest faithfull womā, she is moch more worth thē perles. The herte of hir husbande maye safely trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles. B

She wil do him good τ not euel all \hat{y} dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll τ flax, τ laboureth gladly with hir handes. She is like a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in \hat{y} night season, to prouyde meate for hir housholde, τ foode for hir maydens. She considreth lōde, τ byeth it, and with the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeth hir loynes with strength, and courageth hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir houswifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by night. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, τ hir hande taketh holde of \hat{y} rocke. C

She openeth hir hande to \hat{y} poore, yee she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not \hat{y} colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde folkes are duple clothed. She maketh hir self fayre ornamētes, hir clothēge is whyte sylke τ purple. Hir huszbāde is moch set by in \hat{y} gates, whē he sytteth amonge \hat{y} rulers of \hat{y} londe. She maketh cloth of sylke τ selleth it, and delyuereth a gyrdle vnto \hat{y} marchaūt. D

Strēgth and honoure is hir clothinge, τ in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wyszdome, τ in hir tōge is the lawe of grace. She loketh wel to the wayes of hir housholde, τ eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir children arise τ call hir blessed, τ hir huszbande maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be \hat{y} gather riches together, but thou goest about thē all. As for fauoure, it is disceatfull, and beutie is a vayne thyng: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayسد. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne workes prayse her in the gates.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

All thinges (yf a mā wyl cōsidre them wel) are but vanite. Neuertheles amōge them all there is nothige weaker and more vnstedfast, then man him self.

Chap. II.

In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mēsiōn of the wordes and cōuersaciō of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the only euerlastinge God.

Chap. III.

Every thinge hath a tyme. There is no thige, but God hath put tedyousnesse and trauayle in it, to exercise men withall. What so euer a man enjoyeth of his labour, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.

Chap. IIII.

A cōsideracion of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the deuty and office where vnto it is ordered, it shalbe brought lowe.

Chap. V.

Agaynst foolish and temerariou vovs. Let no man maruayle that so moch euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the riche and agaynst riches.

Chap. VI.

Agaynst those riche mē that darre not enjoye their riches: how mad and foolish they be.

Chap. VII.

No man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thige it is to haue a good name. The profit of wysdome.

Chap. VIII.

Of the obediēce which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despised. It is not possible for eny mā, to cōprehende the workes that be in the worlde.

Chap. IX.

Like thinges happen vnto all men: therfore with myrth and thankfulnessse shulde men enjoye the giftes of God. Wysdome passeth all thinges.

Chap. X. XI.

In these two chapters are many wyse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of enery man.

Chap. XII.

In this chapter the preacher sheweth his whole meanyng, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the concludon, that there is nothyng stedfast and durable but God himself, who men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the Preacher, the sonne of Dauid, kyng of Ierusalem.

ALL is but vanite (saieyth y^e preacher) ^a all is but playne vanite. For what els

hath a mā, of all the labourē y^e he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another commeth, but the earth abyedeth still. The Sōne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, y^e he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth towarde ſ̄ South, ⁊ fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, ⁊ so turneth in to himselfe agayne. ^aAll floudes runne in to the see, ⁊ yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, ſ̄ no mā can expresse them. ^bThe eye is not satisfied with sight, the eare is not fylled with hearinge.

B The thinge ſ̄ hath bene, cōmeth to passe agayne: ⁊ ſ̄ thinge ſ̄ hath bene done, is done agayne. There is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoon in the tymes ſ̄ haue bene before vs. The thinge ſ̄ is past, is out of remēbraunce: Eūc more the thinges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpō amōge thē that come after. I myselfe ſ̄ Preacher, beyngē kynge of Israel ⁊ Ierusalē, applyed my mynde to seke out ⁊ search for the knowlege of all thiges ſ̄ are done vnder heauē. Soch trauayle ⁊ labourē hath God geuē vnto ſ̄ childrē of mē, to exerceyse thē selues therē.

C Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sōne, ⁊ lo, they are all but vanite ⁊ vexacion of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, ⁊ the fautes cā not be nōbred. I cōmoned with myne owne herte, sayēge: lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wyszdome, thē all they ſ̄ haue bene before me in Ierusalem. Yee my hert had greate experiēce of wyszdome ⁊ knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: ſ̄ I might knowe what were wyszdome ⁊ vnderstōdinge, what were erroure ⁊ foolishnes. And I perceaued ſ̄ this also was but a vexacion of mynde: for where moch wyszdome is, there is also greate trauayle ⁊ disquietnes: ⁊ ſ̄ more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The ij. Chapter.

A THĒ sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease ⁊ haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdrawe my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wyszdome, and to comprehēde foolishnes, vntill the tyme that (amonge all ſ̄ thinges which are vnder ſ̄ Sonne) I might se what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

^dI made gorgious fayre workes, I buylded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me ortchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. ^eI made poles of water, to water ſ̄ grene and frutefull trees withall. I bought seruauntes and maydēs, and had a greate housholde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substance of them, then all they ſ̄ were before me in Ierusalem. I gathered syluer ⁊ golde together, euen a treasure of kynges ⁊ londes.

I prouided me syngers and womē which coude playe of instrumentes, to make men myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkyngē cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater ⁊ in more worships, then all my predecessours in Ierusalē. For wyszdome remained with me: ⁊ loke what so euer myne eyes desyred, I let them haue it: ⁊ wherin so euer my herte delyted or had eny pleasure, I withhelde it not frō it. Thus my hert reioysed in all ſ̄ I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauayle. But whan I considered all the workes ſ̄ my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therein: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, ⁊ nothinge of eny value vnder ſ̄ Sonne. Then turned I me to considre wyszdome, erreure and foolishnesse (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me ſ̄ kynge in soch workes?) and I sawe, that wyszdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole goeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

C Then thought I in my mynde: Yf it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to labourē eny more for wyszdome? So I confessed within my herte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembrance as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as ſ̄ foole. Thus begāne I to be weery of my life, in so moch that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite ⁊ vexacion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my labourē, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be fayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, whether he ſhalbe a wyſe mā or a foole? And yet ſhal he be lorde of all my labours, which I with ſoch wyſdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all ſoch traunyle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for ſo moch as a man ſhulde weery him ſelf with wyſdome, with vnderſtōdunge and opportunitie, and yet be fayne to leaue his labours vnto another, ſe neuer ſwett for them. This is alſo a vayne thinge and a greate miſery. For what getteth a mā of all ſe labour & traunyle of his mynde, ſe he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heuynesse, ſorowe & diſquyetnes all ſe dayes of his life? In ſo moch that his herte can not reſt in the night. Is not this alſo a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his ſoule to be mery in his labour? Yee I ſawe that this alſo was a gifte of God: ^aFor who maye eate, drynke, or brynge eny thiſe to paſſe without him? And why? he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaſeth him: whether it be wyſdome, vnderſtōdunge, or gladneſſe. But vnto the ſynner he geueth weeryneſſe and ſorow, that he maye gather and heape together ſe thinge, ſe afterwarde ſhalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaſeth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very diſquyetneſſe and vexaciō of mynde.

The iij. Chapter.

EVERY thinge hath a tyme, eue all that is vnder the heauen, hath is conuenient ſeaſon. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. ^bThere is a tyme to plāte, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, ſe is planted: A tyme to ſlaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to daunſe: A tyme to caſt away ſtones, and a tyme to gather ſtones together: A tyme to embrace, & a tyme to refrayne from embraceynge: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to leſe: A tyme to ſpare, and a tyme to ſpende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to ſowe together: ^cA tyme to kepe ſylce, and a tyme to ſpeake: A tyme to loue, & a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that doth eny thinge) but weeryneſſe and labour? For as touching the traunyle and carefullneſſe which God hath geuen vnto mē, I ſe that he hath geuen it them, to be exerciſed in it. All this hath he ordered maruelous goodly, to eury thinge his due tyme. He hath plāted ignorance alſo in the hertes of men, ſe they ſhulde not fynde out ſe grounde of his workes, which he doth from ſe beginninge to ſe ende. So I perceaued, ſe in theſe thinges there is nothinge better for a man, thē to be mery & to do well ſo longe as he lyueth. For all ſe a man eateth & drynketh, yee what ſo euer a mā enioyeth of all his labour, ſe ſame is a gifte of God. I conſidered alſo ſe what ſo euer God doth, it cōtinueth for euer, & ſe nothinge can be put vnto it ner takē from it: & ſe God doth it to ſe intent, ſe men ſhulde feare him. ^dThe thinge ſe hath bene, is now: & the thinge ſe is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God reſtoreth agayne the thinge that was paſt. Morouer, I ſawe vnder ſe Sonne, vngodlyneſſe in the ſtede of iudgment, & iniquite in ſtede of rightuouſneſſe.

Then thought I in my mynde: God ſhal ſeparate the rightuous from the vngodly, & then ſhal be the tyme & iudgmēt of all counceils & workes. I cononed with myne owne herte alſo cōcernynge the childrē of men: how God hath choſen them, and yet letteth thē apeare, as though they were beaſtes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beaſtes, & as the one dyeth, ſo dyeth ſe other: yee they haue both one maner of breth, ſo ſe (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beeſt, but all are ſubdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of duſt, ſo ſhal they all turne vnto duſt agayne.

^eWho knoweth the ſprete of man ſe goeth vpwarde, and the breth of the beeſt ſe goeth downe in to the earth? Wherefore I perceaued, ſe there is nothinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his portio. But who wil brynge him to ſe the thinge, that ſhal come after him?

The iij. Chapter.

SO I turned me, and conſidered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of ſoch as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde deliuer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherefore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnborne to be better at ease thē they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all traauayle and diligence of labour was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole foldeth his handes together, and eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better with rest, thē both y^e handes full with labour and traauayle. B Morouer, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himselfe alone, hauynge nether childe ner brother: yet is there no ende of his careful traauayle, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, and saye:) For whom do I take soch traauayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume away my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therefore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their labour. Yf one of them fall, his companyon helpeth him vp againe: But wo is him that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouercome, but two maye make resistance: A thre-folde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doteth, and can not beware in tyme to come. "Some one commeth out of prison, and is made a kynge: and another which is borne in the kyngdome, commeth vnto pouerte. And I perceaued, y^e all men lyuynge vnder the Sonne, go with the seconde childe, that commeth vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thorow him. This is also a vayne thinge and a vexacion of mynde. When thou comest in to the house of God, kepe thy fote, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: ^hthat is better then the offeringes of fooles, for they knowe not what euell they do.

The v. Chapter.

BE not hastie with thy mouth, and let not thine hert speake eny thinge rashly before God. For God is in heauen, and thou vpon earth, therefore let thy wordes be fewe. For where moch carefulnesse is, there are many dreames: and where many wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. Yf thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to performe it. As for foolish vowes, he hath no pleasure in them. Yf thou promyse eny thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shuldest promise, and not paye. Vse not thy mouth to cause thy flesh for to synne, y^e thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in y^e faute.

For thē God wil be angrie at thy voyce, and destroye all y^e workes of thine handes.

And why? where as are many dreames and many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: but loke y^e thou feare God. Yf thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongeously dealt withall, so y^e equite and the right of the lawe is wraisted in the londe: maruell not thou at soch iudgmēt, for one great mā kepeth touch with another, and the mightie helpe thē selues together. The whole londe also with the feldes and all that is therein, is in subieccion and bondage vnto y^e kinge.

He that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so deliyteth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouringe man slepeth swetely, whether it be litle or moch that he eateth: but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Yet is there a sore plague, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him y^e hath them in possession.

For oft times they perishe with his greate misery and trouble: and yf he haue a childe, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carieth nothinge awaye with him of all his labour. This is a miserable plague, y^e he shal go awaye euen as he came. What helpeth it him then, y he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greate carefulnesse, sicknesse ⁊ sorow.

Therefore me thinke it a better and a fayrer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his labour, y he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his labour: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The vi. Chapter.

THERE is yet a plage vnder y Sonne, ⁊ it is a generall thinge amonge mē: when God geueth a man riches, goodes ⁊ honoure, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desyre: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spēdeth them. This is a vayne thinge ⁊ a miserable plage. Yf a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in nombre, and yet can not enioye his good, nether be buried: as for him I saye, that an vntymely byrth is better then he. For he cometh to naught, ⁊ goeth his waye in to darcknes, and his name is forgotten. Morouer, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of no rest nether here ner there: Yee though he lyued two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the labour that a man taketh, is for himself, and yet his desyre is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the luyunge? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the soule shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier thē he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The vij. Chapter.

FOR who knoweth what is good for man luyunge, in y dayes of his vayne life, which is but a shadowe? Or, who will tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? ^aA good name is more worth then a precious oyntment, and the daye of death is better thē y daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mournynge, then in to a bancket house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is luyinge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for whē the countenance is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of y wyse is in the mournynge house, but the hert of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, ^cthen to heare the songe of fooles. For the laughynge of fooles is like y crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And y is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnyng. The pacient of sprete is better then the hie mynded. Be not haistely angrie in thy mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that y dayes of y olde tyme were better, then they y be now? for that were no wyse question. Wysdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wysdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wysdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Consider the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Vse well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of mysfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

These ij. thiges also haue I cōsidred in y tyme of vanite: y the iust man perisheth for his rightuousnes sake, ⁊ the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therefore be thou nether to rightuous ner ouer wyse, ^dy thou perish not: be nether to vnrightuous also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, ⁊ not to let y go out of thy hande. For he y feareth God shal escape them all.

worde \hat{y} is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruauant curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these things haue I proued because of wyszdome: "for I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee τ so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out sciēce, wisdom and vnderstondinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erreure of dotinge fooles. And I founde,^b that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir bandes are cheynes. Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her, but the synner will be taken with her.

Beholde (sayeth \hat{y} preacher) this haue I diligently searched out τ proued, \hat{y} I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. ^cLo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust τ right, but they seke dyuerse sotylties, where as no man hath wyszdome τ vnderstōdinge, to geue answeere there vnto.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME maketh a mā face to shyne,^d but malice putteth it out of fauoure. Kepe the kynges commaundemēt (I warne the) τ the oath \hat{y} thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistic in go out of his sight, τ se thou cōtynue in no euell thinge: for what so euer it pleaseth him, \hat{y} doeth he. Like as when a kyng geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? ^e Who so kepeth the commaundement, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulness τ sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyl tell him? Nether is there eny mā \hat{y} hath power ouer \hat{y} sprete, to kepe stil \hat{y} sprete, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, nether maye vngodlynes deliuer him \hat{y} medleth withall.

All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene \hat{y} vngodly^f brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch \hat{y} they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye τ greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundred tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with thē that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prolōge his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of \hat{y} rightuous. This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therefore I commende gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his labour all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my mynde to lerne wyszdome, and to knowe the trauayle that is in the worlde (and that of such a fashion, \hat{y} I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all \hat{y} workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto \hat{y} workes that are done vnder \hat{y} Sonne: and though he bestowe his labour to seke them out, yet can he not reach vnto thē: yee though a wyse man wolde vndertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The ix. Chapter.

FOR all these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seke out. The righteous and wyse yee and their workes also are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the rightuous as with the vngodly:^g with the good τ cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not: like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is afrayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges \hat{y} come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, τ madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyeck dogg (saye they) is better th \bar{c} a deed lion: for they that be lyuyng, knowe \hat{y} they shall dye: but they \hat{y} be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgott \bar{c} , so \hat{y} they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in \hat{y} worlde, in all \hat{y} is done vnder the Sonne. Go thou thy waye then, eate thy bred with ioye, τ drynke thy wyne with gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garnetes be all waye whyte, τ let thy heade want no oyntm \bar{c} t. ^bVse thy self to lyue ioyfully with thy wife whom thou louest, all \hat{y} daies of thy life (which is but vayne) \hat{y} God hath geu \bar{c} the vnder the Sonne, all \hat{y} dayes of thy vanite: for \hat{y} is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labour τ trauayle \hat{y} thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so euer thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for am \bar{o} ge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowlege ner wysdome.

So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder \hat{y} Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift: in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to fedyng, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll: to be had in faouore, it helpeth not to be conynge: but that all lyeth in tyme τ fortune. ^cFor a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshe are tak \bar{c} with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched with the snare: Eu \bar{c} so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it cometh sodenly vpon them.

D This wysdome haue I sene also vnder \hat{y} S \bar{o} ne, τ me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, τ a few m \bar{c} within it: so there came a greate kyng τ beseged it, τ made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which with his wysdome deliuered the cite: yet was there no body, \hat{y} had eny respecte vnto soch a sypmle man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. ^dNeuertheles, a sypmle mans wysdome is despysed, τ his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre above the crienge of a captaine am \bar{o} ge fooles. For wysdome is better then harness: ^ebut one vithrift alone destroyeth moch good.

The 1. Chapter.

D EED flies \hat{y} corruppe swete oyntment τ A make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wysdome τ honoure of a foole. A wyse mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh, \hat{y} euery m \bar{a} doth as foolishly as himself. Yf a principall sprete be geu \bar{c} the to beare rule, be not neglig \bar{c} t th \bar{c} in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were with a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, \hat{y} ignorance \hat{y} is comonly amonge prynces: in \hat{y} a foole sytteth in greate dignite, τ the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruantes ryde vpon horses, τ prynces goinge vpon their fete as it were seruantes. ^fBut he \hat{y} dyggeth vp a pytt, shall fall therein himself: τ who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal bite him. Who so remoueth stones, shall haue trauayle withall: and he that heweth wod, shalbe hurt therwith.

When an yron is blunt, and \hat{y} poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome folowe diligence. A babler of his tongue is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without hyssyng. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnyng of his talkyng is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclucion? The labour of \hat{y} foolish is greuous vnto th \bar{c} , while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Wo be vnto the (O thou realme and londe) C whose kyng is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banckettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kinge is come of nobles, and whose prynces eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thorow slouthfulness the balkes fall downe, and thorow ydle hādes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh,^a and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all thinges obedient. Wysh the kynge no euell in thy thought, and speake no hurte of ſy ryche in thy preuy chambre: for a byrde of the ayre shal betraye thy voyce, and with hir fethers shal she bewraye thy wordes.

The xi. Chapter.

SENDE thy vytayles ouer the waters, and so shalt thou fynde thē after many yeares. Geue it away amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what misery shal come vpon earth. Whē the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And whē ſy tre falleth, (whether it be towarde the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth ſy wynde, shal not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shal not reape. Now like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how ſy bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the workes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therefore with thy handes to sowe thy seede, whether it be in ſy mornynge or in the euenynge: for thou knowest not whether this or that shall prospere, ⁊ yf they both take, it is the better. The light is swete, ⁊ a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to loke vpon the Sonne. Yf a man lyue many yeares, and be glad in them all, let him remembre the dayes of darcknesse, which shal be many: ⁊ when they come, all thinges shal be but vanite. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and lat thine hert be mery in thy yonge dayes: folowe the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

hede and youth is but vanite. Remembre thy maker in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersitie come, and or the yeares drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, ſy light, ſy Moone and the starres be darkened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the rayne: when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and when the stronge men shal bowe them selues: when the Myllers stonde still because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waxe dymme: when the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and whan ſy voyce of the Myller shall be layed downe: whan men shall ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and whan all ſy daughters of musyck shalbe brought lowe: whan men shal feare in hye places, and be afraied in the stretes: whan the Almonde tre shalbe despysed, the greshopper borne out, and whan greate pouerte shall breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go aboute the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken away, and or the golden bende be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, ⁊ the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or ^ddust be turned againe vnto earth from whence it came, and or the sprete returne vnto God, which gaue it. ^eAll is but vanite (sayeth the preacher) all is but playne vanite.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hede, sought out the groude and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. ^dFor the wordes of ſy wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherwith men are kepte together: for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therefore beware (my sonne) that aboute these thou make the not many ⁊ innumerable bokes, nor take dyuerse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

Lat vs heare the conclusion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundementes, for that toucheth all men: For God shall iudge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or euell.

Cantica Canticorum.

The first Chapter.

A O THAT thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, τ that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. "Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment, therefore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

The kyng hath brought me in to his preuy chambre. We wil be glad τ reioyce in the, we thynke more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

B I am black (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes,^b and as the hangings of Salomon: but yet am I faire τ wellfaoured withal. Maruell not at me y I am so black, τ why? y Sonne hath shyned vpō me. For whan my mothers childrē had euell wil at me, they made me y keper of the vynyarde. Thus was I fayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) where thou fedest, where thou restest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companyons.

Yf thou knowe not thy self (o thou fayrest amōge women) thā go thy waye forth after y fotesteppes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede thy goates besyde y shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) with myne hoost τ with my charettes, which shal be no fewer then Pharaos.^c

C Then shal thy chekes τ thy neck be made fayre, τ hanged with spāges τ goodly iewels: a neck bande of golde wil we make y with syluer bottons. When the kyngye syttech at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a bōdell of Myrre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vynyardes of Engaggi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

"O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well faoured art thou? Oure bed is decte with floures, y sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, τ oure balkes of Cypressse.

The ij. Chapter.

I AM the floure of the felde, and lylic of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me with grapes, cōforte me with apples, for I am sick of loue. His left hāde lyeth vnder my heade, τ his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) B by the Roes τ hyndes of the felde, y ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Me thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there commeth he hoppinge vpon y mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roo or a yonge hart. Beholde, he stouedeth behynde oure wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, τ pepeth thorow the grate.

My beloued answered & sayde vnto me: O stōde vp my loue, my doue, my beutyfull, & come: for lo, the wynter is now past, the rayne is awaie & gone. The floures are come vp in the felde, the twystringe tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure londe. The fyge tre bryngeth forth hir fyges, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

C O stōde vp my loue, my beutyfull, and come (my doue) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wall: O let me se thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Gett vs the foxes, yee the litle foxes that hurte fy vynes, for oure vynes beare blossoms.

My loue is myne, and I am his, (which fedeth amōge the lylies) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come agayne preuely (o my beloued) like as a Roo or a yonge harte vnto the mountaynes.

The iij. Chapter.

A BY night in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligently sought I him, but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all fy stretes will I seke him whom my soule loueth, but when I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute fy cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

So when I was a litle past them, I fōūde him whom my soule loueth. I haue gotten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go. vntill I brynge him in to my mothers house, and in to hir chambre that bare me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

B Who is this, that commeth out of fy wyl-dernesse like pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myrre, frankencense and all maner spyces of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomōs bedsteade there stonde LX. valeaunt men of the mightie in Israel. They holde swerdes euery one, & are experte in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpō his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bed-steade of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, fy seate of purple, fy grounde pleasauntly payed for the daughters of Ierusalem.

Go forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and beholde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wherwith his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the gladnesse of his hert.

The iij. Chapter.

O HOW fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within. Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clypped, which go first vp from the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, and not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are louely: thy chekes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyed hyd within. Thy neck is like the tower of Dauid buylded with bulworkes, wher vpon there hāge a thousande sheldes, yee all the weapēs of the gīautes. Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes, which fede amōge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myrre, and to the hyl of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spott is there in the.

Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppe of Amana, from the toppe of Sanir and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes and from the mountaynes of fy leopardes. Thou hast wōūded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and louely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse? Thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices. Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony combe, yee mylck and hony is vnder thy tonge, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsense.

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water sprynge, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradysse of pōgranates with swete frutes: as Cypresse, Nardus, Saffron, Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myrre, Aloes, and all the best spyces. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of luyunge waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vp thou northwynde, come thou southwynde, and blowe vp^o my gardē, that the smell thereof maye be caried on euery syde: Yee that my beloued maye come in to my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therein.

The b. Chapter.

COME in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myrre with my spyce, I wil eate my hony and my hony cōbe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylk. Eate (o ye frendes) drynke and be mery, o ye beloued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert wakyng, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my doue, my derlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y^e lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

I haue put off my cote, how cā I do it on agayne? I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued towards him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My hādes dropped with Myrre, & the Myrre ranne downe my fyngers vpon y^e lock. Neuerthelesse whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I sought hī, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answer. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, foude me, smote me, and wounded me: Yee they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my garmēt fro me. I charge yis therefore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for loue.

Who is thy loue aboute other louers, O thou fayrest amonge wemen? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other louers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a synguler personie amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are buszshed, browne as the euenyng: His eyes are as the eyes of doues by the water brokes, washen with mylek, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: His chekes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaryes plāte all maner of swete thinges: His lippes droppe as the floures of the most princypall Myrre, his hādes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, dete ouer with Saphyres: His legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sokettes of golde: His face is as Libanus, and as the bewty of the Cedre trees: His throte is swete, yee he is altogether louely: Soch one is my loue (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) soch one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue gone thē (o thou fayrest amonge wemē) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye seke him with the?

The vi. Chapter.

MY loue is gone downe in to his garden, vnto y^e swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which fedeth amonge the lilies.

Thou art pleasaunt (o my loue) euen as louelynesse itself, thou art fayre as Ierusalem, glorious as an armye of men with their bāners. (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude.) Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon y^e mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe y^e be clypped, which go out of the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, & not one vfrutefull amonge them. Thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes y^e which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenens, foure score concubynes, and yonge wemē without nombre. But one is my doue, my derlyng. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, & deare vnto her that bare her. Whā the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: Yee the quenens and concubines prayed her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the mornyng? fayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armye of men with their bāners?

I wente downe in to the nutt garden, to se what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vnyarde flourished, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of the prynee of my people made me sodenly afrayed. Turne againē, turne againē (O thou Sulamite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that we maye loke vpon the.

The liij. Chapter.

WHAT pleasure haue ye more in ſ Sulamite, than when she daumeth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadinges with thy shues, thou prynces daughter? Thy thees are like a fayre iewell, which is wrought by a conynge workmaster: Thy nauell is like a rounde goblett, which is neuer without drynke: Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, sett aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes: Thy neck is as it were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like ſ water poles in Hesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which loketh towarde Damascus: That heade that stondesth vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like the kynges purple folden vp in plates.

O how fayre and louely art thou (my derlynge) in pleasures? Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vp in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrels like the smell of apples, and thy throte like the best wyne.

This shalbe pure & cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne hin vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth in to the feldes, and take oure lodginge in the vyllages. In the mornynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde: yf it be spronge forth, yf the grapes be growne, & yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shal the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde oure dores: There (o my loue) haue I kepte vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The liij. Chapter.

O THAT I might fynde the without & kysse ſ, whom I loue as my brother which suckte my mothers brestes: & that thou woldest not be offended, yf I toke the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spycd wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. ° His lefte hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalē) that ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, tyll she be content herself. What is she this, that cometh vp from the wildernes, and leaeneth vpon hir loue? I am the same that waked the vp amonge the aples trees, where thy mother beare ſ, where thy mother brought the in to the worlde.

O set me as a seale vpō thine hert, and as a seale vpon thine arme: for loue is mightie as the death, & gelously as the hell. Hir coales are of fyre, and a very flamme of the LORDE: so ſ many waters are not able to quench loue, nether maye ſ streames drowne it. Yee yf a man wolde geue all the good of his house for loue, he shulde counte it nothinge.

When oure loue is tolde oure yonge sister, whose brestes are not yet growne, what shal we do vnto her? Yf she be a wall, we shal buyde a syluer bollworke there vpon: Yf she be a tower, we shal festen her with bordes of Cedre tre.

Yf I be a wall, & my brestes like towres, then am I as one that hath founde faouore in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde delyuered he vnto the keepers: ſ euery one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde (o Salomon) geueth the a thousande, and two hundreth to ſ keepers of the frute.

That that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my companions maye herken to the same. O get the awaye (my loue) as a roo or a yonge hert vnto the swete smellinge mouitaynes.

Chap. LXVI.

The outwarde ceremonies of the Iewes are re-

 God.

THIS is the prophecy of Esay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Jerusalem: In the tyme of Osias, Ioathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

HEARE o heauen, herken o earth,^a for the LORDE speaketh: I haue no-rished ⁊ brought vp children, and they are fallen away fro me. An ox knoweth his lorde, and an Asse his masters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstandinge. Alas for this synful people, which are experte in blasphemies, a frawerde generacion, vnnatural children. ^bThey haue forsaken the LORDE, they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherefore shulde ye be plaged eny more? For ye are euer fallinge awaye.
 The whole heade is sick, and the herte is very heuy. ^cFrom the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parte in all your body: but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be helped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oymnt.

^dYour londe lieth waist, youre cities are brent vp, youre enemies denoure youre londe, and ye must be fayne to stonde, and loke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Morouer ^edaughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vnyearde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged citie. And excepte the LORDE of hostes had left us a few alyue: ^fwe shulde haue bene as Sodoma, ⁊ like vnto Gomorra.

^gHeare the worde of the LORDE ye ty-rautes of Sodoma: and herken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
 Why offre ye so many sacrifices vnto me?
 I am discontent for the brentoffringes of wethers, and with ^hfatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lames and gootes. When ye apeare before me, who requyreth you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblacions, for it is but lost labour. ⁱI abhorre youre incense.

I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, youre Sabbathes and solempne dayes. ^aYoure fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen for my very harte. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out youre hondes, ^byet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

C Wash you, make you cleane, ^cput awaye youre euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, deliuer the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complainte come before you. Now go to (saith the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though your synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like white wolle? Is it not so? Yf ye be louynge τ obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. ^dBut yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the righteous citie (which was full of equite) is become vnfaihtfull as an whore? rightuousnes dwelt in it, but now murthur. ^eThy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myxte with water. Thy prynces are traytours and companions of theues. ^fThey loue giftes altogether, and folowe rewardes. As for the fatherles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therefore speaketh the LORDE God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah I must ease me of myne enemies, and a venge me vpon the. And therefore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, τ set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from γ begynnynge. ^gThen shalt thou be called the rightuous citie, the faithfull citie. But Sion shalbe redeemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with rightuousnesse. ^hFor the transgressours and vngodly, and such as are become vnfaihtfull vnto the

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oketrees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardes that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as a oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, ⁱand as a garden that bath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to drie strawe, ^kand he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER this is the worde that was A opened vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Iuda and Ierusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: ^lThat the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shalbe γ chefe amōge hilles, and exalted aboue al litle hilles. ^mAnd al heithē shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shal go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: ⁿvp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of γ God of Iacob: γ he maye shewe us his waye, ^oand γ we maye walke in his pathes. ^pFor γ lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and speares, to make sythes, cycles τ sawes therof.

^qFrom that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, nether shal they lerne to fight from thensforth. It is to the that I erie (o house of Iacob) vp, let us walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abrode with thy people (o house of Iacob) for ye go farre beyonde youre fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers (whom ye haue as the phylistynes had) or in calkers of mens byrthes, wherof ye haue to many. ^rAs soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stronge horses and no ende of youre charettes: ^sInmediatly was it ful of Idols also, euen workes of youre owne hondes, which ye youre selues haue facioned, and youre fingers haue made. ^tThere kneleth the man, there falleth the man downe before

And therefore get ŷ soone in to some rock, ^aand hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from ŷ glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downe ŷ high lokes of presumptuous personnes, ^aand bryngeth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shall be exalted in ŷ daye. For the daye of ŷ LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde τ presumpciō, vpon all thē that exalte thē selues, and shal bringe them all downe: vpō all high τ stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all costly towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge ŷ is glorious and pleasaunt to lueky vpon.

And it shall bringe downe the pryde of man, ^aand laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. ^aBut the Idols shal utterly be roted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, ^aand in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearfull iudge, and from the glory of his magesty: ^awhat tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, thē shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to honour the) vnto Molles and Backes: that he maye the better crepe in to the caues and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from ŷ sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesty.

The iij. Chapter.

EVERY man can eschue a persone moued in anger, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal ŷ LORDE of hoostes take awaye frō Ierusalē τ Iuda, all possessiōs τ power, all meat and drinke, ŷ captayne and the soudyare, ŷ iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde, and the honorable: the Senatours, and men of vnderstandinge: the masters of craftes and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre prynces (saieyth the LORDE) and babes shall haue the rule of you. ^aOne shall euer be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his owne kynred by ŷ bosome, and saye: thou hast clothinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and parell.

Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Morouer, there is nether meate ner clothinge in my house, make me no rueter of the people. For Ierusalem and Iuda must decaye, because that both their wordes and counceils are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magesty vnto anger. The chaunginge of their countenance bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes thesē selues, as the Sodomites, τ hyde thē not. Wo be vnto their soules, for they shalbe henely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happie are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. ^aBut wo be to ŷ vngodly and vnrightuous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, ryaudes oppresse ŷ, and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders deceaue the, and ^atreade out the waye of thy footsteppes. ^aThe LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stondesth to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, ^aand shal saye thus vnto them: It is ye that haue burnt vp my vnyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherfore do ye oppresse my people, and marre ŷ faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hoostes reuyle them.

Morouer thus saieyth ŷ LORDE: Seinge the daughters of Sion are become so proude, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycey with their fete: Therefore shal the LORDE shaue the heades of the daughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgiousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, partlettes, and colares, bracelettes and houees, ŷ goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymēt, brusshes and headbandes, rynges and garlades, holy daye clothes and vales, kerchues and pynnes, glasses and smockes, bonettes and taches.

The iiii. Chapter.

AT that tyme shall their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal syt as desolate folck vpon the earth. Then shall seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye: we will laye all oure meat and clothinge together in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprofē maye be takē from us. ^aAfter that tyme shal the branch of \bar{y} LORDE be beautiful and mightie, and \bar{y} frute of the earth shalbe fayre and pleasaunt ^b for those Israelites that shall sprynge therof. Then shall the remnaunt in Sion and the remnaunt at Ierusalem be called holy: namely al such as are written amonge the luyngē at Ierusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shall wash awaye the desolacion of the daughters of Siō, and poure the bloude out from Ierusalem, with \bar{y} wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Morouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE prouyde a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shynghe of a flammynge fyre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserued. And Ierusalem shall be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of hete in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The v. Chapter.

NOW well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vnyyearde. ^cMy beloued frende hath a vnyyearde in a very frutefull plenteous grounde. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin. And afterwarde when he looked \bar{y} it it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Citysens of Ierusalem and whole Iuda:) Iudge I praye you betwixte me: and my wynecardinge. ^dWhat more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Wherefore then hath it geuen thornes, where I looked to haue had grapes of it.

Well, I shall tell you how I will do with my vnyyearde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe \bar{y} wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waist, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and breares. I wil also forbyd \bar{y} cloudes, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vnyyearde of the LORDE of hoostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Iuda his fayre plantinge. Of these he looked for equitye, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but misery.

Wo to you that ioyne one house to another, and bringe one loude so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more grounde. ^eWil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hoostes rowneth me thus: i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgious houses be so waist, that no man shall dwell in thē? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sede shal geue but thre.

Wo be vnto them that ryse vp early to vse them selues in dronkynnes, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, ^ftabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regarde not the worke of the LORDE, ^gand cosidre not the operaciō of his honde. Therefore cometh my folck also in captiuyte, ^hbecause they haue no vnderstondynge. Their glory shalbe myxte with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurste. Therefore gapeth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdom, with such as reioyse therin, maye descende in to it.

Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hoostes, \bar{y} holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equitye and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal \bar{y} lames eate their apoynted foder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Wo vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto thē, as it were with a coorde: and synne, as it were with a cart rope. Which vse to speake on this maner: let him make haist now, and ¶ Wo vnto them that call euell good, and good euell: which make darcknesse light, and light darcknesse, y^e make sower swete, and swete sower. Wo vnto them that are wyse in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue vnderstodinge. ¶ Wo vnto them, y^e are connyng men to suppe out wyne, and experte to set vp drökēnesse. ¶ These gyue sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the righteous.

¶ Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful) their blossome shal vanish awaye like dust or smoke, for they despyse the lawe of the LORDE of hoostes, and blaspheme the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

¶ Therefore is the wrath of the LORDE kyn- dled also agaynst his people, and he shaketh his honde at them: yee he shal smyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcases shal lye in the opē stretes, like myre. ¶ After all this, the wrath of God shal not cease, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, and call vnto them in a farre countre: and beholde, they shal come hastily with spede. There is not one faynt nor feble amonge them, no not a slogish nor sleperry parson.

¶ There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, ner lowse the lachet of his shue. Their arrowes are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hooves are like flynt, and their cart wheles like a stormy wynde. Their crye is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons whelpes. They shal roare, and hātch vp the praye, and no man shal recouer it or get it from thē. In that daye they shalbe so fearece vpon them, as the see. And yf we loke vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. Yf we loke to heauen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperacion.

The vi. Chapter.

¶ IN the same yeare y^e kynge Osias dyed, I sawe the LORDE^a sittinge vpon an high and glorious seate, and his trayne fylled y^e palace. From aboue flakred the Seraphins, wherof euery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech couered his face, with twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hoostes.^b The whole worlde is ful of his glory. Yee the geastes and dorechekes moued at their crienge, and the house was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: O wo is me. For I was astonished: that I (which am a man of vn- clene lippes, and dwell amonge people y^e hath vnclene lippes also:) Shulde se y^e Kyng and LORDE of hoostes with myne eyes.

¶ Then flewe one of the Seraphins vnto me, hauinge a hote cole in his honde, which he had taken from the altuer with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, and thy vnrightounesses is taken awaye, and thy synne forgeuen. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge aduysment on this maner: Whom shal I sende, and who wilbe oure messaunger? Thē I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shal heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstonde, ye shal planely se, and not perceaue. Harden the harte of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not with their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnder- stonde not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

¶ Then spake I: LORDE, how longe? he answered: vntil the cities be vtterly without inhabitours, and y^e houses without men, till the lōde be also desolate, and lye vnbuylded. For the LORDE shal take the men farre awaye, so that the londe shal lye waist. Ne- uertheles, the tenth parte shal remaine therin, for it shal couerte and be fruitful. And likewise as the Terebyntes and Oketrees bringe forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute.^c

Israel: wente vp toward Ierusalem to besege it (but wanne it not.) Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, y Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herte quaked (yee and y hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Iasub) at the heade of y ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thy self and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokyng fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Romelies sonne: because that the Kyng of Siria Ephraim and Romelies sonne haue wekely conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vexe thē, and brynge them vnder vs, and set a Kyng there, euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saith the LORDE God ther to, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head cite of y Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threcore yere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chefe cite of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Romelies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.^a Morouer, God spake vnto Ahas, sayenge: require a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneth or towarde y hight aboue. The sayde Ahas: I will require none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therefore the LORDE shal geue you a token of him self: ^b Beholde, a virgin shal cōceau and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, y he maye knowe the euel, and chose y good. But or euer that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euel and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so afrayde for) shalbe desolate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpō thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme y Ephraim departed from Iuda) thorow y kyng of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whistle for the flies y are aboute the water of Egipte, and for y Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in y vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thynges, and in all corners.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shaue the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beard clene of, with the rasoure that he shall paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with y kyng of the Assirians. At the same tyme shall a man lyue with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundance of mylek, ^c he shal make butter and eat it. So that every one which remaineth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluerlinges) shalbe turned to brears and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arowes and bowes, so shal all the londe become brears and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vpō them, for feare of brears and thornes. But the eatel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The viij. Chapter.

MOROUER the LORDE sayde vnto me: ^d Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediaty I called vnto me faithfull wytnesses: Vrias the prest, and Zacharias y sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maherschalah haschbas, that is. a spedie robber, an hastie spoyler. For why, or euer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, y is father, and mother: shal y riches of Damascus and y substance of Samaria be takē awaye, ^e thorow the kyng of y Assirians.

The LORDE spake also vnto me, sayenge: ^f for so much as the people refuseth the stillrenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Romelies sonne: Beholde, the LORDE shal bringe mightie and great floudes of water vpon them: namely, ^g y kyng of the Assirians with all his power. Which shall poure out his furyousnes vpon euery man, and renue ouer all their bankes. And shal breake in vpon Iuda, increasinge in power, till he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe with his brode wynges,

C O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, herken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre counsel together, yet must youre counsel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prospere. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and toke me by y honde, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walcke in the waye of this people. He sayde morouer: rounde with none of thē, who so euer saye: yonder people are bounde together. ^aNeuertheles feare them not, nether be afrayde of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hoostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifienge, and stone to stombe at, y rock to fall vpon, a snare and net to both the houses: to Israel, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stombe, fall, and be brokē vpon him: yee they shalbe snared and taken.

D Now laye the witness together (sayde the LORDE) and seale the lawe with my disciples. Thus I waite vpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Iacob, and I loke vnto him. ^dBut lo, as for me, and the children which the LORDE hath geuen me: we are a token and a wondre in Israel, for the LORDE of hoostes sake, which dwelleth vpon the hill of Syon.

And therefore yf they saye vnto you: aske counsel at the soothsayers, witches, charmers and coniurers, then make them this answer: Is there a people enywhere, that axeth not counsel at his God: whether it be concernyng the dead, or the luyng? ^eYf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanyng. Yf he do not this, he stombeleth and suffreth hūger. And yf he suffre hunger, he is out of pacience, and blasphemeth his kynge and his God. Then loketh he vwarde, and downe warde to the earth, and bolde, there is trouble and darcknesse, vexacion is rounde aboute him, and the cloude of erreure. And out of soch aduersite, shall he not escape.

The ii. Chapter.

EUEN like as in tyme past it hath bene well sene, ^fthat y londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nephthali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer Iordane in to the londe of Galilee) ^gwas at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles y people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwell in the londe of the shadowe of death, vpon them shal the light shyne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? ^hThey shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, and the rod of his oppressoure, as in y daye at Madiā.

Morouer all temerarious and sedicious power (yee where there is but a cote fylled with bloude) shalbe burnt, and fede the fyre. For vnto us a childe shalbe borne, and vnto us a sonne shalbe geuē. Vpon his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shalbe called with his owne name: ⁱThe wōderous geuer of counsel, the mightie God, the euerlastinge father the pryncce of peace, he shal make no ende to increase the kyngdome and peace, and shal syt vpon the seate of Dauid and in his kyngdome, to set vp the same, to establish it with equyte and rightuousnesse, from thence forth for euermore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe.

C The LORDE sent a worde in to Iacob, the same is come in to Israel. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwell in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie stomackes, on this maner: The tyle worcke is fallen downe, but we will buylde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ys broken, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemie agaynst thē, and so ordre their aduersaries, that y Sirians shal laye holde vpon them before, and the Philistynes behynde, and so deuoure Israel with open mouth.

After all this, the ^awrath of the LORDE shal not cease, but yet his hande shalbe stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether do they seke the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore the LORDE shal rote out of Israel both heade and tale, branch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by \hat{y} tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceauers. Soch as men thinke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

D Therefore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge mē, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For thei are altogether ypoerites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake foly. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet his honde shalbe stretched out still. For the yngodly burne, as a fyre in the bryers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redebush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal \hat{y} wrath of the LORDE of hoostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shalbe consumed, as it were with fyre, no man shal spare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal famesh, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Euery man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this shal not the LORDES wrath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The r. Chapter.

A WO be vnto you \hat{y} make vnrighthous lawes,^b and deuyse thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: werthorow the poore are oppressed, on euery syde, and the innocētes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wyddowes maye be youre praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherlesse. What will ye do in tyme of the visitacion and destruction, that shal come from farre? To whom will ye renne for helpe? or to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it? that ye come not amonge the presoners, or lye amonge the deed? After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

^c Wo be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punyishment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypoeritish people, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfaoure shal I send him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanyng is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saith: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as easie to wynde, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquare Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damascus thē Samaria? As who say: I were able to wynde the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not Ierusalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vnto Ierusalem and their ymagēs, as I dyd vnto Samaria and their ymagēs?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone as I haue performed my whole worcke vpon the Hyl of Syon and Ierusalem: thē will I also vyset the noble and stoute kyng of Assiria, with his wysdome and pryde. For he stondesth thus in his owne ēceate: This do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wisdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their prynces: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath founde out the hoostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, \hat{y} darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whispe.

^d But doth the axe boost itself, agaynst him \hat{y} heweth therwith, or doth the sawe make eny krakinge, agaynst him that ruleth it? That were euen like, as yf the rod dyd exalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though \hat{y} staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodd. ^e Therefore shal the LORDE of hoostes sende him pouerte in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. ^a But the light of Israel shalbe \hat{y} fyre, and his Sanctuary shalbe the flame, and it shal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and bryers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddes and feldes shalbe consumed with body and soule. As for him self, he shalbe as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shalbe of such a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

D After \hat{y} daye shal the remnaunt of Israel, and such as are escaped out of the house of Iacob, seke no more coforte at him that smote them, but shal conforte them selues with faithfulnessse and treuth in the LORDE, the holy, one of Israel. ^b The remnaunt, yee and the Posteryte of Iacob, shal cōuert vnto God the mighty one. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only conuert vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgmēt of him that floweth in rightuousnesse: and therefore \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determyned in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therefore thus saieih the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not afrayde for the kinge of the Assirians: He shal wagg his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egip̄tiās dyd sometyme: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfilled agaynst their blasphemies.

E Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal prepare a scourge for him, ^c like as was the punyshmēt of Madīā vpō \hat{y} mount of Oreb. ^d And he shal lift vp his rod ouer the see, as he dyd somtyme ouer the Egip̄tians. Then shal his burthen be taken from thy shulders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the same yock shal corrupte for very fatnesse. He shal come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shal he muster his hooste, and go ouer \hat{y} foorde. Gaba shal be their restinge place, Rhama shalbe afrayde, Gaba Saul shal fle awaye. The voyce of \hat{y} noyse of thy horses (o daughter Gallim) shalbe herde vnto lais and to Anathoth, which also shalbe in trouble. Madnena shal tremble for feare, but the citesyus of Gabīm are māly, yet shal he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shal he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and agaynst the hill of Ierusalem. But se, the LORDE God of hoostes shal take awaye the proude from thence, with feare. He shal hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shal be rooted out with yron, and Libanus shal haue a mightie fal.

The xi. Chapter.

AFTER this there shal come a rod forth ^a out of \hat{y} Kynrede of Iesse, and a blossome out of his rote. The sprete of the LORDE shal light vpon it: the sprete of wysdome, and vnderstandinge: the sprete of counceyl, and strength: \hat{y} sprete of knowlege, and of the feare of God: and shal make him feruent in the feare of God. For he shal not geue sentēce, after the thinge \hat{y} shal be brought before his eies, nether reprove a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightuousnesse shal he iudge the poore, and with holynes shal he reforme the symple of the worlde.

^c He shal smyte \hat{y} worlde with \hat{y} staff of his mouth, ^d and with \hat{y} breath of his mouth shal he slaye the wicked. ^e Rightuousnesse shalbe the gyrdle of his loynes, treuth and faithfulnessse the gyrdinge vp of his raynes. ^f Thē shal \hat{y} wolfe dwel with the lābe, ^g and the leoparde shal lye downe by the gote. ^h Bullokes, lyons and catel shal kepe company together, so that a litle childe shal dryue them forth. The cowe and the Bere shal fede together, and their yongones shal lye together. The lyō shal eate strawe like the oxe, or the cowe. The childe whyle he sucketh, shal haue a desyre to the serpentis nest, and whē he is weened, he shal put his hande in to the Cockatryce denne. ⁱ Noman shal do euil to another, no man shal destroye another, in all the hill of my Sanctuary. For the earth shalbe ful of \hat{y} knowlege of \hat{y} LORDE, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shal the Gentiles enquire after the rote of Iesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. ^k At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, to conquere \hat{y} remnaunt of his people (which are left alyue) From the Assiriās, Egīptians, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiās and Ilōdes of the see. ^a And he shal set vp a tokē amonge the Gentiles, and gather together ŷ dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Iuda from the foure corners of ŷ worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and ŷ emmyte of Iuda shalbe elene rooted out. Ephraim shal beare no euell wil to Iuda, and Iuda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpō the sholders of the Philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Idumytes and the Moabites shal let their hōdes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tunges of the Egīpeās see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal synyte his seuē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, ŷ remayneth from the Assiriāns, ^b like as it happened to ŷ Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the londe of Egīpte.

The xij. Chapter.

SO that then thou shalt saye: O LORDE, I thanke thee, for thou wast displeasid at me, but thou hast refrayned thy wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. ^c Beholde, God is my health, in whom I trust, and am not afrayde. For the LORDE God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shalbe my refuge. Therefore with ioye shal ye drawe water out of the wellles of the Sauoure, and then shal ye saye: ^d Let vs geue thanks vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name, and declare his counceles amonge the people, and kepe them in remembrance, for his name is excellēt. O synge praises vnto the LORDE, for he doth greate thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greate is thy prince: the holy one of Israel.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THIS is ŷ heuy burthē of Babilō, which Esaye the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some tokēs to the hie hilles, ^e call vnto them, holde vp youre hōde, that the prynces maye go in at the dore. For I will sende for my debites and my gyaūtes (sayeth the LORDE) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as tryumphe in my glory.

^f With that, me thought I herde in the mōūtaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greate people: and a ruszshinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come together. (And the LORDE of hoostes was the captayne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauē: Euē the LORDE himself with the ministers of his wrath, to destroye the whole lōde. Mourne therefore, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from ŷ allmighty. Then shall all hondes be letten downe, and all mens hertes shal melt awaie, they shal stonde in feare, carefulnesse and sorowe shal come vpō them, and they shal haue payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. ^g One shall euer be abzshed of another, and their faces shal burne, like ŷ flāme.

For lo, the daye of the LORDE shall come, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the londe waist, and to root out the synne therof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shal not geue their light, the Sonne shalbe quenched in the rysinge, ^h and the Mone shal not shyne with his light. And I wil punysh the wickednesse of the worlde, and the synnes of the vngodly, sayeth the LORDE. The hie stomackes of the proude will I take awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of tyrautes. I will make a man dearer thē fyne golde, and a man to be more worth, thē a golden wedge of Ophir. Morouer, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shall remoue out of hir place.

Thus shall it go with Babilon, in the wrath of the LORDE of hoostes in ŷ daye of his fearfull indignaciō. And Babilon shalbe as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke without a shepherde. Euery mā shal turne to his owne people, and fle echone in to his owne londe. Who so is founde alone, shalbe shot thorow: And who so gather together, shalbe destroyed with the swerde. Their children shalbe slayne before their eyes, their houses spoyled, and their wyues rauyshed. For lo, I shall bringe vp ŷ Medes agaynst thē, which

And Babilō (ŷ glory of kīgdomes and bewtie of the Caldees honoure) shalbe destroyed, enū as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorra.* It shal neuer be more inhabited, nether shal there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion.

The Arabians shal make no mo tentes there, nether shall the shepardes make their foldes there eny more: but wylde beastes shal lie there, ⁊ ŷ houses shalbe full of greate Oules. BUT ŷ LORDE wilbe mercyfull vnto Iacob, ⁊ wyll take vpon Israel agayne, ⁊ set thē in their owne lōde. Straūgers shal cleue vnto thē, ⁊ get thē to ŷ house of Iacob. ^b They shal take ŷ people, ⁊ cary thē home with thē. And ŷ house of Israel shal haue thē in possession, for seruantes ⁊ maydēs in ŷ lōde of ŷ LORDE. They shal take those prisoners, whose captiues they had bene afore: ⁊ rule those, ŷ had oppressed thē. When ŷ LORDE now shal bringe ŷ to rest, frō ŷ traunayle, feare, ⁊ harde bondage ŷ thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon ŷ kinge of Babilon, ⁊ saye: How happeneth it ŷ ŷ oppressour leaueth of? Is ŷ golden tribute come to an ende? Doutles the LORDE hath broken the staff of the vngodly, ⁊ the cepter of ŷ lordly. Which whē he is wroth, smytheth ŷ people with durable strokes, ⁊ in his wōders he persecuteth thē, ⁊ tameneth thē cōtinually. And therefore ŷ whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, ⁊ men synge for ioye.

B Yee euen the Fyrre trees and Cedres of Libanus reioyse at thy fall, sayenge: Now ŷ thou art layde downe, there come no mo vpon to destroye vs. Hell also trembleth at thy commynge. All mightie men and prynces of the earth, steppe forth before the. All kynges of the earth stonde vpon frō their seates, that they maye all (one after another) synge and speake vnto the. Art thou wounded also as we? art thou become like vnto vs? Thy pompe and thy pryde is gone downe to hell: Mothes shalbe layde vnder the, ⁊ wormes shalbe thy coueringe.

How art thou fallen from heauen ^c (o Lucifer) thou faire mornige childe? hast thou gotten a fall euen to the grounde, thou that (notwithstandinge) dyddest subdue the people? And yet thou thoughtest in thine harte: I will clymme vpon in to heauen, and make my seate aboute the starres of God, I wyll syt vpon the glorious mount toward the North, I wyll clymme vpon aboute the cloudes, ⁊ wilbe like the highest of all. Yet darre I laye, ŷ thou shalt be brought downe to the depe of hell. ^c They that se the, shal narrowly loke vpon the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all londes in feare, and made ŷ kingdomes afrayde: Is this he that made the worlde in a maner waist, ⁊ layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his prisoners go home?

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, euery one at home in his owne palace, with worshippe, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are shott thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead coarse that is troden vnder fete: and art not buried with them? Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lōde, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without honoure, for euer. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childrē, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vpon agayne to possess the londe, and fyll the worlde ful of castels and townes.

I wil stonde vpon agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and root out ŷ name and generacion of Babilon (saieth the LORDE) ⁊ wil geue it to the Otters, and wil make water poddels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruction, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne an ooth, sayēge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: ⁊ shalbe fulfilled as I haue denyed. ^d The Assirians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountaynes wyll I treade them vnder fete.

But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, ⁊ the poore of my people shall put their trust in him.

The xv. Chapter.

⁊ THIS is y heuy burthē vpō Moab: Ar of Moab was destroyed (as me thought) in the night season: ^c The walles of Moab perished in the night, ⁊ vanished awaye: They wete to Baith and Dibon in the lie places, for to wepe: Moab did mournē frō Nebo to Medba: All their heades were colled, and al their beardes shauen. ^d In their stretes were they gyrded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses ⁊ stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and wepinge. Hesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Iabaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went vp to Lubith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for y hurte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed, ⁊ what necessary grene thinge there was besyde. In like maner the thinge y was left them of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Araby.

The drie went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaim vnto Beer, was there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of bloude, for y enemye had sent thither a bonde of men, which as a lyon, layde waite for the remnaunt of the londe, and for them y were escaped.

The xvi. Chapter.

THEN sent the lordes of the lōde a mā of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the daughter Sion (For as for the daughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byrde, y is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre counceel, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, as the night doth: hyde the chased, ⁊ bewraye not thē that are fled, let the persecuted Moabites dwell amonge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppreseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, ⁊ the tyraunte dryueth vs out of oure londe. But y Trone of youre kingdome is ful of grace, therefore he that syteth vpon it with faithfulness ⁊ treuth in the house of Dauid, knowe the thinge ⁊ do his diligence to helpe shortly, accordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs pride (shal they answeere) it is wel knowne. ^e And all though they be excellent, proude, arrogant, ⁊ hie mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therefore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: ⁊ now y they be smytten, they take their deuyce beneth by the bryckwall, and make their cōplaynte.

The suburbes also of Hesebon were made waist, ⁊ the princes of the Gentyles hewed downe y vnyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spred vnto Iazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their selues forth beyonde the see. Therefore I mourned for Iazer, ⁊ for y vnyardes of Sibma with greate sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon ⁊ Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their haruest ⁊ gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of y felde ⁊ vnyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner sunge. There wcte no treader in to the wynepresse, their mery chere was layde downe. Wherefore my bely rōbled (as it had bene a lute) for Moabs sake, ⁊ myne inwarde members, for the bryckwalles sake. For it happened thus also: whē Moab sawe that she was turned vp syde downe: "she went vp an hie in to hir sanctuary, to make hir prayer there, but she might not be helped. This is the deuyce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In three yere shal ŷ power of Moab with their pōpe (which is greate) be minished, like as ŷ burthē of an hyred seruante: And as for ŷ remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not rekened moch worth.

The rviij. Chapter.

THIS is the heuy burthē vpō Damascus: ^aBeholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe waist, The catel shal lie there, ⁊ nomā shal fraye thē awaye. Ephraim shal no more be strōge, ⁊ Damascus shal no more be a kyngdome. And as for ŷ glory of ŷ remnaunt of ŷ Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childrē of Israel, saieth ŷ LORDE of hoostes. At that tyme also shal ŷ glory of Iacob be very poore, ⁊ his fatnes leane. It shal happē to thē, as when one sheareth in haruest, which cutteth his handfull with the sickle, ⁊ when one gathreth ŷ sheaues together in the valley, of Rephaim, there remaineth yet some ears ouer. Or as whē one shaketh an olyue tre, ^cwhich fyndeth but two or thre olyue berries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

Then shal man cōuerte agayne vnto his maker, ⁊ turne his eyes to the holy one of Israel. And shal not turne to the autlers that are ŷ worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he loke vpon groaues ⁊ ymages, which his fyngers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once ŷ forsakē plowes ⁊ corne, which they forsoke, ^dfor feare of ŷ children of Israel.

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God thy Sauoure, ⁊ hast not called to remēbraunce ŷ rock of thi strēgh, Wherefore thou hast also set a layre plāte, ⁊ grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of thi sede: But in the daye of haruest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes ⁊ miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that russ in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. For though so many people increase as the flowing waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyrle wynde thorow a storme. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with thē, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

The rviij. Chapter.

WO be to the londe of sfienge shippes, which is of this syde ŷ floude of Ethiopia: which sendeth hir message ouer the see in shippes of redes vpō ŷ water, and sayeth: go soone, and do youre message vnto a straunge and harde folke: to a fearful people, ⁊ to a people ŷ is further then this: to a desperate and pylled folke, whose londe is deuyded from vs with ryuers of water. Yee all ye ŷ syt in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpō the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the horne bloweth, then herken to, for thus hath ŷ LORDE sayde vnto me. I layde me downe, and pondred the matter in my house, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in haruest. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grence. Then one smote of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the buwes and the braunches, ⁊ dyd cast thē awaye. And thus they were layde waist, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for ŷ beastes of the earth together. So ŷ the foules sat ther vpon, and the beastes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is thē this: ŷ desperate and pylled folke (whose londe is deuyded from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hoostes: euen vnto the hill of Sion.

The ix. Chapter.

A THIS is the heuy burthen vpon Egyp̄te: Beholde, the LORDE wil ryde vpon a swifte cloude, and come in to Egyp̄te. And the goddes of Egyp̄te shal trymble at his cōmyng, and the hert of Egyp̄te shal quake within her. For thus saiech the LORDE: I wil stere vp the Egyp̄tians one agaynst another amonge them selues, ^aso that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neyhboure, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egyp̄te shalbe choked in hir self. Wh̄c they axe counsel at their goddes, at their Prophetes, at their sothsayers and witches: then will I bringe their counsel to naught.

B I wil delyuer Egyp̄te also in to the hondes of greuous rulers, and a cruel kinge shal haue the rule of them. The water of the see shalbe drawē out, Nilus shal synke awaye, τ be dronke vp. The ryuers also shalbe drawen out, the welles shal decreace and drie awaye. Rede and rush shal fayle, the grasse by the waters syde or vpon \hat{y} ryuers bancke, yee and what so euer is sowed by the waters, shalbe wythered, destroyed, τ brought to naught. The fyshers shall mourne, all such as cast angles in the water, shal complayne, τ they that sprede their nettes in the water, shalbe faynt harted. Such as labour vpon flax τ syleke, shal come to pouerte, τ they also that weewe fyne workes. All the poundes of Egyp̄te, all the policie of their Moates τ diches shal come to naught.^c

C Yee the vndiscrete prynces of Zoan, the ^dcouncil of the wyse Senatours of Pharao, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast τ saye of Pharaos behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of \hat{y} olde regall Progeny. But where are now thy wyse mē? Let them tel the τ shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egyp̄te. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, τ proude are the prynces of Noph: yee they ^edysecaue Egyp̄te with the nobilite of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egyp̄te dronckē with the sprete of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: eūc like as a dronckē mā goeth spewing aboute. For Egyp̄te shal lacke good counsel, so \hat{y} they shal not knowe what to do, nether beginnyng nor ende, nether vpon the lōde nor water. Thē shal \hat{y} Egyp̄tias be like vnto womē, afrayde τ astōied, at the lifyinge vp of the hōle, which \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Iuda also shal make the Egyp̄tians afrayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that because of the counceyl, which \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes hath deuyed agaynst them. Then shal the ryue cities of Egyp̄te speake with the Canaanites tunge, ande sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, τ Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an altur in the myddest of the londe of Egyp̄te, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testimony vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egyp̄te, when they shal crie vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Sauoure to delyuer them.

Morouer, Egyp̄te shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egyp̄tians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promyse him offringes, yee τ paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal smyte Egyp̄te, τ heale it agayne: τ so shal they turne to \hat{y} LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpō them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egyp̄te in to Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egyp̄te, and the Egeyptians in to Assiria. The Egyp̄tians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honour be the thirde to Egyp̄te and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blessed is my people of the Egyp̄tians, Assur is the worke of my hōdes, but Israel is myne enheritaunce.

Then sayde the LORDE: where as my seruaunt Esaye goeth naked and barefote, it is a token and signifienge of the thinge, that after three yere shal come vpō Egipte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians driue both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barefote, out of Egipte and Ethiopia.

3 And shal dyscouer ſhame of Egipte. They shalbe also at their wittes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egiptians of the Moryans, and the Morians of the Egiptians, at the sight of their glory.

Moreover they that dwell in ſ̄ Iles shal saye euen the same daye: beholde, this is oure hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be deluyered from the kinge of ſ̄ Assirians. How will we escape?

The xxi. Chapter.

12 THIS is the heuy burthē of the waist see: A greuous visiō was shewed vnto me, like as when a storme of wynde and rayne russeth in from the wyldernes, that terrible londe. Who so maye disceaue (sayde the voyce) let him disceaue: Who so maye distroye, let him distroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges. Myne herte paunted, I trembled for feare. The darcknesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

13 Yee soone make redy the table (sayde this voyce) kepe the watch, eate and drynke: Vp ye captaynes, take you to youre shyld, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchmā, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whē he had wayted diligentlly, he sawe two horsmen: the one rydinge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel. And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. For thei shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawē swerde, from the bēt bowe, and from the greate batell. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: ouer a yere shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the office of an hyred seruaunte goeth out: And the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, shalbe very few: For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

15 WHAT hast thou there to do, that thou clymnest vp in to the house toppē, o thou cite of miracles, sedicious and wilfull? seinge, thy slayne mē are nether killed with swerde, ner deed in batel? For all thy captaynes gat them to their horses from the ordinaunce, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. And ye shal make a pyt betwyxte ſ̄ twayne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothings regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tynce shal ſ̄ LORDE of hoostes cal mē to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaughter oxē, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, and drynke wyne: ^b let vs eate and drinke, tomorow we shal die. Neuertheles whē the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shalbe remitted, ye must die for it. This hath ſ̄ LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

C Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? or from whēce comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will deck the of another fashion, and put vpon the a straunge clothe. He shal carie ſ̄ in to a farre couētre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vylleyn of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

D After this wil I cal my seruaut Eliakim, ſ̄ sonne of Helkia, and araye him with thy cote, and gyrdle him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shalbe a father of the citisens of Ierusalem,^d and of the Kynred of Iuda. I will also laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shit, and yf he do shytt, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulness,^e and he shalbe vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal hāge vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childrē, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure and musike. This shal come to passe (saieith the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, ſ̄ is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulness: shalbe pluckt of, And whē the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peeces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AN heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourne ^a ye shippes of Tharsis, for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Indwellers of the Ilandes, the marchautes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of al people. Sidō is sory for it, yee and all ſ̄ power of the see cōplaneth, and saieith: O ſ̄ I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, ſ̄ I had nether norished boye, ner brought vp daughter. As soone as Egipte perceaneth it, she wilbe as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourne ye ſ̄ dwell in the Iles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite? whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commende her so greatly? Who hath deuyed soch thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of al cities, whose marchautes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? ^b Euē the LORDE of hoostes hath deuyed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (^co thou daughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

^d Thus the LORDE (that renoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out:) hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou daughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethēs. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enemy wil carie the, where thou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them. Assur buylded them: he set vp his castels and palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therfore mourne (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shalbe throwne downe.

After that, shal the lxx. yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happē to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the cite, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with dyuerse balettes, wherby thou mayest come in to acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. ^aThe LORDE shal usiet the cite of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundyse, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiege and wynnyng, shalbe halowed vnto the LORDE.^b For then shal they laye vp nothing behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaundise of Tirus shal belōge vnto the citizens of the LORDE, to the fedinge and susteninge of the hūgrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

The xxiij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, ^cƷ LORDE shal waist and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the earth desolate, ^dτ scatre abroad Ʒ inhabitants therof. Then shal the prest be as the people, the master as the seruaunt, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that lēdeth vpon vsury, like him ^eƷ boroweth vpon vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal ^fƷ worlde be waysted ^gτ clene destroyed. For ^hƷ LORDE hath so determed in himself. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of ⁱƷ earth shal perish ^jτ fal awaye, the proude people of ^kƷ worlde shal come to naught, For ^lƷ earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

For why? they haue offended ^mƷ lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerlasting testamēt of none effecte. And therefore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they ⁿƷ dwell therō, haue synned, wherfore they shalbe brent also, and those that remaine, shalbe very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all ^oƷ haue bene mery in barte, shal sighe. ^pThe myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to thē that drinke it, the wicked cities shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remaine in the cities, and the gates shalbe smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smytheth downe ^qƷ olyues, ^rƷ are left vpon the tre: ^sor seketh after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remaine) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, ^tτ shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the see, ^uτ prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and Hōdes. We heare songes sunge to the prayse of the rightuous, frō al the endes of the worlde. Therefore I must speake: O my vnfruitfulnesse, o my pouerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therefore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundation of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a sore ruyne, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a dronken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdeds shal lie so heuye vpon her, ^vƷ she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the lie hooste aboue, and ^wƷ kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in one ward and punished innumerable daies. ^xThe Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hoostes shal rule them at Ierusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent council.

The xv. Chapter.

OLORDE, thou art my God, I wil prayse the, and magnifie thy name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, accordinge to thine olde counceles, truly and stedfastly. ^yThou makest of townes, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyed thou out of the cite, that they shal neuer be buylded againe. Therefore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strēgth for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euēl wether, a shadowe agaynst the hete. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a strōge whyrle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrauntes.

B Morouer the LORDE of hoostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpon the hill: "A plenteous, costly, pleasaunt feast, of fat and welfed bestes, of swete and most pure thinges. Vpon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale y^e hūgeth before y^e face of al people, and the coueringe wherwith all Gentiles are couered. "As for death, he shal vtterly cōsume it, The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusō of his people thorow y^e whole worlde. For y^e LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse and delyste in his health. For the hōde of y^e LORDE ceaseth vpon this hill. But Moab shalbe throsshē downe vnder him, like as the straw is trodē vnder fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swymme. And with the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes and hie walles: he shal buwe them, cast thē downe, and fell thē to the grounde in to dust.

The xvi. Chapter.

A THEN shal this songe be sunge in the loude of Iuda: "We haue a strōge citie, the walles and the ordinaūce shal kepe vs. Opē y^e gates, y^e the good people maye go in, which laboureth for the treuth. And thou, which art the doer and hast the matter in honde: shalt prouyde for peace, "euē the peace y^e mē hope for in the. Hope stil in the LORDE, for in the LORDE God is euerlastinge strēgth. For why, it is he, y^e bringeth lowe the hie mynded citesyns, and casteth downe the proude cities. He casteth thē to the grōūde, yee euē in to y^e myre, y^e they maye be trodē vnder the fete of the y^emp, and with the steppes of the poore. "Thou (LORDE) cōsidrest the path of y^e rightuous, whether it be right, whether the waye of y^e rightuous be right. Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgmentes, thy name and thy remembrance reioyse the soule. "My soule lusteth after the all the night lōge, and my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse. But the vngodly (though he haue receaued grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, and feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

LORDE, they wil not se thine lie honde, but they shal se it, and be confounded: whē thou shalt denoure them with the wrath of the people, and with the fyre of thine enemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: for thou werkest in vs all oure workes. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue dominacion vpon vs as knowe not the: yet graūte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remembrance. "The malicious Tyrauntes whē they die, are nether in life nor in the resurrectiō, for thou visitest thē and rootest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increcest the people (o LORDE), thou increcest the people, thou shalt be prayed and magnified in all y^e endes of the worlde. The people that seke vnto the in trouble, that same aduersite which they complaine of, is vnto thē a chastenyng before the. Like as a wife with childe (whē hir trauayle cōmeth vpon her) is ashamed, crieth and suffreth the payne: Euē so are we (o LORDE) in thy sight. We are with childe, we trauayle, and beare, and with the sprete we bringe forth health, wherethorow the earth is vndestroyed, and the inhabitours of the worlde perish not.

"But as for thy dead men and ours, that be departed, they are in life and resurrection. They lie in the earth, they wake, and haue ioye: for thy dew is a dew of life and light. But y^e place of the malicious Tyrauntes is fallē awaye. "So go now my people in to thy chābre, and shut the doore to the, and suffre now y^e twicklinge of an eye, till the wrath be

A THEN the LORDE with his heuye, great and lōge swearde shal vyset Leuiathā, that invincible serpēt: eue Leuiathā ſcroked serpent, and shal slaye the Wallfish in ſ see. At the same tyme shal mē syng of the vnyyard of Muscatel. I the LORDE kepe it, and water it in due season. I watch daye ⁊ night, that no man breake in to it. I beare no euell wil in my mynde. Who will compell me, that I greatly forgettinge all faithfulness, shoulde burne it vp at once with thornes ⁊ bushes? Or who will enforce me to kepe or make peace? It wil come to this poynte, ſ Iacob shalbe rooted agayne, and Israel shalbe grene ⁊ beare floures, ⁊ they shal fyll ſ whole worlde with their frute. Smyteth he not his smyter, as euell as he is smyttē himself? B Destroiethe he not ſ murthurers, as he is murthured? Euery mā recōpenseth with ſ measure ſ he receaueth: He museth vpō his sore wynde, as vpō the dayes of extreme heate. And therefore shal the iniquite of Iacob be thus reconciled. And so shal he take awaye all ſ frute of his synnes.

^aAs for aulter stones, he shal make them all as stones beaten to poulder: the Groues and Idols shal not stonde. The stronge cities shalbe desolate, and ſ fayre cities shalbe left like a wildernes. The catel shal fede and lie there, and the shepe shal eat it vp. Their haruest shal be brent, ^c their wyues which were their bewtie when they came forth: shalbe defyled. For it is a people without vnderstōdinge, and therefore he ſ created them, shal not faouere them: and he ſ made them, shal not be merciful to thē. In ſ tyme shal ſ LORDE shute from ſ swifte water of Euphrates, vnto ſ ryuer of Egipte. And there shal the children be chosen out one by one. Then shal the greate trompet be blown, so that those which haue bene destroyed in the Assirians londe, and those that be scatred abrode in Egipte: shal come ⁊ worshipec the LORDE at Ierusalē, vpō the holy mount.

The xxvij. Chapter.

WO be to ſ crowne of pryde, to ſ dronkē Ephraemites, ^d and to the faydinge floure, to the glory of his pōpe, ſ is vpō the toppe of the plētuous valley: which mē be ouer laden with wyne. Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on euery syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouer flowinge water. And the proude crowne of the dronken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foote. And as for the faydinge floure, ^e the glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the haruest come. Which as soone as it is sene, is by and by deuoured, or euer it come well in a mans honde.

And then shal the LORDE of hoostes be a ioyful crowne, and a glorious garlande vnto the remnaunt of his people. Vnto the lowly, he shalbe a sprete of iudgment, and vnto them that dryue awaye the enemies from ſ gates, he shalbe a sprete of strēgth. B But they go wronge by ſ reason of wyne, they fall and stacker because of strōge drynke. Yee eue the prestes and prophetes them selues go amisse, ^f they are dronken with wyne, and weake braned thorow stronge drynke. They erre in seinge, and in iudgmēt they fayle. For all tables are so ful of vomyte and fylthynes, ſ no place is clene. What is he amonge them, ſ can teach, instructe or enforme the childrē, which are weened from suck or taken from the brestes: of eny other fashion, then: ^g Commaunde ſ maye be commaunded, byd ſ maye be byddē, forbyd that maye be forbyddē, kepe backe ſ maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle. ^hAnd therefore the LORDE also shal speake with lispinge lippes and with a straunge lāguage vnto this people, to whom he spake afore of this maner: This shal bringe rest, yf one refresh the weery, ye this shal bringe rest. But they had no will to heare. And therefore the LORDE shal answer the stubbournes (Cōmaunde ſ maye be cōmaunded, byd ſ maye be bydden, forbyd ſ maye be forbyddē, kepe backe ſ maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle) That they maye go forth, fall backward, be brusshed, snared and taken. Wherefore heare the worde of the LORDE, ye mockers that rule the LORDES people, which is at Ierusalē. For ye cōforte youre selues thus: Tush, death & we are at a poynte, & as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny sore plage, it shal not come vpon vs. ^a For with disceate wil we escape, and with nymblesnes will we defende oure selues. ^b Therefore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil laye a stone in Sion, a greate stone, a costly corner stone for a sure foundacion: ^c \hat{y} who so putteth his trust in him, shal not be confounded. Rightuousnes wil I set vp agayne in \hat{y} balance, and iudgment in the weightes. ^d The tēpest of hale shal take awaye youre refuge, that ye haue to disceane withal, and \hat{y} ouerflowinge waters shal breake downe youre strōge holdes of dissimulaciō. ^e Thus the appoyntmēt that ye haue made with death, shalbe done awaye, and the cōdicion that ye made with hell, shal not stōde. When the greate destructiō goeth thorow, it shal all to treade you, It shal take you quyte awaye before it. For it shal go forth early in the mornynge, and contynue only \hat{y} daye and \hat{y} night. And the very feare only shal teach you, when ye heare it. For \hat{y} bedde shal be so narrow \hat{y} a mā cā not lye vpon it. And the coueringe to small, that a mā maye not wynde him self therin. ^f For the LORDE shal steppe forth as he dyd vpon the mount Perazim, and shal take on as he dyd vpō the dale of Gabaon: that he maye bringe forth his deuyce, his straunge deuyce: and fulfil his worke, his wonderful worcke. And therefore make no mockes at it, that youre captiuyte increase not: for I haue herde the LORDE of hoostes saye, that there shal come a soden destruction and plage vpon the whole earth. ^g Take hede, and heare my voyce, pondre and merck my wordes wel. Goeth not the husbonde man euer in due season earnestly to his londe? he moweth & ploweth his grounde to sowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he soweth it with fitches or comyn. He soweth \hat{y} wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye also in their place. And \hat{y} he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and sheweth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and thre ouer the comyn, but he throsseth \hat{y} fitches out with a flae, and the comyn with a rool. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bred therof, In as moch as he can not bringe it to passe with treadinge out. For nether the brussinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beastes can grynde it. This and soch like thinges come of the LORDE of hostes which is maruelous in counceil, and greate in rightuousnesse.

The xxij. Chapter.

WO vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that David waie. ^a Take yet some yeares, and let some feastes yet passe ouer: then shal Ariel be beseged, so that she shal be heuy and sorouful, and shal be vnto me euen as a lyon. For I wil laye sege to the rounde aboute, and kepe \hat{y} in with towers, and graue vp dykes agaynst \hat{y} . And thou shalt be brought lowe, and speake out of the earth, and thy wordes shal go humbly out of \hat{y} grounde. Thy voyce shal come out of the earth, like the voyce of a witch, and thy talkinge shal groane out of the myre. For the multitude of thine enemies shalbe like mealdust. ^b And the nombre of Tyrauntes shalbe as \hat{y} dust that the wynde taketh awaye sodenly.

Thou shalt be visited of the LORDE of hoostes with thondre, earth quake, and with a greate crack, with the whyrle wynde, tempest, and with the flame of a consumynge fyre. But now the multitude of all the people, that went out agaynst Ariel: the whole hooste, the stronge holdes, and sege: is like a dreame which apeareth in the night. ^c It is like as when an hungrie man dreameth that he is eatynge, and when he awaketh, he hath nothinge: like as when a thurstie man dreameth that he is drinkeing, and when he awaketh, he is faynt, and his soule vnpatient.

So is the multitude of all people, that mustre them selues agaynst the hill of Sion. But ye shalbe at youre wittes ende, ye shalbe abashed: ye shal stackre, and rele to and fro. Ye shalbe dronken, but not of wyne. Ye shal fall, but not thorow dronkenes: For the LORDE shal geue you an hard slepinge sprete, and holde downe youre eyes: namely youre prophetes and heades which shulde se, them shal he couer. ^d And all visions shalbe altogether be destroyed. For thus hath the LORDE spokē vnto me: ^aLike as the Lyon or lyōs whelpes roareth vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not afrayde, though ſ multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, nether abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hoostes come downe from the mount Sion, and defende his hill. Like as byrdes flote aboute their nestes, so ^bshal the LORDE of hoostes kepe, saue, defende and deliuer Ierusalem. Therefore (o ye childrē of Israel) turne agayne, like as ye haue exceded in youre goinge back. For in ſ daye euery man shal cast out his Idols of syluer and golde, ^cwhich ye haue made with youre synful hondes. Assur also shalbe slayne with the swerde, not with a mans swerde. A swerde shal deuoure him, ^dbut not a mans swerde. And he shal fle from the slaughter, and his seruantes shalbe taken prisoners. He shal go for feare to his stronge holdes, and his prynces shal fle from his badge. This hath ſ LORDE spokē, whose light burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Ierusalem.

The xxxij. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, the kinge shal gouerne after ſ rule of rightuousnes, and ſ princes shal rule accordinge to the balance of equite. He shalbe vnto mē, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as a ryuer of water in a thurstie place, and ſ schadowe of a greate rock in a drie lōde. The eyes of the seinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligēt hede. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparfite tūge shal speake planely and distinctly. Then shal the nygarde be no more called gentle, ner the churle lyberall. But the churle wil be churlishly mynded, and his hert wil worke euell and playe the ypocrite, and ymagyn abhominaciōs agaynst God, to make the hungrie leane, and to withholdre drinke from the thurstie: These are the perlous weapons of the cуетous, these be his shameful counceils: that he maye begyle the poore with disceatful workes, yee euen there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. ^eBut the liberal person ymagineth honest thinges, and commeth vp with honesty.

Vp (ye rich and ydle cities), harken vnto

my voyce. Ye careles cities, marcke my wordes. After yeares and dayes shal ye be brought in feare, o ye carelesse cities. For Haruest shalbe out, and the grape gatheringe shal not come. O ye rich ydle cities, ye that feare no parell, ye shalbe abashed and remoued: when ye se the barennesse, the nakednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knock vpō youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the fruteful vnyarde. My peoples felde shal bringe thornes and thistels, for in euery house is voluptuousnes ^f in the cities, wilfulness. The palaces also shalbe broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towers and bulwerkes shal become dennes for euermore, the pleasure of Mules shalbe turned to pasture for shepe: Vnto the tyme that ſ sprete be poured vpon vs from aboue.

Then shal the wilderness be a fruteful felde ^g in the cities, and the plenteous felde shalbe rekened for a wodde. Then shal equyte dwell in the deserte, and rightuousnesse in a fruteful londe. ^hAnd the rewarde of rightuousnesse shalbe peace, and hir frute rest and quietnesse for euer. ⁱAnd my people shal dwell in the ynnes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in thē all. And whē the hale falleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the cite. O how happy shal ye be, whē ye shal safely sowe youre sede besyde all waters ^j and dryue thither the fete of youre oxē ^k and asses.

The stretes are waist, there walketh no man therin, the appoyntment is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a sporte, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basā ⁊ Charmel are turned

B vpside downe. And therefore saieþ ꝑ LORDE: I wil vp, now wil I get vp, now wil I aryse. ^a Ye shal conceate stubble, and beare strawe, ⁊ youre sprete shal be the fyre, that it maye consume you: ⁊ the people shalbe burnt like lyme, ⁊ as thornes burne that are hewen of, ⁊ cast in the fyre.

Now herken to (ye that are farre of) how I do with them, ⁊ cōsidre my glory, ye that be at honde. The synners at Sion are afrayde, a sodane fearfulness is come vpon the ypo-crytes. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumyng fyre? which of vs maye abyde that euerlasting heate? ^b He that ledeth a godly life (saye I) ⁊ speaketh the treuth: He that abhorreth to do violence and disceate: he that kepeth his hōde that he touch no rewarde: which stoppeth his eares, that he heare no counceel agaynst the innocent: which holdeth downe his eyes, that he se no euell. He it is, that shal dwell on hie, whose sauegarde shalbe in the true rocke, to him shalbe geuen the right true meat ⁊ drynke. His eyes shal se the kyng in his glory: ⁊ in the wyde worlde, and his herte shal delite in the feare of God.

C What shal then become of the scribe? ^c of the Senatoure? what of him that teacheth childrē? There shalt thou not se a people of a straunge tūge, to haue so diffused a lāguage, that it maye not be vnderstonde: nether so straunge a speache, but it shal be perceaued.

There shal Sion be sene, the head cite of oure solempne feastes. There shal thine eyes se Ierusalem that glorious habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue, ^d whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Magesty of the LORDE shal there be present amōge vs. In that place (where fayre broade ryuers ⁊ streames a) shal nether Gallye rowe, ner greate shippe sale. For the LORDE shalbe oure capteyne, the LORDE shalbe oure lawe geuer, The LORDE shalbe oure kinge, ⁊ he himself shalbe oure Sauoure. There are the coardes so layd abrode, that they cā not be better: The mast set vp of such a fashion, that no bāner ner sale hāgeth therō: but there is dealed greate spoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. There lieth no mā that saieþ: I am sick, but all euell is taken awaye from the people, that dwell there.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

COME ye Heithen ⁊ heare, take hede ye people. Herkē thou earth ⁊ all that is therein: thou rounde cōpasse ⁊ al that groweth thervpon: for the LORDE is angry with al people, ⁊ his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, ⁊ to slaye them. So that their slayne shalbe cast out, ⁊ their bodies stincke: that euē the very hillis shalbe wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shalbe consumed, ⁊ the heauen shal folde together like a roll, ⁊ all the starres therof shall fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and fygetrees. For my swearde (saieþ he) shalbe bathed in heauen, ⁊ shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeance.

And the LORDES swearde shalbe full of bloude, ⁊ be rustie with the fatnesse ⁊ bloude of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORDE shal kyl a great offringe in Bosra, and in the londe of Idumea. There shal the Vnicornes fall with the Bulles, (that is with the giauntes) and their londe shalbe washed with bloude, ⁊ their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shal come the daye of the vengeance of God, ^e and the yere when as thine owne iudgmentes shalbe recompensed. Thy floudes shalbe turned to pyth, and thine earth to brynmstone, ⁊ therewith shal the londe be kyndled, so that it shal not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, ⁊ so forth to lie waist. And no man shal go thorow thy londe for euer: ^f But Pellicanes, Storkes, great Oules, and Rauens shal haue it in possession, ⁊ dwell there in.

desolacion vpon it, ⁊ weye it with the stones of emptynes. When kinges are called vpo, there shalbe none, and all princes shalbe awaye. Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettels ⁊ thistles in their strouge holdes, ⁊ the dragons maye haue their pleasure therein, ⁊ that they maye be a courte for Estriches. ^a There shal straunge viures and monstrous beastes mete one another, ⁊ the wyld kepe company together. There shal the lamia lye, ⁊ haue hir lodginge. There shall the hedghogge buylde, digge, be there at home, and bringe forth his yonge ones. There shal the kytes come together, ech one to his like.

^b Seke thorow the scripture of the LORDE ⁊ rede it. There shal none of these thinges be left out, there shal not one (ner soch like) fayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his sprete gather together (or fulfilleth). Vpon whom so ener ⁊ lot falleth, or to whom he dealeth it with the line: those shal possesse the inheritance from generacion to generacion, and dwel therein.

The lxxxv. Chapter.

BUT the deserte ⁊ wilderness shal reioyse, ⁊ ⁊ waist grounde shal be glad, and flourish as the lilly. She shal flourish pleasantly, and be ioyful, and euer be geuyng of thanks more and more. For ⁊ glory of libanus, the bewty of Charnel ⁊ Sarō shalbe geuen her. These shal knowe the honoure of the LORDE, and the magesty of oure God. And therefore strength ⁊ weake hōdes, and comforte the feble knees. ^c Saye vnto them that are of a fearful hert: Be of good chere, and feare not. Beholde: youre God cometh, to take vengeance ⁊ to rewarde, God cometh his owne self, and wil deliyuer you. ^d Then shal the eyes of the blind be lightned, and the eares of the deaff opened. Then shal the lame man leape as an herte, ⁊ the domme māns tūge shal geue thanks.

^e In the wilderness also there shal welles springe, and floudes of water in the deserte. The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to springes of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe swete floures and grene russes. There shalbe footpathes ⁊ comon stretes, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vncleue person shal go thorow it, for the LORDE himself shal go with thē that waye, and the ignoraūt shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no rauyshinge beast shall come therin nor be there, but men shal go there fre and safe. ^f And the redemed of the LORDE shal conuerte, and come to Sion with thankesgeuinge. Euerlastinge ioye shal they haue, pleasure ⁊ gladnesse shalbe amonge them, And as for all sorow and heuynes, it shal vanish awaye.

The lxxxvi. Chapter.

IN the xliij. yere of kinge Ezechias, ^g came Semacherib kinge of the Assiriens downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the kinge of the Assiriās sent Rabsaches from Laehis toward Ierusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with a greuouse hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow ⁊ fullers lōde. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim ^h Helchias sonne the presydent, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Tel Ezechias, that the great kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto? Thou thinkest (peraduecture) that thou hast counsel ⁊ power ynough, to mayntene this warre: or els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest thi self of fro me? lo, Thou putttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede ⁱ (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde ⁊ shuteth him thorow. Euen so is Pharao the kinge of Egipte, vnto all thē that trust in him. But yf thou woldest saye to me: We trust in ⁊ LORDE oure God: A goodly god, in dede: whose hie places ⁊ alteres Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and Ierusalem, to worshipe only before the alter. Abyde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lorde the kinge of the Assiriās, that he shulde geue the two thousande horses: Art thou able to set mē there vp? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest prynce that my lorde hath, how darrest thou trust in ⁊ charettes and horse men of Egipte? Morouer, thinkest thou ⁊ I am come downe hither, to destroye this londe with out the LORDES will? The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna ⁊ Iohah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the Iewes tunge, lest the folcke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabsaches: Thinke ye, ȳ the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you? Hath he not sent me to thē also, that lie vpō the wall? that they be not cōpelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, ⁊ cried with a loude voyce in the Iewes tige, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greate kinge of the Assiriās geueth you warnynge. Thus saieih the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceauē you, for he shal not be able to delyuer you. Morouer, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saieih: The LORDE with out doute shal defende vs, ⁊ shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assiriās, beleue him not. But thus saieih the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, enclnye to me: So maye euery mā enioye his vynyardes and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cisterne: vnto the tyme that I come myself, ⁊ bringe you in to a londe, ȳ is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both sown with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceauē you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal delyuer us.

“Might the goddesses of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of hemath ⁊ Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharnaim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddesses of the lōdes, hath deliuered their countre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde delyuer Ierusalem from my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaugers helde their tungen, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answer. So came Eliachim Elchias sonne the presidēt, Sobna the scribe, and Ioah Asaphs sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, ⁊ tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

WHEN Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes,^b ⁊ put on a sack cloth, ⁊ went in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the Presidēt, Sobna the scribe with the eldest prestes clothed in sack,^c vnto the Prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, ⁊ they sayde vnto him: Thus saieih Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plage ⁊ of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lorde ȳ kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie ⁊ blaspheme the Iyunge God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE thy God hath herde right well. And therefore lift vp thy prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saieih the LORDE: Be not afrayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assiriās seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him,^d as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I distroye him with the swerde. Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde ȳ kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, ȳ Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde ȳ, he sent other messaugers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceauē the, in whom thou hopest, ⁊ sayest: Ierusalē shal not be geuē in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, ⁊ hopest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gētiles (whom my progenitours coquered) deliuered at any tyme thorow their goddesses? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezeph,^e ⁊ the childrē of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, ⁊ the kinge of Arphad, ⁊ the kinge of the cite Sepharnaim, Eua and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued ȳ lettre of the messaugers, ⁊ red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, ⁊ opened the lettre before ȳ LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest vpō Cherubin. "Thou art the God, that only is God of all the kingdomes of the worlde,⁴ for thou only hast created hauē ⁊ earth. Encline thine eare LORDE ⁊ cōsidre, open thine eyes (o LORDE,) ⁊ se, and pondre all the wordes of Sēnacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blasphemē the, the Iyuyngē God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria haue cōquered all kingdomes ⁊ londes, ⁊ cast their goddes in the fyre. Notwithstōdinge those were no goddes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therefore haue they destroyed them. Delyuer vs then (o LORDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, ⁊ all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art ⁊ LORDE. Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saieſt ⁊ LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Sennacherib, this is the answere, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, ⁊ mocked (o daughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Ierusalem.⁵ But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? ⁶And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, ⁊ exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruantes hast blasphemed the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thy self: I couer the hie mountaynes, ⁊ sydes of Libanus with my horsinen. And there wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees ⁊ the fayrest Fyrre trees. I will vp in to the heyth of it ⁊ in to the chefest of his timbre woddēs. Yf there be no water, I wil graue ⁊ drynke. And as for waters of defence, I shal drie them vp with the fete of myne hooste. Yee (saieſt thou) hast thou not herde, what I haue taken in honde, ⁊ brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waist, destroye, ⁊ bringe the stronge cities vnto heapes of stones. For their inhabitants shalbe like lame men, brought in feare ⁊ confounded. They shalbe like the grasse ⁊ grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpō house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

E I knowe thy wayes, thy goinge forth ⁊ thy cōmyngē home, yee ⁊ thy madnesse agaynst me. Therefore thy furiousnesse agaynst me, ⁊ thy pryde is come before me. I wil put a rynge in thy nose, ⁊ a bridle byt in the chawes of the, ⁊ turne the aboute, euē the same waye thou earnest. I wil geue the also this token (o Ezechias) this yeaer shalt thou eate that is kepte in stoare, ⁊ the next yeaer such as groweth of himself, and in the thirde yeaer ye shal sowe and reape, yee ye shal plante vnyardes, and enioye the frutes therof.

And soch of the house of Iuda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remnaunt shal take rote beneth, ⁊ bringe forth frute aboue. For the escaped shal go out of Ierusalē, ⁊ the remnaunte from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therefore thus saieſt the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the cite, and shal shute no arowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shall they graue aboute it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this cite, saieſt the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the cite (saieſt he) for myne owne, ⁊ for my seruante Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth,⁷ and slewe of the Assirians hooste, an clxxxv. thousande.⁸ And when men arose vp early (at Ierusalē:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Ninieue. Afterwarde it chaunced, as he prayed in the Temple of Nesrah his god, that Adramalech and Sarazer his owne sonnes slewe him with the swearde, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

NOT longe afore this, was Ezechias dead-⁹ sick: ¹⁰And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thine house in ordre, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face towarde the wall, ⁊ prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I haue walked before the in treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue done the thinge that is pleasaunt to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. Thē sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy father sendeth ⁊ this worde: ¹¹I haue herde thy prayer, and considered thy teares: beholde, I will put xv yeares mo vnto thy life, and deluyr the and the cite also, from the honde of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the cite. ^aAnd take the this token of the LORDE, ^b he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Ahas Diall, ^c y now is layed out with the Sonne, and bringe it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesguyng, which Ezechias kinge of Iuda wrote, when he had bene sicke, ^d and was recouered.

I thought I shulde haue gone to the gates of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer see man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde.

Myne age is folden vp together and taken awaye fro me, like a sheperdes cottage: my lyfe is heuen of, like as a weeuor cutteth of his webb.

Why I was yet takinge my rest, he hewed me of, ^e and made an ende of me in one daie.

^f I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he brusshed my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daye.

Then chatred I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a doue.

I lift vp myne eyes in to ^g hight: O LORDE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou surtief for me.

What shal I speake or saye, that he maye this doo? ^h I maye lyue out all my yeares, yee in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytternesse, ⁱ and all my life must I passe ouer therin: For thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wilbe wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my couersacion hath so pleased ^j, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my synnes beynde thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, ^k death doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe in to the graue, prayse not thy treuth: but the lyuynge, yee the lyuynge acknowledge the, like as I do this daye.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the sore, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thinge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

AT the same tyme Merodach Baladā,^a Baladās some kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he vnderstode, how that he had bene sick, ^b and was recouered agayne. ^c And Ezechias was glad therof, ^d and shewed them the comodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyces and rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboordes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, ^e and so thorow out all his kingdome, but he let them see it.

Thē came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue ^f men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre countre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answered: All that is in myne house, haue they see: and there is nothinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: ^g Vnderstode the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Beholde, the tyme wil come, that euery thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy progenitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daye, shalbe caried to Babilon, and nothings left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shalbe caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne counsell, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulness in my tyme.

hath receaved of the LORDES honde sufficient correction for all hir synnes. A voyce crieth : ^a Prepare y waye for the LORDE in the wyldernesse, make straight y path for oure God in the deserte. Let all valleis be exalted, and euery mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne felde. ^b For the glory of the LORDE shal appeare, τ all flesh shal se it, for why, y mouth of the LORDE hath spoken it.

The same voyce spake : Now crie. And I sayde : what shal I crie? Then spake it : that, all flesh is grasse, and that all the bewtie therof, is as the floure of the felde. ^c When the grasse is wythered, the floure falleth awaye. Euen so is the people as grasse, when the breath of the LORDE bloweth vpon them. Neuerthelesse whether the grasse wyther, or the floure fade awaye : ^d Yet the worde of oure God endureth for euer. Morouer the voyce cried thus : Go vp vnto the hill (o Sion) thou that bringest good tidinges, lift vp thy voyce with power, o thou preacher Ierusalem. Lift it vp without feare, and say vnto the cities of Iuda : ^e Beholde, youre God : beholde, the LORDE, euen the almightie shal come with power, τ beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shal fede his flock like an herdman. ^f He shal gather the lambes together with his arme, and carie them in his bosome, τ shal kindly in-treate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heauen with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of y worlde in thre fyngers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? ^g Who hath reformed the mynde of the LORDE? Or who is of his counsel to teach him? At whom hath he asked coñcel, to make him vnderstode, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment : to teach him science, and to en-structe him in the waye of vnderstodinge? Beholde, all people are in cōparison of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge y the balance weyeth. Beholde, y Iles are in comparison of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficiēt to minstre fyre for his offeringe, and all the beastes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in comparison of him, are rekened, as nothinge, ^h yee wayne vanite and emptynesse.

To whom then will ye lickē God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? ⁱ Shal the caruer make him a carued ymage? and shal the goldsmith couer him with golde, or cast him in to a fourme of syluer plates? Morouer shal the ymage maker (y the poore man which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to set vp also) seke out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, y moueth not? Knowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? Hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnyng? ^j Haue ye not bene enformed of this, sence the fundacion of y earth was layde : That he syteth vpon the Circle of the worlde, and that all the inhabitours of the worlde are in cōparison of him, but as greshoppers : ^k That he spredeth out the heaucs as a coueringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in : That he bringeth princes to nothinge, and the iudges of the earth to dust : so that they be not planted nor sowne agayne, nether their stocke rooted agayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither τ fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

To whom now wil ye likenen me, ^l τ whom shal I be like, saith the holy one? Lift vp youre eyes an hie, and conside. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. ^m For there is nothinge hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. How maye then Iacob thinke, or how maye Israel saye : My wayes are hyd from the LORDE, and my God knoweth not of my iudgmentes. Knowest thou not, or hast thou not herde, that the euerlastinge God, the LORDE which made all the corners of the earth, is nether weery nor faynt, and that his wisdom cannot be comprehended : but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the faynte? Children are weery and faynt, and the strongest men fall : ⁿ But vnto them that haue the LORDE before their eyes, shal strength be encreased, Aegles

The xli. Chapter.

A BE still (ye floudes) and herken vnto me. Be stronge ye people, Come hither, and shew youre cause, we will go to the lawe together. Who rayseth vp \hat{y} iuste from the rysinge of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the grouë with his swearde, and scatere them like stuble with his bowe? He foloweth vpon them, and goeth safely himself, and cometh in no footpath with his fete. Who hath made, created, and called the generacions from the begynnyng? Euen I the LORDE, " which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye Iles, that ye maye feare, and ve endes of the earth, that ye maye be abashed, draw nye, and come hither. Every man hath exorted his neghbour, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth comforted the moulder, τ the Ironsmyth the hammerman, sayenge: It shalbe good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nales, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruaunt: Iacob my electe sede of Abrahā my beloued, whom I led from the endes of the earth by the honde: For I called the from farre, τ saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruaunt: ^a I haue chosen the, τ will not cast \hat{y} awaye: be not afrayde, for I wil be with \hat{y} . Loke not behinde \hat{y} , for I wil be thy God, to strēgth \hat{y} , helpe \hat{y} , τ to kepe \hat{y} with this right hōde of myne. Beholde, all they that resist the, shal come to confucion and shame: and thine aduersaries shalbe destroyed τ brought to naught. So that who so seketh after them, shal not fynde them. Thy destroyers shal perish, τ so shall they that vndertake to make batell agaynst the. For I thy LORDE τ God, wil strength thy right honde. Euen I that saye vnto the: Feare not, I will helpe the. Be not afrayde thou litle worme Iacob, and thou despysed Israel: For I will helpe the, saith the LORDE, τ the holyone of Israel thine avenger. Beholde, I wil make the a treading cart τ a new flae, \hat{y} thou mayest throsse τ grynde the moun-taines, and bringe the hilles to poulder. Thou shalt fanne them, τ the wynde shal carie them awaye, τ the whyrlwynde shal scatere thē. But thou shalt reioyse in the LORDE, and shalt delite in praysinge the holyone of Israel.

When the thurstie and poore seke water τ fynde none, ^c τ when their tunge is drie of thirst: ^d I geue it them, saith the LORDE. I the God of Israel forsake them not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles, τ wellies in the playue feldes. I turne \hat{y} wildernes to ryuers, and the drie loude to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Boxe, Myrre and olyues. And in the drie, I set Fyrre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I, \hat{y} they altogether maye se and marcke, perceaua with their hertes, τ considre: that the honde of the LORDE maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at youre cause (saith the LORDE) and bringe forth youre strōgest grounde, counceleth the kinge of Iacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges \hat{y} are past, what they be: let thē declare thē vnto vs, \hat{y} we maye take them to herte, and knowe them hereafter. Ether, let thē shewe vs thinges for to come, and tel vs what shalbe done hereafter: so shal we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege \hat{y} same, τ tel it out.

Beholde, ye goddes are of naught, τ youre makinge is of naught, but abhominacion hath chosen you. Neuertheles I haue waked vp one from the North, τ he shal come. And another from the East, which shal call vpō my name, τ shal come to the prynces, as the Potter to his claye, τ as \hat{y} Potter treadeth downe the myre. Who tolde \hat{y} afore? So wil we confesse τ saye, that he is righteous. But there is none that sheweth or declareth eny thinge, there is none also that heareth youre wordes. Beholde, I will first graite thē of Sion τ Ierusalem to be Euangelistes. But when I cōsidre: there is not one amonge thē \hat{y} prophecieth, nether (when I axe him) \hat{y} answereth one worde. Lo, wicked are they τ wayne, with the thinges also that they take in honde: yee wynde are they, and emptynesse, with their ymagines together.

The xliij. Chapter.

A BEHOLDE now therefore, this is my seruaunt whom I will kepe to my self: ^amy electe, In whom my soule shalbe pacified. I will geue him my sprete, that he maye shewe forth iudgment & equyte amonge the Gentiles. He shal not be an outcryer, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shall not be herde in ^y stretes. A brusred rede shal he not breake, & the smoking flax shal he not quenche: but faithfully & truly shal he geue iudgmēt. He shal nether be ouersene ner haistie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: & the Gētiles also shal kepe his lawes. ^bFor thus saieyth God the LORDE vnto him (Euen he that made the heauens, and spred them abrode, & set forth the earth with hir increase: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, & to them that dwel therein) I the LORDE haue called ^y in rightuousnesse, & led the by the honde. Therefore wil I also defende the, & geue the for a couenaunt of the people, & to be the light of the Gētiles. ^cThat thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, & them that syt in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I myself, whose name is the LORDE, which geue my power to none other, nether myne honoure to the goddesses: shewe you these new tidinges, and tel you them or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

^dSynge therfore vnto the LORDE, a new songe of thākes geuyng, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the worlde. They that be vpon the see, & all that is therein, prayse him, the Iles & they that dwel in them. Let the wilderness with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that syt vpon rockes of stone, and let them criē downe from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORDE, & magnifiēge him amonge the Gētiles. The LORDE shal come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fresh man of warre. He shal roare and criē, and ouercome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saieyth the LORDE) shulde I therfore be still, and kepe sylence for euer? I will criē like a traueling woman, and once wil I destroye, and deuoure. I wil make waist both mountayne & hill, & drie vp euery grene thinge, that groweth theron. I wil drie vp the floudes of water, & drinke vp the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde in to a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fote path, that they are ignoraunt in. I shal make darknesse light before thē, & the thinge ^y is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, & not forget them. ^eAnd therfore let them conuert, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, & saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

Heare, o ye deaf men, and sharpen youre sightes to se (o ye blinde.) ^fBut who is blynder, thē my seruaunt? Or so deaf, as my messangers, whom I sent vnto them? For who is so blynde as my people, & they ^y haue the rule of them? They are like, as yf thou vnderstodest moch, and keptest nothinge: or yf one herde well, but were not obedient. The LORDE be merciful vnto them for his rightuousnesse sake, that his worde might be magnified & prayed. But it is a myscheuous & wiked people. Their yonge men belonge all to the snare, & shal be shut in to preson houses. ^gThey shal be caried awaye captiue and no man shal lowse them. They shal be trodē vnder fote, ^h& no man shal labour to bringe thē agayne. But who is he amonge you, ^y pondreth this in his mynde, ^y considreth it, & taketh it for a warnyng in tyme to come?

ⁱWho suffred Iacob to be trodden vnder fote, and Israel to be spoyled? dyd not the LORDE? Now haue we synned agaynst him, and haue had no delite to walke in his wayes, nether bene obedient vnto his lawe. Therefore hath he poured vpon vs his wroothful displeasure, and strōge batell, which maketh vs haue to do on euery syde, yet will we not vnderstōde: He burneth vs vp, yet syncketh it not in to oure hartes.

water, I was by the, that the strōge floudes shulde not pluck ꝑ awaye: When thou walkest in the fyre, it shal not burne ꝑ, and the flame shal not kinde vpon the. For I am the LORDE thy God, the hollyone of Israel, thy Sauoure. I gaue Egipte for thy deluyeraunce, the Morÿas and the Sabees for the: because thou wast deare in my sight, and because I set by the, and loued the. ^a I pilled all men for the, and deluyered vp all people for thy sake, ^b that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. I wil bringe thy sede from the east, and gather the together from the west. I wil saye to the north: let go. And to the south, kepe not backe: But bringe me my sonnes from farre, and my daughters from the endes of the worlde: Namely, all those that be called after my name: For thē haue I created, fashioned, and made for myne honoure.

B Bringe forth that people, whether they haue eyes or be blynde, ^c deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shall declare soch thinges, ^d tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witnesses, so shal they be fre: for thē men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesses (saith the LORDE) euen those that are my seruauntes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithful credence: yee and to cōsidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer eny God, and that there shalbe none after me. ^e I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauoure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shulde be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saith the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnynge, and there is none, ^f that can take eny thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man change.

C Thus saith the LORDE the holy one of Israel youre redemer: For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am youre kinge. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, ^g and a footpath in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charettes and horses, the hooste and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

^h Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and regarde nothinge that is past. Therefore beholde. I shal make a new thinge, and shortly shall it appeare: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agaane.

I will make stretes in the deserte, and ryuers of water in the wilderness. The wilde beastes shal worshippe me: the dragon, and the Estrich. For I shall geue water in ꝑ wilderness, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drike to my people, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Iacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vulust towarde me, o Israel. Thou gauest me not thy yonge beastes for burntoffringes, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thy money, nether pourested the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. ⁱ Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrages, nether greuous in Incense.

^j But thou hast ladē me with thy synnes, and weered me with thy vngodlynes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selfes sake do awaye thine offences, ^k forget thy synnes: so that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembrance (for we will reason together) ^l ^m ⁿ ^o ^p ^q ^r ^s ^t ^u ^v ^w ^x ^y ^z shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. poure my sprete vpon thi sede, and myue encrease vpō thy stocke. They shal growe together, like as the grasse, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Iacob. The thirde shal subscribe with his honde vnto ſ̄ LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

B Morouer, thus hath the LORDE spokē: ^a euen the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, ſ̄ LORDE of hoostes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be lickened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thiges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hyther to, ^τ warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their labour lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can nether se ner vnderstonde) they shalbe confounded. ^b Who shulde now make a god, or fashiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge?

^c Beholde all the felashippe of thē must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confōded one with another. The snyth taketh yron, and tempred it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, ^τ maketh it with all the strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thurstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and spredeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, ^{ād} squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man. and acordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

Morouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: He bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himself, ^{ād} soch as the rayne hath swelled, which woddē serueth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himself withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honour it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One peece he burneth in the fyre, with another he rosteth flesh, that he maye eate roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himself, and saith: A ha: I am well warned, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

^d Yet men nether consider ner vnderstonde, because their eyes are stopped, that they can not se: and their hertes, that they can not perceauē. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one peece in the fyre, I haue baked bred with ſ̄ coles there of, I haue rosted flesh withall, ^τ eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten peece of wodd? The keepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not I erre?

Cōsidre this (o Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruauēt. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. ^e As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ſ̄ agayne vnto me, ^τ I will delyuer ſ̄.

E Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all ſ̄ is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes ^τ woddes, with all the trees that are in you: for ſ̄ LORDE shal redeme Iacob, ^τ shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saith the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: ^f I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I destroye the tokens of witches, and make the Sothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them backward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

But I set vp the purpose of my seruauentes, and fulfil the council of my messaungers. I saye to Ierusalē: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repayre their decayed places. I saye to the

The xlv. Chapter.

THUS saith the LORDE vnto Cyrus his anoynted,^a whom he ledeth by ſ right hōde: that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges, ſ they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores, ⁊ burst the yron barres. I shall geue the the hyd treasure, ⁊ the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe, ſ^b I the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Iacob my seruaunt sake, ⁊ for Israel my chosen. For I called the by thy name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, ^c before whom there is none other, for without me there is no God. I haue prepared the, ^d or euer thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the risynge of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. ^e For I am the LORDE, ⁊ there is els none. It is I ſ created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne rightuousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal rightuousnes flourish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

Wo be vnto him that chydeth with his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saith ſ claye to the potter: What makest thou? or, thy worke serueth for nothige? Wo be vnto him, ſ saith to his father: why begetteth thou? And to his mother: why bearest thou? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one ⁊ maker of Israel: Axe me of thinges for to come, concernynge my sonnes: and put me in remēbraunce, as touchinge the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with rightuousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buylde my cite, ⁊ let out my prisoners: ⁊ that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egipte, the marchauntes of the Moryans and Sabece, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shalbe thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplication vnto the. For God (with out who there is none other God) shal be with the. ^f O how profounde art thou o God, thou God ⁊ Sauioure of Israel? Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of erreure: (that is worshippers of Idols.) But Israel shalbe saued in the LORDE, which is the euerlasting saluaciō: They shal not come to shame ner confucion, worlde without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE: ^g euen he that created heauen, the God ſ made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly, ^h nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Iacob: seke me. I am the LORDE, which whē I speake, declare the thinge that is rightuous and true. Let thē be gathered ⁊ come together, let thē drawe nye hyther, ſ are escaped of the people: Haue they eny vnderstandinge, ⁱ that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that cā not helpe thō? Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ⁊ aske councel one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnyng? Haue not I ſ LORDE done it: without ^m whom there is none other God? the true God and sauioure, ⁿ and there is els none but I? And therefore turne ye vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, ⁊ there is els none. I sweare by my self: out of my mouth cōmeth ſ worde of rightuousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all knees shal bowe vnto me, ^o and all tinges shal sweare by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is my rightuousnes and Another wil call vnder the name of Iacob. The thirde shal subscribye with his honde vnto ꝑ LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

B Morouer, thus hath the LORDE spokē: euen the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, ꝑ LORDE of hoostes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he may be lickened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thiges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hyther to, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherfore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their labour lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can nether se ner vnderstonde) they shalbe confounded. ^aWho shulde now make a god, or fashiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the felasphepe of thē must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amonge men: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The smyth taketh yron, and tempreth it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, & maketh it with all the strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and so thurstie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ynage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and spredeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, and squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and accordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

C Morouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: He bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himself, and such as the rayne hath swelled, which wodde seruth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warneth himself withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honour it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One peece he burneth in the fyre, with another he rosteth flesh, that he maye eate roste his bely full: with the thirde he warneth himself, and saith: A ha: I am well warned, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: deluyer me, for thou art my god.

Considre this (o Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruauit. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ꝑ agayne vnto me, & I will deluyer ꝑ.

Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all ꝑ is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & woddes, with all the trees that are in you: for ꝑ LORDE shal redeme Iacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saith the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the fundacion of the earth. I destroye the tokens of witches, and make the Sothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them backward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

But I set vp the purpose of my seruauentes, and fulfil the council of my messaigers. I saye to Ierusalē: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylled agayne: and I repayre their decayed places. I saye to the

23 THUS saith the LORDE vnto Cirus his anoynted,^a whom he ledeth by \hat{y} right hōde : that the people maye fall downe before him : I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges, \hat{y} they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores, τ burst the yron barres. I shall geue the the hyd treasure, τ the thinge which is secretly kepte : that thou mayest knowe, \hat{y} ^b I the God of Israel haue called the by thy name : and that for Iacob my seruauit sake, τ for Israel my chosen. For I called the by thy name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me : Euen I the LORDE, ^c before whom there is none other, for without me there is no God. I haue prepared the, ^d or euer thou knewest me : that it might be knowne from the risynge of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. ^e For I am the LORDE, τ there is els none. It is I \hat{y} created the light and dareknes, I make peace and trouble : Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thinges. The heauens aboute shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne rightuousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal rightuousnes flourish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

33 ^f Wo be vnto him that chydeth with his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saith \hat{y} claye to the potter : What makest thou ? or, thy worke serueth for nothige ? Wo be vnto him, \hat{y} saith to his father : why begettest thou ? And to his mother : why bearest thou ? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one τ maker of Israel : Axe me of thynges for to come, concernynge my sonnes : and put me in remēbraunce, as touchinge the workes of my hōdes : I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with rightuousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buylde my cite, τ let out my prisoners : τ that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer : The occupiers of Egipte, the marchauntes of the Moryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shalbe thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (with out who there is none other God) shal be with the. ^g O how profounde art thou o God, thou God τ Sauioure of Israel ? Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure : go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of erreure (that is worshippers of Idols.) But Israel shalbe saued in the LORDE, which is the euerlasting saluaciō : They shal not come to shame ner confueion, worlde without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE : ^h euen he that created heauen, the God \hat{y} made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth : I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited : Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly, ⁱ nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Iacob : seke me. I am the LORDE, which whē I speake, declare the thinge that is rightuous and true. Let thē be gathered τ come together, let thē drawe nye hyther, \hat{y} are escaped of the people : Haue they eny vnderstandinge, ^j that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that cā not helpe thē ? Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ad aske counceel one at another, and shewe forth : What is he, that tolde this before ? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnyng ? Haue not I \hat{y} LORDE done it : without ^k whom there is none other God ? the true God and sauioure, ^l and there is els none but I ? And therefore turne ye vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, τ there is els none. I sweare by my self : out of my mouth cōmeth \hat{y} worde of rightuousnesse, and that maye no man turne : but all knees shal bowe vnto me, ^m and all tunges shal sweare by me, sayenge : Verely in the LORDE is my rightuousnes and NEUERTHELES Bel shall fall,^a ⁊ Nabo shalbe broken: whose ymages are a burthē for the beastes and catell, to ouerlade thē, and to make them weery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therefore must they go in to captiuiete.

Herken vnto me, o house of Iacob, and all ye that remaine yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue borne from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from youre byrth, till ye were growen: I I which shall beare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I will also norish you, beare you and saue you. Whom will ye make me like, in fashion or ymage, that I maye be like him? ^bYe fooles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hyre a goldsmyth to make a god of it, that men maye knele downe and worshippe it. ^cYet must he be taken on mens shulders and borne, and set in his place, that he maye stonde and not moue. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answer: and deluyreth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

Considere this well, and be ashamed, Go in to youre owne selues (O ye rinnagates). Remembre the thinges which are past, sence the begynnyng of the worlde: that I am God, and that there is els no God, yee and ŷ there is nothinge like vnto me. In the begynnyng of a thinge, I shewe the ende therof: and I tel before, thinges that are not yet come to passe. With one worde is my deuyce accomplished, ⁊ fulfillleth all my pleasure. I call a byrde out of the east, ^dand all that I take in honde, out of farre countrees. As soone as I commaunde, I bringe it hither: ^eas soone as I thinke to deuyse a thinge, I do it.

Heare me, o ye that are of an hie stomachk, but farre from rightuousnesse. I shal bringe forth my rightuousnesse, It is not farre, and my health shal not tarie longe awaye. I wil laye health in Siō, and geue Israel my glory.

The xlviij. Chapter.

BUT as for the (O daughter, thou virgin Babilon) thou shalt syt in the dust. Thou shalt syt vpon the grounde, and not in a trone (o thou mayden of Chaldea). Thou shalt nomore be called tender, and pleasānt. Thou shalt bringe forth the querne, ⁊ gryuede meel, put downe thy stomacher, make bare thy knees, and shalt wade thorow the water ryuers. ^fThy shame shalbe discouered, and thy preynties shal be sene. For I wil auenge me of the, and no man shal let me: saith onre redemer, which is called the LORDE of hoostes, the holy one of Israel.

Syt still, holde thy tunge, and get the into some darcke corner (O daughter Caldea) for thou shalt nomore be called lady of kyngdomes. I was so wroth with my people, ŷ I punyshed myne enheritaunce,^g and gaue them in to thy power. Neuertheles, thou shewdest them no mercy, but euen the very aged men of thē, didest thou oppresse right sore with thy yock, ⁊ thou thoughtest thus: I shalbe lady for euer. And besyde all that, thou hast not regarded these thinges, nether cast, what shulde come after.

Heare now therfore, thou wilful, that syttest so carelesse, ⁊ speakest thus in thine herte: ^hI am alone, and without me is there none: I shal neuer be wydow, ner desolate agayne. And yet both these thiges' shal come to the vpō one daye in the twinkle of an eye: Namely, wyddowhead, and desolacion. They shal mightely fall vpon the, for ŷ multitude of thy witches, and for the greate heape of thy coniuers. For thou hast comforted thy self in thy disceitfulness, and hast sayde: No mā seith me. The xliiij. Chapter.

HEARE this, O thou house of Iacob: ye are called by the name of Israel, and are come out of one stocke with Iuda: which swaere by the name of the LORDE, and beare witness by the God of Israel (but not with treuth and right) ^a which are called fren of the holy citie, as they that loke for conforth in the God of Israel, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes.

The thinges that I shewed you euer sence the begynnyng: Hane I not brought thē to passe, immediatly as they came out of my mouth, and declared them? And they are come? Howbeit I knewe that thou art obstinate, and that thy neck hath an yron vane, and that thy brow is of brasse. Neuertheles I haue euer sence the begynnyng shewed the of thinges for to come, and declared thē vnto the, or euer they came to passe: that thou shuldest not saye: myne Idol hath done it, my carued or cast ymage hath shewed it. Heare & conside all these thinges, whether it was ye that prophecied thē: But as for me, I tolde the before at the begynnyng, new & secrete thinges, ŷ thou knewest not of: ^b And some done now not of olde time, wherof thou neuer herdest, before they were brought to passe: that thou canst not saye: I knewe of them. Morouer there be some wherof thou hast nether herde ner knowne, nether haue they bene opened vnto thine eares afore tyme. For I knew that thou woldest maliciously offende, therefore haue I called the a transgressoure, euen from thy mothers wombe.

Neuertheles for my names sake, I haue withdrawn my wrath, and for myne honours sake I haue ouersene the, so that I haue not rooted the out. Beholde I haue poured the, and not for myne. I haue chosen the in the fyre of pouerte, And that only for myne owne sake, ^c for I geue myne Honoure to none other, that thou shuldest not despise me. Herken vnto me o Iacob, ^d & Israel whō I haue called. I am euen he that is, I am ŷ first and the last. ^e My honde is the foundation of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called thē they were there. Gather you all together, ad herken: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon. (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme? I my self alone haue tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourney. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thiŷe darclyly? sence the begynnyng? whē a thiŷe begynneth, I am there.

Wherfore the LORDE God with his sprete hath sent me, And thus saieth the LORDE thine avenger, the holyone of Israel: ^f I am ŷ LORDE thy God, which teach the profitable thinges, and lede ŷ the waye, that thou shuldest go. Yf thou wilt now regarde my cōmaundement, thy welthynes shalbe as the water streame: & thy rightuousnes as the waves flowinge in the see. Thy sede shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the grauel stones therof: Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and escape the Caldees with a mery voyce. ^g This shalbe spoken of, declared abrode, & go forth vnto the ende of the worlde: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruante Iacob, that they suffred no thurst, ^h whē they trauayled in the wilderness. He claue the rockes a sonder, and the water gushed out. As for the vngodly, they haue no peace, saieth the LORDE. ⁱ maye bringe Iacob agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne.

 In whose sight I am greate, which also is my ye heauens, and synge prayes thou earth:

 'Talke of ioye ye hilles, for God wil cōforte

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken me, and the LORDE hath forgottē me.
^e Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, and the some whō she hath borne? And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the.
 Beholde, I haue written the vp vpon my hondes, thy walles are ener in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the vp agayne: and they that made the waist, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them together,^g and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE) thou shalt put them all vpō the, as an apparell, and gyrd thē to the, as a bryde doth hir Jewels. As for thy londe that lieth desolate, waisted & destroyed: it shalbe to narrow for thē, that shal dwell in it. And they ſ wolde deuoure the, shalbe farre awaye. Then the childe whō ſ barē shall bringe forth vnto ſ, shal saye in thine eare: this place is to narrow, syt nye together, ſ I maye haue rowme. Then shalt thou thinke by thy self: Who hath begottē me these? seinge I am barē & alōe, a captiue & an outcast? And who hath nourished thē vp for me? I am desolate & alone, but frō whēce come these?

And therefore thus saieth the LORDE God:
 Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde to the Gentiles, and set vp my token to the people.
 They shal bringe the thy sonnes in their lappes, & carie thy daughters vnto ſ vpon their shulders. For kynges shalbe thy nursinge fathers, and Quenes shalbe thy nursinge mothers. They shal fall before the with their faces flat vpon the earth, and lick vp the dust of thy fete: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. ⁱ And who so putteth his trust in me, shal not be confounded.
 Who spoyleth the giaunte of his pray? or who taketh the presoner from the mightie?
 And therefore thus saieth the LORDE: The prisoners shalbe taken from the giaunte, and the spoyle delyuered from the violete: for I wil maynteyne thy cause agaynst thine aduer-saries, and saue thy sonnes. And wil fede thine enemies with their owne fleshe, and make thē drinke of their owne bloude, as of

The i. Chapter.

THUS saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of youre mothers deuorcemēt, that I sent vnto her? ^a or who is the vsurer, to whō I solde you? Beholde, for youre owne offēces are ye solde: ^b and because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsakē. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came? and when I called, no man gaue me answer. Was my hōde elene smytē of, that it might not helpe? or, had I not power to delyuer? lo, at a worde I drike vp the see, and of water floudes I make drie lōde: so for want of water, the fish corruppe and die of thirst. ^c As for heauen, I clooth it with dareknesse, and put a sack vpon it.

The LORDE God hath genē me a wel lerned tūge, so that I can conforte them which are troubled, yee and y in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in y mornynge (as y scolemasters do) y I might herkē. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therefore cā I not saye naye, ner with drawe my self, but I offre my backe vnto y smyters, and my chekes to the nypers. I turne not my face fro shame and spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therefore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flynt stone, for I am sure, that I shal not come to confucion. Myne aduocate speaketh for me, who wil then go with me to lawe? Let vs stōde one agaynst another: yf there be eny that wil reason with me, let him come here forth to me. Beholde, the LORDE God stondeth by me, what is he that can condemne me? lo, they shalbe all like as an olde cloth, which y mothes shal eate vp.

Therefore who so feareth the LORDE, amōge you, let him heare the voyce of his seruānt. Who so walketh in dareknesse, and no light shyneth vpō him, let him hope in the LORDE, and holde him by his God. But take hede, ye haue all kyndled a fyre, and gyrded youre selues with the flame: Ye walke in the glistrige of youre owne fyre, and in the flame that ye haue kyndled. This cometh vnto you fro my honde, namely, y ye shal slepe in sorowe.

The ii. Chapter.

HERKEN vnto me, ye that holde of righteousness, ye that seke the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the graue wherout ye are digged. Consider Abraham youre father, and Sara that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, and increased him: how the LORDE comforted Siō, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a Paradise, and hir wilderness as the garden of the LORDE. Myrth and ioye was there, thankesgeynge and y voyce of prayse. Haue respecte vnto me theu (o my people) and laye thine eare to me: for a lawe, and an ordinaunce shal go forth fro me, to lighten the Gentiles. It is hard by, that my health and my righteousness shal go forth, and the people shalbe ordred with myne arme.

The floudes (that is y Gentiles) shal hope in me, and put their trust in myne arme. Lift vp youre eyes toward heauē, and loke vpon the earth beneth. For the heauens shal vanish awaye like smoke, and the earth shal teare like a clothe, and they that dwel therein, shal perish in like maner. But my health endureth for euer, and my righteousness shall not cease. Therefore hercken vnto me, ye y haue pleasure in righteousness, thou people that bearest my lawe in thine herte. Feare not the curse of men, be not afrayde of their blasphemies and reuylings: for wormes and mothes shal eat thē vp like clothe and woll. But my righteousness shal endure for euer, and my sauynge health from generacion to generacion.

Wake vp, wake vp, and be stronge: O thou arme of the LORDE: wake vp, lyke as in tymes past, euer and sence the worlde beganne. Art not thou he, that hast wounded that proude lucifer, and hewen the dragon in peeces? Art not thou euen he, which hast dried vp the depe of the see, which hast made playne the see grounde, that the delyuered might go thorow? That the redemed of the LORDE, which turned agayne, might come with ioye vnto Siō, there to endure for euer? That myrth and gladnesse might be with them: that sorowe and wo might fle from thē? Yee

I, I am euē he, that in all thiȝes geueth you consolacion. What art thou then, that fearest a mortall mā. ⁊ childe of man, which goeth awaye as doeth the floure? And forgettest the LORDE that made the,^a that spred out the heauens, and layde the foundation of the earth. But thou art euer afrayde for the sight of thyne oppressoure, which is ready to do harme: Where is the wrath of the oppressoure? It cometh on fast, it maketh haist to apeare: It shal not perish, ⁊ it shulde not be able to destroye, nether shal it fayle for faute of norishinge. I am the LORDE thy God, that make the see to be still,^b and to rage: whose name is the LORDE of hoostes. I shal put my worde also in thy mouth, and defende the with the turnynge of my honde: that thou mayest plante the heauens, and laye the foundations of the earth, and saye vnto Sion: thou art my people.

Awake, Awake, and stonde vpo Ierusalem, ⁊ thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast drunkē out the cuppe of his wrath; thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombrynge cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast norished. Both these thinges are happened vnto the, but who is sory for it? Yee, destruction, waistinge, hunger ⁊ swerde: but who hath comforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at ⁊ heade of euery strete like a takē venyson, ⁊ are ful of ⁊ terrible wrath of ⁊ LORDE. ⁊ punyshmēt of thy God. And therefore thou miserable ⁊ drunkē (howbeit not with wyne) Hear this: Thus saith thy LORDE: thy LORDE ⁊ God, ⁊ defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take ⁊ slōbrige cuppe out of thy hōde, euē ⁊ cuppe with the dregges of my wrath: ⁊ frō hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, ⁊ wil put it ī their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: make thy body caūc with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

The liij. Chapter.

V^P Sion vp, take thy strength vnto the: put on thine honest rayment o Ierusalē, thou cite of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vncleane person come in the. Shake the frō the dust, arise ⁊ stonde vp, o Ierusalē. Pluck out thy neck from the bōde, o thou captiue daughter Sion. For thus saith the LORDE: ^dYe are solde for naught, therefore shal ye be redemed also without eny money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: ^eMy people wēte downe afore tyme in to Egipte, there to be straungers. Afterwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse thē, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith ⁊ LORDE) ⁊ my people is frely caried awaye, ^f brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name euer still blasphemēd? saith the LORDE. ^gBut ⁊ my people maye knowe my name, I my self will speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how bewtiful are the fete of the Embassitoure, ⁊ bringeth the message frō the mountayne, ^h ⁊ proclaimeth peace: ⁊ brigeth the good tydings, ⁊ preacheth health, ⁊ saith vnto Sion: Thy God is the kinge. Thy watchmē shal lift vp their voyce, with loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal se him present, whē the LORDE shal come agayne to Sion.

Be glad, ⁱ o thou desolate Ierusalē, ⁊ reioyce together: for the LORDE will cōforte his people, he wil deluyer Ierusalē. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme,^k ⁊ shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gētiles, ⁊ all the endes of the earth shal se the sauynge health of oure God. ^lAwaye, Awaye, get you out frō thence, ⁊ touch no vncleane thinge. Go out from amonge soch, And be cleane, ye that beare the vessell of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sediciō, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, ^m ⁊ the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruaunt shal deale wysely, therefore shal he be magnified, exalted ⁊ greatly honoured. Like as ⁊ multitude shal wōdre vpon him, because his face shalbe so deformed ⁊ not as a mans face, ⁊ his bewtie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gētiles loke vnto him, ⁊ ⁊ kinges shal shut their mouthes before him. BUT who geueth credence vnto oure preaching? Or to who is the arme of the LORDE knowe? He shal growe before the LORDE like as a brauch, ⁊ as a rote in a drie grounde. He shal haue nether bewty ner fauoure. When we loke vpon him, there shalbe no fayrnesse: we shal haue no lust vnto him. He shalbe the most symple ⁊ despised of all, which yet hath good experience of sorowes ⁊ infirmities. We shal reken him so symple ⁊ so vyle, that we shal hyde oure faces frō him. Howbeit (of a truth) he only taketh awaye oure infirmite, ⁊ beareth oure payne: Yet we shal iudge him, as though he were plagued and cast downe of God: where as he (not withstōdinge) shal be wouled for oure offences, ⁊ smytten for oure wickednes. For the payne of oure punyshmēt shalbe layde vpo him, ⁊ with his stripes shal we be healed.

B As for vs, we go all astraye (like shepe), euery one turneth his owne waye. But thorow him, the LORDE pardoneth all oure synnes. He shal be payned ⁊ troubled, and shal not opē his mouth. He shalbe led as a shepe to be slayne, yet shal he be as still as a lambe before the shearer, ⁊ not open his mouth. He shal be had awaye, his cause not herde, ⁊ without eny iudgment: Whose generacion yet no man maye nombre, when he shalbe cut of frō the grounde of the lyvinge: Which punyshment shal go vpon him, for the transgression of my people. His graue shalbe geuē him with the cōdemned, ⁊ his crucifige with the theues, Where as he dyd neuer violence ner vnright, nether hath there bene eny disceatfulnesse in his mouth.

C Yet hath it pleased ŷ LORDE to smyte him with infirmite, that when he had made his soule an offeringe for synne, he might se a lōge lastinge sede. And this device of the LORDE shal prospere in his honde. With trauayle and laboure of his soule, shal he optayne greate riches. My righteous seruauent shall with his wisdomē iustifie ⁊ deluyer the multitude, for he shal beare awaye their synnes. Therefore wil I geue him the multitude for his parte, ⁊ he shal deuyde the strōge spoyle

THEREFORE be glad now, thou barc that bearest not. Reioyce, syngē ⁊ be mery, thou ŷ art not with childe: For the desolate hath moo children, then the married wife, saith the LORDE. Make thy tente wyder, ⁊ sprede out the hangings of thine habitaciō: spare not, laye forth thy coardes, and make fast thy stakes: for thou shalt breake out on the right syde and on the left, ⁊ thy sede shal haue ŷ Gētiles in possession, and dwel in the desolate cities. Feare not, for thou shalt not be confouled: Be not ashamed, for thou shalt not come to confucion. Yee thou shalt forget the shame off thy youth, and shalt not remembre the dishonoure of thy wedwoheade, For he that made the, shalbe thy LORDE, ⁊ husbonde (whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) ⁊ thine avenger shalbe euen the holy one off Israel, the LORDE of the whole worlde. For the LORDE shal call the, beinge as a desolate soroufull woman, and as a yonge wife that hath broken hir wedlocke: saith thy God.

A litle while haue I forsaken the, but with greate mercifulnes shal I take the vp vnto me. Whē I was angrie, I hid my face from the for a litle season, but thorow euerlastinge goodnesse shal I pardon the, saith the LORDE thine avenger. And this must be vnto me, as the water of Noe: For like as I haue sworne ŷ I wil not bringe the water off Noe eny more vpo the worlde: So haue I sworne, ŷ I wil neuer be angrie with the, uer reprove the: The mountaynes shall remoue, ⁊ the hilles shal fall downe: but my louyngē kyndnesse shal not moue, and the bonde off my peace shal not fall downe frō ŷ, saith ŷ LORDE thy mercifull loue.

right, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God. They argue with me concernyng right judgment, and wil pleate at the lawe with their God. Wherefore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not? we put oure liues to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

3 Beholde, when ye fast, youre lust remaineth still: for ye do no lesse violence to youre detters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to smyte him with youre fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that youre voyce might be herde aboue. ⁶Thynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a mā shulde chasten himself for a daye, and to wryth his heade aboute like an hoke in an hairy cloth, and to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastyng, or a daye ⁷pleaseth ⁸Y^e LORDE? But this fastyng pleaseth not me, till ⁹ye tyme be thou lowse him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the oath of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. ⁴It pleaseth not me, till thou deale thy bred to the hongrie, and bryng the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face fro thine owne flesh. Then shall thy light breake forth as ⁵ymornyng, and thy health flourish right shortly: thy rightuousnesse shall go before thee, and ¹⁰ye glory of the LORDE shall embrace thee.

Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shall answer the: ¹¹yf thou criest, he shall saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest away thy burthens, and holdest thy fyngers, and ceasest from blasphemous talkyng, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refrezshest ¹²ye troubled soule: ¹³Then shall thy light springe out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shall be as the noone daye. ¹⁶ Yee yf thou turne thy fete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasaunt, holy and glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, where thou shalt be in honour: so ¹⁷ye thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. Thē shalt thou haue thy pleasure in ¹⁸ye LORDE, which shall carie ¹⁹ye lie aboue ²⁰ye earth, and fede the with the heretage of Iacob thy father: for the LORDES owne mouth hath so promised.

3 BEHOLDE, the LORDES honde is not so shortened ¹ye it can not helpe, nether is his eare so stopped ²ye it maye not heare. But youre myszdedes haue separated you from youre God, and youre synnes hyde his face from you, ³ye he heareth you not. For youre hondes are defyled with bloude, ⁴and youre fyngers with vnrightheousnesse: Youre lippes speake lesynges, and youre tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteounes, and no mā iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, cōceaueth weerynesse, and bringeth forth euell. ⁵They brede cockatrice egges, and weewe ⁶ye spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon thē, there cōmeth vp a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, and they maye not couer thē with their labours. Their dedes are ⁷ye dedes of wickednes, and ⁸ye worke of robbery is in their hōdes. Their fete runne to euell, and they make haist to shed innocēt bloude. ⁹Their cōuēls are wicked cōuēls, harme and destrucciō are in their wayes. But ¹⁰ye waye of peace they knowe not. In their goynges is no equitye, their wayes are so croked, ¹¹ye who so euer goeth therin, knoweth nothinge of peace.

And this is ¹²ye cause ¹³ye equite is so farre fro vs, and ¹⁴ye rightuousnes cōmeth not nye vs. ¹⁵We loke for light, lo, it is darknesse: for ¹⁶ye mornyng shyne, se, we walke in ¹⁷ye darke. half deed. We roare all like Beeres, ⁊ mourne stil like dones. We loke for equite, but there is none: for health, but it is farre frō vs. For oure offences are many before ŷ, ⁊ oure synnes testifie agaynst vs. Yee we must cōfesse ŷ we offende, ⁊ knowlege, ŷ we do anysse: Namely, transgresse ⁊ dyssemble agaynst ŷ LORDE, ⁊ fall away frō oure God: vsinge presūptuous ⁊ traytorous ymaginations, ⁊ castinge false matters in oure hertes. And therefore is equyte gone asyde, ⁊ righteousnes stōdeth farre of: ⁊ treuth is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee ŷ treuth is lade in preson, and he that refrayneth himself frō eucl, must be spoyled.

¶ When the LORDE sawe this, it displeaseth him sore, ŷ there was no where eny equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was greued at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne rightuousnes. ¶ He put rightuousnes vpō him for a brest plate, ⁊ set the helmet of health vpō his heade. He put on wrath in steade of clothēge, ⁊ toke gelousy aboute him for a cloke: (like as when a man goeth forth worthfully to recōpence his enemies, ⁊ to be avenged of his aduersaries.) Namely, that he might recompence and reward the Ilōdes, wherthorow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risynge of the Sōne: and his magesty, vnto the goynge downe of the same.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. ¶ But vnto Sion there shal come a redemer, and vnto them in Iacob that turne from wickednesse, saich the LORDE. I will make this couenaunt with them (sayeth ŷ LORDE): My sprete that is come vpon the, ⁊ the wordes which I haue put in thy mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of ŷ mouth of thy childrē, no ner out of ŷ mouth of thy childers childrē, from this tyme forth for euer more.

¶ AND therefore get the vp by tymes,⁹ for thy light cometh, ⁊ the glory of ŷ LORDE shal ryse vp vpō ŷ. For lo, while ŷ darknesse ⁊ cloude couereth the earth ⁊ the people, the LORDE shal shewe the light,⁷ ⁊ his glory shal be sene in the. The Gentiles shal come to thy light,⁸ ⁊ kynges to the brightnes ŷ springeth forth vpō ŷ. Lift vp thine eyes, ⁊ loke rounde aboute the: All these gather thē selues, ⁊ come to the. Sommes shal come vnto ŷ from farre, ⁊ daughters shal gather thē selues to the on euery side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceedingly, and thine hert shalbe opened: when the power of the see shalbe cōuerted vnto the (that is) whē the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer ŷ, the Dromedaries of Madiā and Epha. All they of Saba shal come,⁵ bringinge golde ⁊ incense, ⁊ shewinge the prayse of the LORDE. All the catel of Cedar shalbe gathered vnto ŷ, the rāmes of Nabaioth shal serue the,⁶ to be offred vpō myne autler, which I haue chosen, ⁊ in the house of my glory which I haue garnished. But what are these that fle here like the cloudes, and as the doues fliege to their wyndowes?

The Iles also shal gather thē vnto me, and specially the shippes of ŷ see: that they maye bringe the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Israel, that hath glorified the.⁴ Strañgers shal buykle vp thy walles, and their kiges shal do the seruyce. The lvi. Chapter.

THE sprete of the LORDE God is with me, for the LORDE hath anoynted me, and sent me, to preach good tydiges vnto the poore, and I might bynde vp the wounded hartes, and I might preach delyuerance to the captiue, and open the prison to them that are bounde: and I might declare the acceptable yere of the LORDE, and the daye of the avēgeance of our God: that I might comforte all them that are in heynesse, ^ethat I might geue vnto them joye in Sion, bewty in the steade of ashes, joyfull oymēt for sighinge, pleasaunt raymēt for an heuy mide: That they might be called excellent in rightuousnesse, a platinge of the LORDE for him to reioyce in.

They shal buylde the lōge rough wildernes, and set vp the olde deserte. They shal repayre the waist places, and such as haue bene voyde throw out many generaciōs. Straigers shal stode and fede youre catel, and the Aleunties shalbe youre plowmē and reapers. But ye shalbe named the prestes of the LORDE, and me shall call you the seruantes of our God. Ye shall enjoye the goodes of the Gentiles and tryūphe in their substaunce. For youre greate reprofe and shame, shall they haue ioye, and ye maye haue parte with them. For they shall haue double possession in their lōde, and euerlasting ioye shalbe with them. ^fFor I the LORDE, which loue right and hate robbery (though it were offered me) shall make their workes full of faithfulness, and make an euerlasting couenant with them.

Their sede also and their generacion shall be knowne amonge the Gentiles, and amonge the people. All they that see them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed sede of the LORDE. And therefore I am ioyful in the LORDE, and my soule reioyseth in my God. For ^ghe shall put vpon me the garmēt of health, and couer me with the mātle of rightuousnes. He shall decke me like a brydegrome, and as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpon her. For like as the grounde bringeth forth frute, and as the gardē shuteth forth sede: So shall the LORDE God cause rightuousnes, and the feare of God to florish forth before all the Heithen.

The liij. Chapter.

FOR Sions sake therefore wil I not holde my tūge, and for Ierusalēms sake I wil not cease: vntill their rightuousnesse breake forth as the shyninge light, and their health as a burnyng lampe. Then shall the Gentiles see thy rightuousnesse and all kinges thy glory. Thou shalt be named with a new name, which the mouth of the LORDE shal shewe. Thou shalt be a crowne in the honde of the LORDE, and a glorious garlāde in the hōde of thy God. shall not kepe him close, nor leaue to speake of hi, vntill Ierusalē be set vp, ⁊ made the prayse of the worlde. The LORDE hath sworne by his right honde ⁊ by his stronge arme, that frō henceforth he wil not geue thy corne to be meate for thine enemies, ner thy wyne (wherī thou hast labourd) to be drynke for ſtraungers. But they that haue gathered in the corne, shal eate it, ⁊ geue thanks to the LORDE: ⁊ they that haue borne in the wyne, shall drynke it in the court of my Sanctuary.

Stōdē back, ⁊ departe a sunder, ye ſtōnde vnder ſy gate, make rowme ye people, repayre the strete, ⁊ take awaye ſtones, ⁊ set out a tokē for the people. ^a Beholde, ſ LORDE proclaneth in the endes of the worlde: tel ſ daughter Siō: se, thy Saluaciō cometh, beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, ⁊ his workes go before him. For they whō ſ LORDE delynereth, shalbe called the holy people: ⁊ as for the, thou shalt be named the greatly occupied, and not the forsaken.

The lxxij. Chapter.

WHAT is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra: (which is so costly cloth) ⁊ cometh in so neebly with all his strēgh? I an he ſ teacheth rightuousnes, ⁊ am of power to helpe. Wherefore thō is thy clothing reade, ⁊ thy raymēt like his ſ treadeth in ſ wyne presse? I haue troddē the presse my self alone, ⁊ of all people, there was not one with me. Thus haue I troddē downe myne enemies in my wrath,^b and set my fete vpō them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpō my clothes, ⁊ so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeauce that I haue takē in honde, ⁊ the yeare of my delyuerance is come. I loked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe. I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. Thē I helde me by myne owne arme, ⁊ my feruētnesse susteyned me. And thus haue I troden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so moch that I haue shed their bloude vpon the earth.

I will declare the goodness of the LORDE, ^c yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greater good ſ he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, ⁊ accordinge to the multitude of his louynge kindneses. For he sayde: These no doute wilbe my people, and no shrēkinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. ^d In their troubles he forsoke thē not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, delyuered them: Of very loue ⁊ kindnesse that he had vnto them, redeemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vp euer, sence the worlde begāne. But after they prouoked him to wrath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemy, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remēbred he the oldē tyme, of Moses ⁊ his people: ^e How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had geuen his holy sprete amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had deuyded the water before them (wherby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an horse is led in the playne, that they shulde not stombe. The sprete of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heauē,^f and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary ⁊ thy glory. How is it, ſ thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy louynge kyndnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs? ^g Yet art thou oure father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure father and redemer, and thy name is euer lastinge.^h O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruauantes sake ſ are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possessiō, for oure enemies haue takē it in: And we are become, euen as we were from the beginnyng: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

That thou mightest come downe with thy wonderous straunge workes, then shulde the hilles melt at thy presence. For sence the begynnyng of the worlde there was none (excepte thou o God) that herde or perceaued, nether hath euy eye sene what thou dost for thē, that put their trust in the.

Thou helpst him that doth right with cherefulnesse, and them that thinke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. ⁴We are all as an vnclene thinge, ⁊ all oure rightuousneses are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leaf, for oure synnes carie vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stondest vp to take holde by the. Therefore hydest thou thy face from vs, and consumest vs, because of oure synnes.

But now o LORDE, thou father of ours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the worke of thy hondes. Be not to sore displeasid (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to lōge in thy remembrance, but conside that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waist, ⁴Sion is a wilderness, and Ierusalem a deserte. Oure holy house which is oure bewty, where oure fathers prayed the, is brent vp, yee all oure cōmodities and pleasures are wastid awaye. Wilt thou not be intreated (LORDE) for all this? Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore?

The lrv. Chapter.

THEY shal seke me, that hitherto haue not axed for me: ⁶they shal fynde me, that hither to haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vfaithful people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginacions: To a people, that is euer dellyenge me to my face. ⁷They make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon alters of bricke, they lurck amonge the graues, and lie in the dennes all night. ⁸They eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. Yf thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holier then thou.

All these men when I am angrie, shalbe turned to smoke and fyre, that shal burne for euer. ⁴Beholde, it is written before my face, ⁊ shal not be forgotten, but recōpensid. I shal rewarde it them in to their bosome: ¹I meane youe mysdedes, and the mysdedes of youe fathers together (saieith the LORDE) which haue made their smokes vpon the mountaynes, and blasphemed me vpon the hilles: therefore will I measure their olde dedes in to their bosome agayne.

Morouer thus saieith the LORDE: ⁴like as when one wolde gather holy grapes, men saye vnto him: breake it not of, for it is holy: Euen so will I do also for my seruauentes sakes, that I will not destroye them all. ¹But I will take a sede out of Iacob, and out of Iuda one, to take possession of my hill. My chosen shal possesse these thinges, ⁊ my seruauentes shal dwell there. Saron shalbe a shepefolde, and the valley of Achor^m shal geue stallinge for the catell of my people, that feare me. But as for you, ye are they, y haue forsaken the LORDE, and forgotten my holy hill. Ye haue set vp an alter vnto fortune, ⁊ geuē rich drinkofferings vnto treasure. Therefore will I nombre you with the swerde, that ye shall be destroyed all together. ⁸For when I called, no man gaue me answer: when I spake, ye herkened not vnto me, but dyd wickednes before myne eyes, and chosed the thinge that pleased me not.

Therefore thus saieith the LORDE God: Beholde, my seruauentes shal eate, but ye shall haue hunger. Beholde, my seruauentes shal drynke, but ye shal suffre thurst. Beholde, my seruauentes shal be mery, but ye shal be cōfounded. Beholde, my seruauentes shal reioyse for very quietnesse of herte. ⁶But ye shal crie for sorow of hert, and cōplayne for vexacion of mynde. Your name shal not be sworne by amonge my chosen, for God the LORDE shal slaye you, and call his seruauents by another name. ⁷Who so reioyseth vpō earth, shall reioyse in the true God: And Who so sweareth vpō earth, shal swear in the true God. For the olde enemite shalbe forgotten, and taken awaye out of my sight. For lo, I shal make a new heauē, ^a ⁊ a new earth. And as for the olde, they shall neuer be thought vpō, ner kepte in mynde: but mē shalbe glad and euermore reioyce, for the thinges, that I shall do.

B For why: Beholde, I shal make a ioyfull Ierusalē, yee I my self wil reioyce with Ierusalem, ⁊ be glad with my people: ^b And the voyce of wepinge and wayling shall not be herde in her from thēce forth. There shall neuer be childe ner olde man, that haue not their full dayes. But whē the childe cometh to an hūderth yeare olde, it shall dye. And yf he that is an hūderth yeare of age do wronge, he shalbe cursed. ^c They shal buylde houses, and dwel in them: they shal plante vnyvards, and eate the frute of them. They shall not buylde, ⁊ another possesse: they shall not plante, and another eate: ^d But the life of my people shalbe like a tre, and so shal the worke of their hondes.

My chosen shal lyue longe, they shall not labour in vayne, ner beget with trouble: for they are the hie blessed sede of the LORDE, ⁊ their frutes with them. And it shalbe, that or euer they call, I shal answere them. ^e Whyle they are yet but thinkinge how to speake, I shal heare them. The wolff and the lambe shal fede together, and the lyon shal eate haye like the bullocke. But earth shalbe the serpētes meate. ^f There shal no man hurte ner slaye another, in all my holy hill, saith the LORDE.

The lvi. Chapter.

A THUS saith the LORDE: Heauē is my seate, ^g and the earth is my fote stole. Where shal now the house stonde, ^h ⁊ ye will buylde vnto me? And where shal be the place, ⁱ ⁊ I wil dwel in? As for these thinges, my hōde hath made them all, and they are all created, saith the LORDE. Which of them shal I then regarde? Euē him that is of a lowly troubled sprete, and stōdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an oxe for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he ^j ⁊ kylleth a mā. He that kylleth a shepe for me, choketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offringes, offreth swynes bloude: Who so maketh me a memoriall of Incense, prayseth the thinge ^k ⁊ is vnright. Yet take they soch wayes in honde, and their soule deliteth in these abhominacions.

^l Therefore wil I also haue pleasure in laughing them to scorne, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bringe vpon thē. For when I called, no man gaue answere: when I spake, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, ⁊ chose the thinges that displease me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speaketh. Your brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LORDE magnifie himself, that we maye se youre gladnesse: ^m ⁊ yet they shalbe cōfounded.

ⁿ For as touchinge the cite and the temple, I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will rewarde, and recompēce his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, or euer she suffre the payne of the byrth and anguysch of ^o ⁊ trauayle. Who euer herde or sawe soch thinges? doth the grounde beare in one daye? or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thus sayeth the LORDE: Am I he that maketh other to beare, and beare not my self? Am not I he that beareth, ^p and maketh baren? saith thy God. Reioyce with Ierusalem, ⁊ be glad with her, all ye that loue her. Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shal sucke cōforte out of hir brestes, and be satisfied. Ye shal taist, and haue delite in the plenteousnesse of hir power. For thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I wil let peace ^q i to her, like a water floude, ⁊ ^r ⁊ might of the Heithē shall be a flowinge streame. Then shal ye sucke, ye shal be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpō hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shal I comforte you, and ye shalbe comforted in Ierusalem. ^s And when ye se this, youre herte shal reioyce, and youre bones shal florish like an herbe.

Thus shal the honde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruantes, and his indignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shal come with fyre, and his charet shal be like a whyrlwynde, that he ^bAnd I shal take out certayne of them for to be preastes and leuites, saieth y LORDE. For like as the new heauē and the new earth which I wil make, shalbe fast established by me: (saieth the LORDE) So shal youre sede and youre name contynue, and there shalbe a new Moone for the other, and a new Sabbath for the other, t all flesh shal come to worshipe before me, (saieth y LORDE.) And they shal go forth, and loke vpō the caryons of them, that haue transgressed agaynst me. For their wormes shal not dye, ^cnether shal their fyre be quenched, t all flesh shal abhorre them.

Chap. LII.

A recitynge how Ierusalē was beseged, wonne, and taken.

THESSE are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of Helchia the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Beniamin:^a when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, in the xij yeares of his kingdome: and so duringe vnto the tyme of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, and vnto the xj yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Iosias^b kinge of Iuda were ended: when Ierusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: ^cBefore I fashioned the in thy mothers wöbe, I dyd knowe the: And or euer thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordered the, to be a prophet vnto the people. The sayde I:^d Oh LORDE God, I am vnmete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: ^eFor thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and what so euer I commaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wilbe with the, to deluyer the, saith the LORDE.

^fAnd with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde morouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waist; and that thou mayest buylde vp, and pläte.

After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Ieremy, what seist thou? And I sayde: I se a wakyng rodde.^g Then sayde f LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to performe it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? ^hAnd I sayde: I do se a seethinge pot, lokinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the northⁱ shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For lo, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and every one shall set his seate in the gates of Ierusalem, and in all their walles round aboute, and thorow all the cities of Iuda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of those men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto straunge goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne hondes.

And therefore gyrd vp thy loynes,^k arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in commaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of thē. For beholde,^l this daye do I make the a ströge fensed towne, an yron pyler, and a wall of ^mstele agaynst y whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Iuda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to ouercome the: ⁿfor I am with the, to deluyer the, saith the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE commaunded me thus: ^oGo thy waye, crie in the eares of Ierusalē, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilderness, in an vntilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. ^pAll they that deuoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Iacob, and all the generation of the house of Israel. Thus saith f LORDE vnto you:

What vnfaithfulnesse founde youre fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye from me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so vayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, y brought vs out of the löde of Egyp̄te: ^q y led vs thorow the wilderness, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a deedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. ^rAnd when I had brought you in to a pleasaunt welbuylded londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the comōdities of the same: ^sye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion.

where is \hat{y} LORDE? "They \hat{y} haue the lawe in their hondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do seruyce vnto Baal, τ folowe soch thinges as shall bringe them no profit.

Wherfore I am constrainyd (sayeth the LORDE) to make my complaynte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cethim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, take diligent hede: and se, whether soch thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles themselves deale so falsly τ vntuly with their goddes (which yet are no goddes in dede.^a) But my people hath geuen ouer their hie honoure, for a thinge that maye not helpe them.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be afrayde, τ abashed at soch a thinge, saith the LORDE. For my people hath done two euels. "They haue forsakē me the well of the water of life, and digged them pittes, yee vile and broken pittes, that holde no water. Is Israel a boude seruaunt, or one of the housholde?^d Why is he then so spoyled? Why do they roare and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? They haue made his londe wayst, "his cities are so brent vp, that there is no man dwelling in them. Yee the children of Noph and Taphanes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, euer sence he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now to do in \hat{y} strete of Egipte? to drinke foule water? Ether, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To drinke water of the floude? "Thine owne wickednesse shal reprove the, and thy turnynge awaye shal condemne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnderstonde, how euell and hurtful a thinge it is, \hat{y} thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORDE God of hoostes.

"I haue euer broken thy yock of olde, τ bursten thy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil nomore serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hie hilles, τ amonge all grene trees: where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good rotes. "How art thou turned then in to a bytter, vnfrutefull, and straunge grape? Yee and that so sore: that though thou wasshest the with Nitrus τ makest thiself to sauoure with that swete smellinge herbe of Borith: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORDE thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. "Loke vp^b thine owne waies in the woddes, valles τ dennes: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast done. Thou art like a swift Dromedary, that goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Asse, that vseth the wilderness, and that snoffeth and bloweth at his wil. Who can tame the? All they that seke the, shal not fayle, but fynde the in thine owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thy fote from nakednes, and thy throte from thurst, and thinkest thus in thy self: tush, I wil take no sorowe, I wil loue the straunge goddes, τ hange vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the dede, commeth to shame, euē so is the house of Israel come to confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and prophetes. "For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, τ not their face. But in the tyme of their trouble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs, I shal answerē thē: "Where are now thy goddes, that thou hast made the? byd them stonde vp, and helpe the in the tyme of nede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherfore thē wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. "Your owne swearde destroyeth youre prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. Yf ye be the people of the LORDE, then herkc vnto his worde: Am I thē become a wilderness vnto the people of Israel? or a londe that hath no light? Wherfor saiest my people then: we are fallē of, and we wil come no more vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir raymēt, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so lōge? The iij. Chapter.

COMONLY, when a man putteth away his wife, ^e and she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the question is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this felde then defyled and vnclene? ^d But as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agayne to me, saieih the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the stretes, and as a murderer in the wilderness. Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

“This is the cause, that the rayne and euenyng dew hath ceased. Thou hast gotten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me fro my youth: Wilt thou then put me away, and cast me of for euer? Or wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene fro me? Neuertheles, thou speakest such wordes, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

3 The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Iosias the kinge: Hast thou sene what that shrinkeing Israel hath done? how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, ^f and amonge all thicke trees, and there played the harlot? hast thou sene also, (when she had done all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? ^e Iuda that vnfaithfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shrenkinge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and gaue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda was not ashamed, but wente backe and played the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lode. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with stones and stockes.

Neuerthelesse, hir vnfaithfull sister Iuda is not ^a turned vnto me agayne with hir whole herte, but faynedly, saieih the LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The baesylder Israel is more righteous, ^b thic the vnfaithfull Iuda: and therefore go preach these wordes towarde the north, ^c saye: Thou shrenkinge Israel, turne agayne (saieih the LORDE,) and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saieih the LORDE, ^d I will not allwaye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greate blasphemy: Namely, that thou hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, ^e ^f and hast made thy silf partaker of straunge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saieih the LORDE.

“O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, saieih the LORDE, and I wilbe married with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amonge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will geue you hyrdmē after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wyszdome. Then shall Ierusalem be called the LORDES seate, and all Heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDE sake, which shalbe set vp at Ierusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frauwarde herte.

O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale youre bacturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel stondesth only vpon God oure LORDE.

^c Confucion hath deuoured oure fathers labour from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and daughters. So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue synned against the LORDE oure God, and haue ^d not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God.

The iiii. Chapter.

O ISRAEL, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saieth the LORDE. And yf thou wilt put awaye thy abhominaciōs out of my sight, thou shalt not be moued: ^e And shalt sweare: The LORDE lyueth: in treuth, in equite and rightuounesse: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saieth the LORDE, to all Iuda and Ierusalem: plowe youre londe, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

^f Be circumcised in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Iuda, ^g and all the indwellers of Ierusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, ^h & kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions.

Preach in Iuda and Ierusalem, crie out and speake: ⁱ blowe the trompettes in the londe, crie that euery man maye heare, and saye: Gather you together, and we will go in to stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, spede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bringe a greate plage, and a greate destruction from the north. ^j For the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dēne, that he maye make the londe waist, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell therein. Wherefore gyrdte youre selues aboute with sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wrath of the LORDE shal not be withdrawn from you.

At the same tyme (saieth the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shal be gone, the prestes shalbe astonished, and the prophetes shalbe sore afrayed. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaused this people and Ierusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, ^k and now the swerde goeth thorow their lyues? Then shal it be saide to the people ^l & to Ierusalem: ^m there commeth a warme wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clēse.

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he commeth downe like as a cloude, and his charettes are like a stormy wynde: ⁿ his horsmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. O Ierusalem, wash thine hert from wickednesse, ^o that thou mayest be helped. How longe shal thy noysome thoughtes remaine with the?

For a voyce from Dan and from ^p hill of Ephraim speaketh out, and telleth of a destruction. Beholde, the Heithen geue Ierusalem warnynge, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are cōmyng from farre countrees. They tell the cities of Iuda the same also, they shall geue them warnynge in euery place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wrath, ^q saieth the LORDE.

^r Thy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thine owne wickednesse and disobediēce, that hath possessed thine hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunt-eth within me, I can not be still, for I haue herde the crienge of the trompettes, and peales of warre.

They drie murthur vpon murthur, the whole londe shal perish. Immediately my tentes were destroyed, and my hanginges, in the twinkle of an eye. How longe shall I see the tokens of warre, and heare the noyse of the trompettes?

D Neuertheles this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, ^a and hath vterly no vnderstandinge. They are the children of foolishnes, ^b and without eny discreciō. To do euell, they haue witt ynough: but to do well, they haue no wisdome. I haue looked vpon the earth, and se, it is wayst and voyde. I looked towarde heauen, and it had no shyne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they trembled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I looked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wrath.

E For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shalbe desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therefore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sory aboute: for the thinge that I haue purposed and taken vpon me to do, shal not repent me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the horsmen and bowmen: they shall runne in to dennes in to woddes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shalbe voyde, and no man dwellinge therein.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? ^c For though thou clothest thy self with scarlet, ^d and deckest ^e with gold: though thou payntest thy face with colours, ^f yet shalt thou trymme thy self in vayne.

For those that hither to haue bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go aboute to slaye ^g. For (me thinke) I heare a noyse, like as it were of a woman traueling, or one laboringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the daughter Sion, that casteth out hir armes, and sowneth, sayenge: Ah wo is me, how sore vexed and faynte is my herte, for them that are slayne?

The v. Chapter.

L OKE thorow Ierusalem, beholde and se: ^a Seke thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saith the LORDE). ^b For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceau: Where as thou (o LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentance: thou hast correcte them for amendemēt, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therefore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so synple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES waye, ^c and iudgmentes of oure God. Therefore will I go vnto their heades and rulers, and talke with them: yf they knowe the waye of the LORDE, and the iudgmēt of oure God. But these (in like maner) haue broken the yock, and bursten the bondes in soder.

Wherefore a lyon out of the wod shal hurte them, ^d and a wolfe in the euenyng shal destroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurking by their cities, to teare in peeces all them, that come therout. For their offences are many, and their departinge awaye is greate.

^e Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and sworne by them that are no goddes. And albeit they were bounde to me in marriage, yet they fell to aduoutrie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnclenly lust they are become like the stoned hewe, euery man neyeth at his neighbours wife. ^f Shulde I not correcte this, saith the LORDE?

^g Shulde I not be avenged of euery people, that is like vnto this? Clymme vp vpon their walles, beate them downe, but destroye them not vterly: cut of their branches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel and Iuda forsaken me, saith the LORDE. ^h They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

C As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it but for wynde, ^a yee there is none of these, which will tell them, that soch thinges shal happen vnto them.

Wherefore thus saieith the LORDE God of hoostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: ^a The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wod, that it maye consume them.

^a Lo, I will bringe a people vpō you from farre, o house of Israel (saieith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people whose speach thou knowest not, nether vnderstōdest what they saye.

Their arowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eate vp thy frute τ thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy daughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes τ fyges. As for thy stronge and well fensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shal destroye them with the sward.

D Neuertheles I will not then haue done with you, saieith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherefore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answereth them: because, that like as ye haue forsakē me, and ^a serued straunge goddes in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye serue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Iacob, τ crie it out in Iuda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou folish and vndercrete people.) ^a Ye haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye heare not.

Fearē ye not me, saieith the LORDE? Are ye not ashamed, to loke me in the face? ^a which bynde the see with the sonde, so that it can not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the wawes therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstinate herte, they are departed and gone awaye from me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when nede is: which kepeth euer still the haruest for vs yearly.

E Neuertheles youre miszdedes haue turned these from you, ^a τ youre synnes haue robbed you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that priuely laye snares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. Herof cōmeth their greate substance and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye from me with shameful blasphemies. They minstre not the lawe, ^a they make no ende of the fatherlesse cause, they iudge not the poore accordinge to equite.

^a Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saieith the LORDE? Shulde I not be avenged of all soch people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therein. What will come therof at the last?

The vi. Chapter.

COME out of Ierusalem, ye stronge childre of Ben Iamin: ^a blowe vp the trompettes ye Tecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate miserye pepeth out from the North.

I will liken the daughter Sion to a fayre and tendre woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shal they pitch rounde aboute her, and euery one shal fede with his honde. Make batell agaynst her (shal they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, τ the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hoostes commaunded.

Hew downe hir trees, and set vp bulworkes agaynst Ierusalē. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a cōdyte aboundeth in water, euē so this cite abōdeth in wickednes. Robbery and vrightuousnesse is herde in her, sorow τ woundes are euer there in my sight. Amēde the (o Ierusalem) lest I with drawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: τ thy londe also, ^a y^e no man dwell in it. vnto whom shal I speake? whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? ^aTheir eares are so vncircumcised, that they maye not heare.

Beholde, ^bthey take the worde of God but for a scorne, and haue no lust therto. And therefore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE) that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. Yee the man must be taken prisoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Their houses with their londes and wiues shal be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out myne hōde vpon the inhabitants of this londe, saith the LORDE. ^cFor from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon covetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lyes.

^dAnd besyde that, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, when there is no peace at all. Therefore they must be ashamed, for they haue cōmitted abhominacion. But how shulde they be ashamed, when they knowe nothinge, nether of shame ner good nurture? ^eAnd therefore they shal fall amonge the slayne, and in the houre when I shall viset them, they shal be brought downe, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: go in to the stretes, considre and make inquisition for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and right waye, then go therin, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therin) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therefore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therfore ye Gentiles, and thou congregacion shalt knowe, what I haue denyed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, ^fI will cause a plage come vpon this people, even the frute of their owne ymaginacions.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abhorred them. ^gWherefore bringe ye me incense from Saba, ^h swete smellinge Calamus from farre countrees? Your burnt offeringes displease me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and there shal fall from amonge them the father with the children, one neghboure shal perish with another.

Morouer thus saith ⁱ LORDE: Beholde, ^j there shal come a people from the North, ^k a greate people shal arise from ^l endes of ^m earth, with bowes ⁿ and with dartes shal they be weapened: It is a rough ^o and fearece people, an vmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpon horses wel appointed to ^p batell agaynst the, o daughter Sion. Then shal this erie be herde: Oure armes are feble, heynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman traueling with childe. Noman go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the swearde and feare of the enemye shalbe on euery side.

Wherefore, gyrd a sack cloth aboute the (o thou daughter of my people) sprynkle thy self with aszshes, ^q mourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloued sonne: For the destroyer shal sodeuly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and to trye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are clene brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. ^rThe bellous are brent in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in vayne, for the euel is not taken awaye from them. Therefore shal they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

The viij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes, that God spake ^s vnto Ieremy: ^t Stonde vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE, all ye of Iuda, that go in at this dore, to honour the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel. ^uAmende youre wayes and youre counceles, and I wil let you dwell in this place. Trust not in false lyenge wordes, sayenge: here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE.

will not shed innocent bloude in this place: yf ye wil not cleue to straunge goddes to youre owne destruction: then wil I let you dwell in this place, yee in the londe that I gaue afore tyme vnto youre fathers for euer. But take hede, yee trust in counceils, that begyle you and do you no good. For when ye haue stollē, murthured, committed aduoutrie, and periury: Whē ye haue offred vnto Baal, folowinge straunge ⁊ vnknowe goddes: ^a Then come ye, and stonde before me in this house (which hath my name geuen vnto it) and saye: Tush, we are absolued quyte, though we haue done all these abhominacions.

What? ^b thinke you this house that beareth my name, is a deme of theues? And these thinges are not done priuely, but before myne eyes, saieih the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saieih the LORDE) and I my self rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answere. ^c And therefore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and youre fathers. ^d And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethren the whole sede of Ephraim.

^e Therefore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt nether geue thākes, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise will I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Iuda, and without Ierusalem? ^f The children gather stickes, the fathers kynde the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.

They poure out drinkoffringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: How be it they hurte not me (saieih the LORDE) but rather confoude, and shame them selues.

And therefore thus saieih the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpō the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, ⁊ it shal burne so, that no mau maye quench it.

Thus saieih the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: ^g Ye heape vp youre burnt-offringes with youre sacrifices, ⁊ eate y^e flesh. ^h But when I brought youre fathers out of Egipte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt-offringes and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: herken and obeye my voyce, and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue comaunded you, that ye maye prospere.

ⁱ But they were not obedient, they inclyned not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymaginacions and after the mocions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egipte, vnto this daye.

^j Neuertheles, I sent vnto them my seruantes all the prophetes: I rose vp early and sent them worde, yet wolde they not herkē, ner offre me their eares, but were obstinate, and worse then their fathers.

And thou shalt now speake all these wordes vnto them, but they shal not heare the: thou shalt erie vpon them, but they shal not answere the. Therefore shalt thou saye vnto them: this is the people, that nether heareth the voyce of the LORDE their God, ner receaueth his correction. ^k Faithfulnes ⁊ treuth is clene rooted out of their mouth.

^l Wherefore cut of thine hayre, and cast it awaye, take vp a complaynte in the whole londe: for the LORDE shal cast awaye, and scatre the people, y^e he is displeasid withall.

^m For the children of Iuda haue done euell in my sight, saieih the LORDE. They haue set vp their abhominacions, in the house y^e hath my name, and haue defyled it. ⁿ They haue also buylded an aluter at Tophet, which is in the valley of y^e childrē of Ennō: y^e they might burne their sonnes and daughters, which I neuer comaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought. And therefore beholde, the dayes shal come (saieih the LORDE) that it shal no more be called, Tophet, or the valley of the children of Ennon, but the valley of

The viij. Chapter.

AT the same tyme, saieih the LORDE, the bones of the kinges of Iuda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the prestes and prophetes, yee and the bones of the citisens of Ierusalē, shalbe brought out of their graues^d and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heavenly hooste: whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they ranne after, whom they sought & worshipped. They shal nether be gathered together ner buried, but shal lye vpon the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

^eAnd all they that remayne of this wicked generacion, shal desyre rather to dye thē to lyue: where so euer they remayne, & where as I scatere them, saieih the LORDE of hoostes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also: Thus saieih the LORDE: Do men fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, y^e they neuer conuerte? Wherefore then is this people and Ierusalem gone so farre backe, that they turne not againe? They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

For I haue loked, and considered: ^fbut there is no mā, that speaketh a good worde: there is no man, that taketh repētaunce for his synne, that will so moch as saye: wherefore haue I done this? But euery man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Storke knoweth his apoynted tyme, the Turtledoue, ^gSwalow and the Crane, cōsidre the tyme of their traunayle: ^hbut my people will not knowe the tyme of the punyishment of the LORDE. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORDE amonge vs?

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the scribes, setteth forth lies: therefore shal the wise be confounded, they shalbe afrayed and taken: for lo, ⁱthey haue cast out the worde of the LORDE: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherefore, I will geue their wyues vnto aleauntes, and their feldes to destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hiest, they folowe all shamefull lucre: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they deale all with lies. ^kNeuertheles, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

Eye for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, yee they knowe of no shame.

^lWherefore in the tyme of their visitacion, they shal fall amonge the deed bodies, saieih the LORDE.

Morouer I will gather them in (saieih the LORDE) so that there shal not be one grape vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fyge tre, and the leaues shalbe plucte of.

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shall we be in rest: For the LORDE oure God hath put vs to sylence, and geuen vs water myxte with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We loked for peace, and we fayre not the better, we wayted for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothing but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herde from Dan, the whole londe shall be afrayed at the neyge of his stronge horses: for they shal go in, and denoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therein. ^mMorouer, I will sende Cockatrices & serpentes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, sayeth the LORDE.

Sorowe is come vpon me, and heuynes vexeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the criēge of my people is herde from a farre countre: Is not the LORDE in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherefore then haue they greued me (shall the LORDE saye) with their ymages and foolish straunge fashions? The harvest is gone, the Sōmer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed, because of the hurte of my people: I am heuy and abashed, for there is no more Triacle at Galaad, and there is no Phisician, that cā heale the hurte of my people.

The ii. Chapter.

O, WHO will geue my heade water ynough, ⁊ a well of teares for myne eyes: that I maye wepe night ad daye, for the slaughter of my people? Wolde God that I had a cottage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thē: for they be all aduoutrers and a shrenckinge sorte. They bēde their tūges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the treuth, they maye nothinge away with all in the worlde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saith the LORDE.

Yee one must kepe himself from another, no man maye safelye trust his owne brother: for one brother vndermyneth another, ⁊ one neyghboure begyleth another. Yee one dissembleth with another, and they deale with no treuth. ^aThey haue practised their tūges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do myschefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of disceate, and (for very dissemblinge falsede) they wil not knowe me, saith the LORDE.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie thē, for what shulde I els do to my people? Their tūges are like sharpe arowes, ^bto speake disceate. With their mouth they speake peaceably to their neyghboure, but preuely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punysh them for these thinges, saith the LORDE? ^cOr, shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? ^dVpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and soroufull crie, and a mournyng vpon the fayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so brente vp, that no man goeth there any more: Yee a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

^eByrdes and catell are all gone from thēce. I will make Ierusalem also an heape of stōnes, and a denne of veynymous wormes. And I wil make the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shal dwell therein. What man is so wise, as to vnderstonde this? Or to whom hath the LORDE spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: ^fO thou londe, why perishest thou so? Wherefore art thou so brent vp, and like a wilderness, that no mā goeth thorow? Yee the LORDE himself tolde the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepte not the thynge that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued thereafter: ^gbut folowed the wickednes of their owne hertes, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will fede this people with wormwod, and geue thē gall to drynke. ^hI will scatere them also amonge the Heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a swearde amonge them, ⁱto persecute them, vntill I bringe them to naught. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: loke that ye call for mournyng wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mournyng songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lyddes maye guszhe out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse herde of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne naturall countre, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgiges. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye women) and let youre eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne youre daughters to mourne, and that euery one maye teach hir neyghbouresse, to make lamentacion. Namely thus: Deeth is clymmē vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the dore, ⁊ ^j yonge man in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saith ^k LORDE: The deed bodies of men shal lye vpon ^l grounde, as the donge vpon the felde, ^mand as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: Let not the wise man reioyse in his wisdom, ner the stronge man in his strength, ⁿnether the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstōdeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do mercie, equite and rightuousnes vpon earth. ^oTherefore haue I pleasure in such thinges, saieþ ſ̄ LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saieþ the LORDE) that I wil vyset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, ^a the Iewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwell in the wilderness. ^b For all ſ̄ Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The r. Chapter.

HEARE the worde of the LORDE, ſ̄ he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saieþ the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the Heithē, ^c and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen: for the Heithen are afrayed of such: Yee all the customes and lawes of the Gētiles are nothinge, but vanite. ^d They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the workeman, and fashion it with the axe: they couer it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it with nales and hammers, that it moue not. It stōdeth as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. ^e Be not ye afrayed of such, for they cā do nether good ner euell. But there is none like vnto ſ̄ (o LORDE) thou art greate, ^f and greate is the name of thy power. Who wolde not feare the? or what kige of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye be lickened vnto the. They are all together vnlernd and vnwise, All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beatē to plates: ^g and golde from Ophir, a worke ſ̄ is made with the honde of the craftesman ^h and the caster, clothed with yalow sylk and scarlet: euen so is the worke of their wyse men all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyaunge God, and an euerlastinge kinge. ⁱ Yf he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gētiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddesses, it maye well be sayde of thē: they are goddesses, that made nether heauē ner earth: therefore shal they perish frō the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen.

But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdome hath he finished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heauens, At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he draweth vp ſ̄ cloudes from the vttemost partes of ſ̄ earth: ^j he turneth lighteninge to rayne, and brigheth forth the wyndes out of their treasuries: ^k His wisdome maketh all men fooles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, ^l for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. ^m The vayne craftes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Iacobs porciō is not such: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaūce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put awaye thy vnclennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saieþ the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhabitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of such a fashiō, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte? Alas, how panefull are my scourges vnto me? For I cōsidre this sorow by my self, ⁿ and I must suffre it, My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone fro me, and can no where be founde. Now haue I none to sprede out my tente, or to set vp my hangings. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with their cattell, ^o and all are scatred abrode. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sediciō out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wylderness, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. ^p Now I knowe (o LORDE) that it is not in mā's power to ordre his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes ^q goinges. Therefore chastē thou vs (o LORDE) but with fauoure, ^r and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vtterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gētiles, that knowe ſ̄ not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Iacob, and haue roted out his glory.

The xi. Chapter.

A THIS is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Ieremy for to preach, sayenge :

Hearre the wordes of the couenaunt, and speake vnto all Iuda, and to all them that dwell at Ierusalem, And saye thou vnto thē : Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto ȳ wordes of this couenaüt: which I commaunded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron forname, sayenge : ^a Be obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I commaunde you : ^b so shal ye be my people, and I will be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, ȳ I haue sworne vnto youre fathers : Namely, that I wolde geue them ^a londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in ȳ cities off Iuda and rounde aboute Ierusalem, and saye: Hearre the wordes off this cōuenaunt, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer sense the tyme that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnynge by tymes, sayenge: herken vnto my voyce: ^d Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor encline their eares vnto me, ^e but folowed the wicked ymaginaciōs of their owne hertes. And therefore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this couenaunt, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstōdinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is foude out, that whole Israel and all the citisens off Ierusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddesses, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Iuda haue broken my couenaunt, which I made with their fathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Be-

holde, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye crie vnto me, I will not heare you. The shal the townes off Iuda and the citisens off Ierusalem go, and call vpon their goddesses, vnto whom they made their oblacios: ^f but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. ^g For as many cities as thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddesses hast thou also: ^h And loke how many stretes there be in the (o Ierusalem) so many shameful aulters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. ⁱ But praye not thou for this people, byd nether praye ner prayer for them: for though they crie vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shameful greate blasphemies in my house? ^j euen as though that holy flesh might absolue the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, ^k a fayre one, a frutefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary reporte off the abrode, he will burne the vp, and destroye thy braunches. ^l For the LORDE off hoostes that plated the, hath deuyed a plage for the (o thou house of Israel & Iuda) for ȳ euel that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, and vnderstonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginaciōs. ^m But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to be slayne: not knowinge, that they had deuyed such a counceyl agaynst me, sayenge: ⁿ We will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe of the luyunge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therefore I will beseke the now (o LORDE of hoostes) ^o thou righteous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therfore spake thus of the citisens of Anothot, that sought to slaye me, sayenge: ^p Preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Yourre yonge mē shal perish with the swearde, yourre sonnes and yourre daughters shal vtterly dye of hunger,

The xij. Chapter.

OLORDE, thou art more righteous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. ^aHow happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous? and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offēde and lyue in wickednesse? Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boast moch off the, yet doest thou not punysh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, ^τ proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house,^b and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therein?

Seinge thou art weery in runnyng with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne with horses? In a peaceable suren londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Iordane? For thy brethren ^{ād} thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence.

^bBeleue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therefore haue I forsaken it. ^cMyne heretage is vnto me, as a speckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. Go hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

regardeth it. The destroyers come ouer the heeth euery waye, for ^ethe swarde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of ^flōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reape thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynges, because of the greate wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne ^gcuel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Iuda from amonge them. ^hAnd whē I haue rooted thē out, I wilbe at one with thē agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and bryng them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne ⁱȳ wayes of them, to swear by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to swear by Baal) thē shal they be rekened amōge my people. ^jBut yf they wil not obeye, the wil I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saith the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus saith the LORDE ^kvnto me: go thy waye ^τ get the a lynnē breche, and gyrd it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a brech, accordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared ^τ put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vnto Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Vp, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the brech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the brech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus ^lsaith the LORDE: Euen so wil I corrupte the pryde off Iuda, and the hie mynde off

Ierusalē. ^a This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my worde, they folowe y wicked ymaginations off their owne hert, t hange vpon strange goddes, thē haue they serued t worshipped: and therefore they shalbe as this brech, that serueth for nothinge. For as strately as a brech lieth vpon a māis loynes, so strately dyd I bynde y whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Iuda vnto me, saieith the LORDE: ^b that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: y they might be in honoure: but they wolde not obeye me. Therefore laye this ryddle before them, and saye: Thus saieith the LORDE God of Israel: euery pot shal be fylled with wyne. And they shal saye: thinkest thou we knowe not, y euery pot shalbe fylled with wyne? Then shalt thou saye vnto them: C Thus saieith the LORDE: Beholde, I shal fyll all the inhabitours of this lōde with dronckēnes, the kynges that syt vpon Dauids stole, the prestes and prophetes, with all y dwell at Ierusalem. I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but destroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no disdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that speaketh. Honour y LORDE youre God hereín, or he take his light from you, and or euer your fete stomble in darknesse at y hill: lest whē ye loke for the light, he turne it in to y shadowe and darknesse of death. But yf ye wil not heare me, that geue you secrete warnynge, I will mourne fro my whole herte for youre stubbornnesse. ^c Piteously will I wepe, and the teares shall guszhe out of myne eyes. Therefore will I scatere you, lyke as y stobble that is takē awaye with y south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saieith the LORDE: because ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceafull thinges. ^f Therefore shall I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discouer thy thees, that thy preuyties maye be sene: thy adouotrie, thy deedly malice, thy beastlynes and thy shameful whordome. For vpon the feldes and hilles I haue sene thy abominacions. Wo be vnto the (o Ierusalē) whē wilt thou euer be clenسد enymore?

The xiiij. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shewed vnto Ieremy, cōcernynge the derth off the frutes.

IUDA shal mourne, men shall not go moch more thorow his gates: the londe shal be nomore had in reputacion, t the erie of Ierusalē shal breake out. The lordes shall sende their seruauntes to fetch water, t when they come to the wellles, they shal fynde no water, but shal carie their vessels home emptie. They shal be ashamed t confounded, t shal couer their heades. ^g For the grōude shalbe dried vp, because there cōmeth no rayne vpon it. The plowmen also shalbe ashamed, t shal couer their heades. The Hynde shal forsake the yonge fawne, that she brīgeth forth in y felde, because there shalbe no grasse. one that goeth ouer the felde, ād cōmeth in only to remaine for a night? Why wilt thou make thy self a coward, and as it were a giāute that yet maye not helpe? For thou art ours (o LORDE) and we beare thy name, therefore forsake vs not.

B Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people ŷ haue pleasure to go so nembly with their fete, and leaue not of, and therefore displeas the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bringe agayne to remembrance all their myszdedes, ād punysh all their synnes. Yee euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. ^a For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offre burnt offriges τ sacrifices, yet wil not I accepte them. For I will destroye them with the swearde, honger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: ^b Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no honger shall come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continuall rest in this place.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The prophetes preach lies vnto them in my name. I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende thē: yet they preach vnto you false visions, charmynge, vanite, and discaufulnesse of their owne herte. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuertheles haue not sent) and ŷ saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner honger be in this londe: With swearde ād with honger shal those prophetes perish, ^d and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Ierusalem, dye of honger, ād be slayne with the swearde, (and there shal be no man to burie them) ^e both they ād their wyues, their sonnes and their daughters. For thus wil I poure their wickednes vpon thē. This shalt thou saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceasinge daye τ night. / For my people shalbe destroyed with greate harme, and shall perish with a greate plage. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Yff I come in to the cite, lo, they be all fameshed of honger.

Yee their prophetes also and prestes shal be led in to an vnknowne londe.

Hast thou then vtterly forsaken Iuda? ^f (sayde I) Dost thou so abhorre Siō? Or hast thou so plaged vs, that we can be healed no more? ^g We loked for peace, and there cōmeth no good: for the tyme of health, τ lo, here is nothinge but trouble. We knowlege (o LORDE) all oure myszdedes, and the synnes of oure fathers, that we haue offended ŷ. Be not displeasd (o LORDE) for thy names sake, forget not thy louynge kyndnes: ^h Remembre ŷ trone of thyne honoure, breake not the couenaūt, that thou hast made with vs. ⁱ Are there eny amonge the goddes of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou it o LORDE oure God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these thinges.

The xv. Chapter.

THEN spake the LORDE vnto me, ād sayde: ^k Though Moses and Samuel stode before me, yet haue I no herte to this people. Dryue them awaye, that they maye go out of my sight. And yf they saye vnto the: ^l Whyther shal we go? Thē tell thē: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swearde, some to honger, some in to captiuyte. For I will bringe foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. ^m The swearde shal stragle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre ād beestes of the earth shal eate them vp, and destroye them. I will scatre them aboute also in all kingdomes and londes to be plaged, because of Manasses ⁿ the soune of Ezechias kinge of Iuda, for the things that he dyd in Ierusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Ierusalem? Who shal be sorry for the? Or who shal make intercession, to opteyne peace for the? seinge thou goest fro me, ād turnest backwarde, saith the LORDE? Therefore I will stretch out myne honde against the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatre the abrode with the fanne on euery side of the londe: ^o I will waist my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sondes of the see. Vpon ŷ mothers of their children, I shal bringe a destroyer in the noone daye.

^a Sodenly and vnwarres, shal I sende a feare vpon their cities. She that hath borne vij. children, shal haue none, hir herte shal be full of sorowe.

The Sonne shall fayle her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and faynte for very heynesse. ^b As for those ^c y remayne, I wil delyuer them vnto the swerde off their enemies, saith the LORDE. ^d O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, anemie and hated of the whole loude: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet eury man speake euell vpon me. And ^e y LORDE answered me: Lede not I the then vnto good? Come not I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe ^f y, when thine enemy oppresseth the? And I wil brige you with youre enemies in to a londe, ^h y ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE (sayde I then) thou knowest all things, therefore remembre me, ad viset me, delyuer me fro my persecuters: Receaue not my cause in thy lōge wrath, yet thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. ⁱ When I had founde thy wordes, I at them vpregredely: they haue made my hert ioyfull and glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God off hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scornors, nether is my delyte therin: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heynes endure for euer? Are my plagges then so greate, y they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynne? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. ^k They shal conuert vnto the, but turne not thou vnto the: and so shal I make the a strōge wall of stele agaynst this people. ^l They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuaile. For I my self will be with the, to helpe the, and delyuer the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and delyuer the out of the honde of Tirautes.

The xvi. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt take ^m y no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible deeth, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as dōge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swerde and honger, and their bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace fro this people (saith the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shall not be buried; no man shall bewepe them, no man shall clippe or shaue himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shall not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heynes for father and mother. ⁿ Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: ^o Beholde, I shall take awaye out of this place, the voyce off myrth and gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde: yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye se it.

Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherefore hath the LORDE deuysed all this greate plage for vs? Or what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE oure God? Then make thou them this answer: Because youre fathers haue forsaken me (saith the LORDE) ^p and haue cleued vnto straunge goddes, whom they haue honoured and worshipped: but me haue they forsakē, and haue not kepte my lawe. ^q And ye with youre shameful blasphemies, haue

For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd from my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. The Gentiles shall come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Verely oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therefore, I will once teach them (saieith ^ŷ LORDE) I will shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, ^ŷ my name is ^ŷ LORDE.

The xvij. Chapter.

YOURE synne (o ye off the trybe of Iuda) is writē in the table of youre hertes, ^τ grauē so vpon the edges of youre altuers with a penne of yron ^τ with an Adamāt clawe: ^ŷ youre children also maye thynke vpon youre altuers, woddes, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes ^τ feldes. Wherefore, I will make all youre substance ^τ treasure be spoyled, for the greate synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all ^ŷ coostes off youre lode. Ye shall be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bōdage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saieith the LORDE: ^oCursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, ^{ād} that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from ^ŷ LORDE. He shall be like the heeth, that groweth in the wildernes. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shall not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wildernes, in a salt and vnoccupied londe. O Blisid is the man, ^a that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harme, when it commeth, but his leaues are grene. And though there growe but litle frute because off drouth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth off to bringe forth frute. Amonge all thinges luyenge, man hath the most disceatfull and vnsercheable hert.

Who shall then knowe it? ^aEuen I the LORDE ripe out the grounde off the hert, ^{ād} search the reynes and rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes, and accordinge to the frute off his counceils.

The disceatfull maketh a nest, but bringeth forth no yonge: He commeth by riches, but not rightuouly. In the myddest off his life must he leaue them behinde him, and at the last be founde a very foole. But thou (o LORDE) whose trone is most glorious, excellent and off most antiquite, which dwellest in the place of oure holy rest: Thou art the comforte off Israel. All they that forsake the, shalbe confounded: ^oall they that departe from the, shalbe written in earth, for they haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite of the waters of life.

Let my persecuters be confounded, but not me: let them be afrayed, and not me. Thou shalt bringe vpon thē the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right sore.

D Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vnto me: ^bGo and stonde vnder the gate, where thorow the people and the kinges of Iuda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Ierusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, and all thou people of Iuda, and all ye citesyns of Ierusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus the LORDE commaundeth: ^cTake hede for youre lyues, that ye carie no burthen vpon you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Ierusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no labour there in, but halowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded youre fathers. ^dHow be it they obeyed me not, nether herkedened they vnto me: but were obstinate & stubburne, and nether obeyed me, ner receaued my correccion.

E Neuertheles, yf ye will heare me (saith the LORDE) and beare no burthen in to y^e cite thorow this gate vpon the Sabbath: Yf ye will halowe the Sabbath, ^eso that ye do no worke there in: then shal there go thorow the gates of this cite, kinges and prynces, that shall syt vpon the stole of Dauid: They shall be caried vpon charettes, and ryde vpon horses, both they and their princes: Yee whole Iuda and all the citesyns of Ierusalem shall go here thorow, and this cite shall euer be the more and more inhabited. There shall come men also from the cities of Iuda, from aboute Ierusalem, and from y^e londe of Ben Iamin, from the playne felde, from the mountaynes and from the wilderness: which shall bringe burntofferings, sacrifices, oblations, and incense, and offre vp thankesgeuyng in the house of the LORDE. But yf ye will not be obedient vnto me, to halowe the Sabbath, so that ye will beare youre burthens thorow the gates off Ierusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I set fyre vpon the gates off Ierusalem, and it shal burne vp the houses off Ierusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The xliij. Chapter.

This is another communication, that God had with Ieremy, sayenge:

ARISE, and go downe in to the Potters house, and there shall I tell the more off my mynde. Now when I came to the Potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessel that the Potter made off claye, brake amonge his hōdes: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, accordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: ^fMaye not I do with you, as this Potter doth, O ye house off Israel? saith the LORDE? Beholde, ye house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the Potters honde.

^gWhen I take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waist awaye eny people or kīngdome: yf that people (agaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) couerte from their wickednes: Immediaty, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon thē. ^hAgayne: Whē I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a people or a kingdome: yf the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Immediaty, I repente of the good, that I deuysed to do for them.

Speake now therefore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge in honde agaynst you.

ⁱTherefore, let euery man turne from his euell waye, ^ktake vpon you the thinge that is good, and do right. But they saye: ^lNo more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymaginacions, and do euery mā accordinge to the wilfulnessse of his owne mynde.

B Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Axe amonge the Heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the daughter of Sion hath done. Shal not y^e snowe (y^e melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moysture the felde? Or maye the springes off waters be so grauen awaye, that they runne no more, geue moynstnesse, ner make frutefull? But my people hath so forgotten me, ŷ they haue made sacrifice vnto vayne goddes. And whyle they folowed their owne wayes they are come out of the hie strete, and gone in to a fote waye not vsed to be troden. Where thorow they haue brought their londe in to an enerlastinge wildernesse and scorne: "So ŷ who so euer trauayleth ther by, shalbe abashed, and wagge their heades. With an East wynde will I scatre thē, before their enemies. And when their destruction cōmeth, I will turne my backe vpō them, but not my face.

⁶Then sayde they: come, let vs ymagin sonthinge agaynst this Jeremyp. Yee this dyd euen the prestes, to whom ŷ lawe was commytted: the Senatours, ŷ were the wysest: and the prophetes, which wanted not ŷ worde off God. Come (sayde they) let vs cut out his tūge, and let vs not regarde his wordes. Considre me (o LORDE) and heare the voyce of myne enemies. Do they not recompence euell for good, "when they dygg a pyt for my soule? ⁷Remembre, how that I stode before the, to speake for thē, ād to turne awaye thy wrath from them.

⁸Therefore let their childrē dye of hunger, and let them be oppressed with the swearde. Let their wyues be robbed of their childrē, and become wyddowes: /let their huszbōdes be slayne, let their yonge men be kylled with the swearde in the felde. Let the noyse be herde out of their houses, when the murtherer cōmeth sodenly vpon them: For they haue digged a pit to take me, and layed snares for my fete. ⁹Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their coicell, that they haue deuyded, to slaye me. And therefore forgeue them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltye: This shalt thou do vnto thē in ŷ tyme of thy indignacion.

The xii. Chapter.

MOROUER, thus saide the LORDE vnto Jeremyp: Go thy waye, and bye the an erthen pytcher, and bringe forth the Senatours and chefe prestes in to the valley of the children off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of brick, ⁊ shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, ād ye citesyns of Ierusalem: Thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe soch a plage vpon this place, that ŷ eares of all that heare it, shal glowe. ⁴And that because they haue forsakē me, and vnhalowed this place, and haue offred in it vnto straunge goddes: whō nether they, their fathers, ner the kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also with the bloude of innocentes, for they haue set vp an aluter vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt-offringe vnto Baal, which I nether commaunded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

Beholde therefore, ŷ tyme cōmeth⁴ (saieith the LORDE) ŷ this place shal nomore be called Tophet, ner ŷ valley of ŷ childrē of Ennō, but ŷ valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Iuda ⁊ Ierusalē, ⁊ kill thē downe with the swearde in ŷ sight of their enemies, ād of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carcasses wil I geue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolate, ād depysed: that who so goeth there by, shal be abashed ⁊ geast vpon her, because of all hir plages.

I will fede them also with the flesh^m of their sonnes ⁊ their daughters. Yeeⁿ euery one shal eate vp another in the besinginge ⁊ straytnesse, wher with their enemies (ŷ seke their lyues) shal kepe thē in. And the picher shalt thou breake in the sight of the mē, ŷ shalbe with the, and saye vnto thē: Thus saieith the LORDE off hoostes: ⁶Enē so wil I destroye this people ⁊ cite: as a Potter breaketh a vessel, that can not be made whole agayne.

In Tophet shal they be buried,^p for they shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saieith the LORDE, and to thē ŷ dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (For the houses of Ierusalē ⁊ the houses of the kinges of Iuda are defyled, like as Tophet,) because off all the houses, in whose parlars they dyd sacrifice vnto all the hooste of heauē, and poured out drynke offringes vnto straunge goddes. And so Jeremy came from Tophet, where the LORDE had sent him to prophecie, and stode in the courte off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saieih the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the plages that I haue deuyed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate,^a ad wolde not obeye my warnynges.

The xi. Chapter.

WHEN Pashur the preast, the sonne off Emmer, chefe in the house off y LORDE, herde Jeremy preach so stedfastly: ^bhe smote Jeremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Iamin, in the house off y LORDE. The nexte daye followinge, Pashur brought Jeremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Jeremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nomore Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull ad afrayed) euery where. For thus saieih the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afrayed, the thy self, and all that faououre y: which shal perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before thy face.

And I wil gene whole Iuda vnder the power of the kinge of Babilon, which shall carie some vnto Babilon presoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Morouer, ^call y substance of this londe, all their precious and gorgeous workes, all costlynesse, and all the treasure of the kinges of Iuda: wil I gene in to the hodes of their enemies, which shal spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon. But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine housholde, ^d to Babilo shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy faouurers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refreshest me, ^e and makest me stronge agayne. ^fAll the daye longe am I despysed, and laughed to scorne of euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruction. ^gFor y which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst.

to speake of him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnyunge fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisio and blasphemies, ⁱ yee euen of myne owne companyons, and off such as were conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afrayed sayenge: vpon him, let vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde his touge: ^j we maye ouercome him, and be avenged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mightie giaunte: therefore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shal be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shall haue an euerlastinge shame. And now, o LORDE of hoostes, ^k thou righteous sercher (which knowest the reynes and the very herthes:) let me se them punyshed, for vnto the I committe my cause.

Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath deluyered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: ^l vnhappy be y daye, where in my mother brought me forth. Cursed be the man, that brought my father the tidinges, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities' which y LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure of them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue hirself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remainyd still in her. ^m Wherefore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience of labour and sorowe? and to lede my life with shame?

The xxi. Chapter.

THESSE are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchias, and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia, prest, sayenge: Axe counsell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peradventure) will deale with vs, acordinge to his maruelous power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Jeremy: Geue Sedechias this answer, ^a Thus saieth the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherwith ye fight agaynst the kinge of Babilō & the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute ^b & I will briſge thē together in to the myddest of this cite, and I my self will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, and with a mightie arme, in greate displeasure and terrible wrath: and will smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both mē and catell shal dye of the pestilence.

And after this (saieth the LORDE) I shall deluyer Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, & his seruantes, his people (and such as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, sward, and hunger) ^c in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon: yee in to the hōdes of their enemies, in to the hōdes of those ^d y folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with ^e swerde: they shal not pite thē, they shal not spare them, they shall haue no mercy vpon them.

And vnto this people thou shalt saye: ^f Thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I laye before you the waye of life and death. Who so abyeth in this cite, shal perish: ether with the sward, with hunger, or with pestilēce. But who so goeth out to holde on ^g y Caldees parte, ^h y besege it, he shal saue his life, and shal wynne his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite ⁱ (saieth the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geuē in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, & be brent with fyre.

And vnto the house of the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: Heare the worde of ^j y LORDE (o thou house off Dauid) for thus saieth the LORDE: ^k Minstre rightuousnes, and that soone, deluyer the oppressed frō violent power: or euer my terrible wrath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quēch it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions. The xxiij. Chapter.

THUS sayde the LORDE also: Go ^a downe in to the house of the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, & saye: Heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruantes and thy people, that go in & out at this gate. ^b Thus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, deluyer the oppressed frō the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, and shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

And yf ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt vpō Davids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon horses, both they & their seruantes, and their people. ^c But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by myne owne self (saieth ^d y LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kinges house of Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye off it, yf I make the not so waist (& thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in? ^e I will prepare a destroyer with his weapēs for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherfore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenaunt off the LORDE their God, ^f and haue worshipped and serued straunge goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth away: for he commeth not agayne, and seeth his natyue cōuntre no more. For thus saieth the LORDE, ^g as touching Sellum the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, which reigned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neighbours labour, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: I wil buylde me a wyde house, and gorgeous perlers: He causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes maketh he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, now that thou proouoket me to wrath with thy Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as lōge as he dealt with equite and rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped y oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saieith the LORDE. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therefore, thus saieith the LORDE agaynst Ioachim, y sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda: "They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas syster: Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas syr, alas for that noble pryuce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast without the gates of Ierusalem.

Clymme vp the hill off Libanus (o thou daughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, erie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaue the warninge, whyle thou wast yet i prosperite, But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou used from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shalbe dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shalbe caried awaye in to captiuyte: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: ^b thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, and makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greate shal thy mournynge be, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman trauelinge with childe?

As truly as I lyue (saieith the LORDE.) ^c Though Iechonias the sonne off Ioachim kinge off Iuda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him of: And I wil geue the in to y power off thē that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the power of the Caldees. Morouer. I will sende the, and thy mother that bare the, in to a straunge londe, where ye were not borne, and there shall ye dye. But as for the londe that ye will desyre to returne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This mā Iechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peeces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherefore both he and his sede shalbe sent awaye, and cast out in to a lōde, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE: Wryte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall eny of his sede be so happe, as to syt vpon the seate of Dauid, and to beare rule in Iuda.

The xxiij. Chapter.

WO be vnto the shepherdes, ^a that destroye, and scatre my flocke, saieith the LORDE. Wherefore, this is the commaundemēt of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that fede my people: Ye scatre and thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therefore, now will I vyset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saieith y LORDE: And will gather together the remnant of my flocke, from all londes that I had dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also ouer them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saieith the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme commeth (saieith the LORDE) that I wil rayse vp the rightuous braunch off Dauid, which shall beare rule, and discusse matters with wysdome, and shall set vp equyte and rightuousnes agayne in the earth.

the north londe, and from all countrees where I had scattered them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shake: I am become like a droneken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes: Because the londe is full of adouterers, where thorow it is destroyed and mourneth,^a and y^e pleasaunt pastures of the deserte are dried vp. Yee the waye that men take, is wicked, and their gouernance is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are poluted Ypocrytes, and their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, their waye shall be slippery in the dareknesse, wherein they maye stacker and fall. For I will bringe a plage vpon them, euen the yeaere of their visitacion, saith the LORDE. I haue sene folly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, y^e they preched for Baal, and disceaue my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the Prophetes off Ierusalem foule aduoutery, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hōde, flatering them, so that they cā not returne from their wickednes. All these with their citesyns are vnto me, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE of hostes concernynge the prophetes: Beholde, I wil fede them with wormwod, and make them dryncke the water of gall. For frō the prophetes of Iersalem is the sicknes of Ypocrisie come in to all the londe.

And therefore the LORDE of hostes geueth you this warnynge: Heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and disceaue you: for they speake the meanyng of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the counceill of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marked his deuyce, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wetter of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the yngodly. And the wrath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he performe, and fulfill the thoughte of his herte. And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanyng.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saith the LORDE) and yet they rame. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. But yf they had continued in my counceill and herde my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginacions. Am I thē God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farr off? saith the LORDE. Maye eny man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saith the LORDE. Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saith the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, saye: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this cōtinue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sottyle of their owne herte? Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that euery one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, whē Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstonde my worde, let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saith the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, (saith the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpō the prophetes, that steale my worde priuely from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tunges to speake: The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saith y^e LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophecy lies, and disceaue my people with their vanities and miracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. But thus shall ye saye, euery one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? The xiiij. Chapter.

THE LORDE shewed me a visiō: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before y^e Tēple of the LORDE, ^a after y^e Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilō had led awaye captiue Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim kinge of Iuda, the mightie men also of Iuda, with the workemasters and cōnyng men of Ierusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good figes, euen like as those that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie figes,^b which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

B Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Jeremy? I sayde: figes, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eate them.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saie the LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good figes, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place in to the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne in to this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal returne vnto me with their whole herte.

^d And like as thou knowest the naughtie figes, which maye not be eatē, they are so euell: Euen so wil I (saie the LORDE) let Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, (ye and all his prynces, & the residue of Ierusalem that remaine ouer in this londe, & them also that dwell in Egipte) to be vexed & plagued in all kingdomes & londes. And will make them to be a reprofe, ^c a comon byworde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal seate them. I will sende the sward, honger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue clenē consumed them out of the londe, that I gaue vnto them & their fathers.

The xv. Chapter.

A SERMONE that was geuen vnto Jeremy, vpon all the people of Iuda: In the fourth yeare of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, that was, in the first yeare of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon. Which sermone, Jeremy the prophet made vnto all the people of Iuda, & to all y^e Inhabitours of Ierusalē, on this maner:

From the xiiij yeare of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, vnto this present daye, (that is euen xxij yeare) the worde of the LORDE hath bene committed vnto me. And so I haue spokē to you, I haue rysen vp early, I haue geuē you warnyng in season, but ye wolde not heare me. Though the LORDE hath sent his seruauantes, ^e all the prophetes vnto you in season: Yet wolde ye not obeye, ye wolde not encline your eares to heare.

He sayde: turne agayne euery man from his euell waye, ^f & from youre wicked ymaginations, & so shal ye dwell for euer in the londe, that the LORDE promised you & youre for fathers: And go not after straunge goddes, serue them not, worshippe them not, ⁊ angrē me not with the workes of youre hōdes: then will not I punysh you. Neuertheles, ye wolde not heare me (saieith the LORDE) but haue defied me with the workes of youre hōdes, to youre owne greate harme.

B Wherefore, thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes: Because ye haue not herkened vnto my worde, lo, I will sende out, ⁊ call for all the people, ŷ dwell in the north^a (saieith the LORDE) ⁊ wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauant, ⁊ wil bringe them vpon this londe, and vpon all ŷ dwell therein, ⁊ vpon all the people that are aboute them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wilderness, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Morouer, I will take from them the voyce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome ⁊ the bryde, the voyce of the anoynted, with the creszshettes: ⁊ this whole londe shal become a wildernes, ⁊ they shall serue the sayde people and the kinge of Babilon, thre score yeares and ten. ^aWhen the lxx yeares are expyred, I wil viset also the wickednesse of the kinge of Babilon ⁊ his people, saieith the LORDE: yee ⁊ the londe of the Caldees, ⁊ wil make it a perpetuall wildernes, ⁊ wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that londe, which I haue deuysed agaynst it: yee all that is written in this boke, which Jeremy hath prophecied of all people: so that they also shal be subdued vnto dyuerse nacions ⁊ greate kynges, for I wil recompense them, ^aacordinge to their dedes ⁊ workes of their owne hondes.

C For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: Take this wyne cuppe of indignacion from my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende the) for to drinke of it: that when they haue drunkē thereof, they maye be madd, ⁊ out of their wyttes, when the swearde commeth, that I wil sende amōge them. Then toke I the cuppe from the LORDES honde, ⁊ made all the people drynke there of, vnto whom the LORDE had sent me.

But first the cite of Ierusalem, ⁊ all the cities of Iuda, their kinges ⁊ prynces: to make thē desolate, waist, despysed ⁊ cursed, accordinge as it is come to passe this daye. Yee ⁊ Pharao ŷ kinge of Egypte, his seruauantes, his prynces ⁊ his people altogether one with another and all kinges of the londe of Hus, all kinges of the Philistynes londe, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron ⁊ the remnaunt of Aszdod, the Edomites, the Moabites ⁊ the Ammonites: all the kinges of Tirus ⁊ Sidon: the kinges of the Iles, that are beyonde the see: Dedan, Thema, Buz ⁊ the shauen Ismaelites: all the kinges of Araby, ⁊ (generally) all the kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kinges of Simri, all the kinges of Elam, all ŷ kinges of the Meedes, all kinges towarde the north (whether they be farre or nye) euery one with his neighbours: Yee and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the commaundement of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, spewe, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that thorow the swearde, which I wil sende amonge you. But yf they will not receaue the cuppe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hoostes threaten you: ^adrynke it ye shal, and that shortly. For I begyne to plage the cite, that my name is geuen vnto: thynke ye then, that I will leaue you vnpunished? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swearde vpō all the inhabitants of the earth, saieith the LORDE of hoostes.

Therefore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: The LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitacion. With a greate noyse shall he crie from his courte regali. He shal geue a greate voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounde thereof shalbe herde vnto the endes of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his courte of iustice with all flesh and punyshe the vngodly, saieith the LORDE.

^aFor thus sayeth ŷ LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, a miserable plage shall go from one people to another, and a greate stormy water shal arise from all the endes of the earth. And the same daye shall the LORDE him-

^a The shepherdes shall haue no waye to fle, and the rammes of the flocke shall not escape. Then shal the shepherdes crie horribly, and the rammes of the flocke shal mourne: for the LORDE shal consume their pasture, and their best feldes shal lie deed because of the horrible wrath of the LORDE. They shall forsake their foldes like as a lyon: For their londes shalbe waist, because of the wrath of the destroyer, and because of his fearfull indignacion.

The xvi. Chapter.

IN the begynnyng of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE: ^b Stonde in the courte of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Iuda) come to do worshipp in the LORDES house, all the wordes ^γ I commaunde thee to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, yf (perauenture) ^δ they will herke, and turme euery man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determind to bryng vpon them, because of their wicked inuencions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vp tynely, and still sendinge: Yf ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhorred of all the people of the earth. ^e And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Jeremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE: it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo? and this cite shalbe so waist, that no man shal dwell there in?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Jeremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Iuda herde of this rumoure, ⁊ they came soone out of the kings Palace in to the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LORDE. ^f Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers ⁊ to all the people, these wordes: ^g This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye youre selues haue herde with youre eares.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house ⁊ agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. ^h Therefore amende youre wayes, and youre adysemences, and be obedient vnto the voyce of the LORDE your God: so shal the LORDE repēt of the plage, ⁱ y he had deuysed agaynst you. Now as for me: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expediet and good. But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shal make youre selues, this cite ⁊ all the inhabitours there of, ^k giltie of innocent bloude. For this is of a treuth: that the LORDE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE our God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, ⁊ sayde thus vnto all the people: ^l Micheas the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: ^m Sion shalbe plowed like a felde, Ierusalē shalbe an heape of stones, ⁊ the hill of the LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wod. Dyd Ezechias ⁿ kinge of Iuda ⁊ the people of Iuda put him to deeth for this? No verely, but rather feared ^o the LORDE, ⁊ made their prairer vnto him. For the which cause also ^p the LORDE repented of the plage,

¶ he had deuyed agaynst them. Shulde we then do such a shamefull dede agaynst oure soules? There was a prophet also, that preached stiffly in the name of the LORDE, called Vrias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim: this mā preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lōde, accordinge to all as Ieremy saieth. ^a Now when Ioachim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herde his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. ^b When Vrias perceaued that, he was afrayed, & fled, & departed in to Egipte.

Then Ioachim the kinge sent seruauentes in to the lōde of Egipte, Namely: Elnathā the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men with him in to Egipte, which fetched Vrias out of Egipte, & brought him vnto kinge Ioachim that slewe him with the swerde, & cast his deed body in to y^e comō peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Ieremy, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slavne.

The xxvij. Chapter.

IN the begynnynge of the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kyng of Iuda, came this worde vnto Ieremy from the LORDE, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes τ chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende thē to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Amon, the kinge of Tyrus, & to the kinge of Sidon: & that by the messengers, which shal come to Ierusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saieth the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto youre masters: ^c I am he that made the earth, the men & y^e catell that are vpon the grounde, with my greate power & outstretched arme, & haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. ^d And now will I deluyuer all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruauent. The beestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruyce. And all people shal serue him, & his sonne, and his childes children, vntil the tyme of the same lōde be come also: Yee many people & greate kynges shal serue him.

Morouer, that people & kingdome which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that wil not put their neckes vnder y^e yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I viset with swerde, with hunger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hondes, saieth the LORDE. ^e And therefore, folowe not youre prophetes, soyshtsayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye vnto you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bringe you farre from youre londe, & that I might cast you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I wil let remayne still in their owne lōde (saieth the LORDE) & they shal occupie it, & dwell there in.

^f All these thynges tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and sayde: Put youre neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him & his people, that ye maye lyue. Why wilt thou and thy people perish with the swerde, with hunger, with pestilence: like as the LORDE hath deuyed for all people, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon? Therefore geue no eare vnto those prophetes (that tell you: Ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, ^g nether haue I sent them, saieth the LORDE: how be it they are bolde, falsely for prophecie in my name: that I might y^e sooner dryue you out, & that ye might perish with youre preachers.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saieth the LORDE: ^h Heare not the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shall shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophecie lies vnto you. Heare them not, but serue the kinge of Babilon, y^e ye maye lyue. Wherefore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be commytted vnto them, then let them praye the LORDE of hostes, that the remnaunt of the ornementes (which are in the house of the LORDE, and remayne yet in the house of the kinge of Iuda and at Ierusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the lauer, the seate and the residue of the ornementes that yet remayne in this cite, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon toke not, when he caried awaye Iechonias

Yee thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, as touchinge the residue of the ornamentes of the LORDES house, of the kinge of Iudaes house, and of Ierusalem: ^bThey shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there they shall remayne, vntil I vsyet them, saieith the LORDE. Then wil I bringe them hither agayne. ^cAnd this was done in the same yeare: euē in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda.

BUT in the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Hananias [¶] sonne of Assur the prophet of Gabaa, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes [¶] of all the people, [¶] and sayde: Thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I haue brokē the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare will ^dI bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, [¶] Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried away from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I will bringe agayne Iechonias the sonne of Ioachim the kinge of Iuda himself, with all the presoners of Iuda, ([¶] are caried vnto Babilon,) euē in to this place, saieith [¶] LORDE, for I wil breake [¶] yock of the kinge of Babilō.

Then the prophet Jeremy gaue answer vnto that prophet Hananias, before the prestes [¶] and before all the people that were present in the house of the LORDE. And the prophet Ieremy sayde: ^e Amen, the LORDE do that, [¶] and graunte the thinge, which thou hast prophesied: that he maye bringe agayne all the ornamentes of the LORDES house, [¶] and restore all the presoners from Babilon in to this place. Neuertheles, herken thou also, what I will saye, that thou [¶] and all the people maye heare: The prophetes that were before vs in tymes past, which prophesied of warre, or trouble, or pestilence, ether of peace, vpon many nations [¶] and greate kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had sende them in very dede) when the thinge came to passe, which that prophet tolde before.

^fAnd Hananias the prophet toke the chayne from the prophet Ieremias neck, [¶] and brake it: [¶] and with that sayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORDE spoken: Euen so will I breake the yock of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilō, from the neck of all nacions, yee [¶] and that within this two yeare. And so the prophet Ieremy wente his waye. C After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the prophet Ieremias neck, and broken it: The worde of the LORDE came vnto the prophet Ieremy sayenge: Go, and tell Hananias these wordes: Thus saieith the LORDE: Thou hast broken the chayne of wodd, but in steade of wodd, thou shalt make chaynes of yron. For thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye serue Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, yee [¶] and so shal they do. And I wil geue him [¶] bestes in the felde. [¶] Then sayde the prophet Ieremy vnto [¶] prophet Hananias: Hear me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORDE hath not sent the, but thou bringest this people in to a false beleue. And therefore thus saieith [¶] LORDE: beholde, I wil sende the out of the lōde, [¶] and within a yeare thou shalt die, because thou hast falsely spokē agaynst the LORDE. So Hananias the prophet died the same yeare in the seuenth Moneth.

you sonnes and daughters: proude wyues for youre sonnes, ⁊ huszbondes for youre daughters: that they maye get sonnes ⁊ doughters, and that ye maye multiplie there. Labour not to be fewe, but seke after peace ⁊ prosperite of the cite, where in ye be presoners, ⁊ praye vnto God for it. For in the peace there of, shal your peace be.

For thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Let not those prophetes and soythsaiers ŷ be amonge you, disceaue you: ⁊ beleue not youre owne dreames. For why, they preach you lies in my name, ⁊ I haue not sent them, saieith the LORDE. But thus saieith the LORDE: When ye haue fulfilled lxx yeares at Babilon, I wil bringe you home, and of myne owne goodnes I will carie you hither agayne vnto this place. For I knowe, what I haue deused for you, saieith the LORDE. My thoughtes are to geue you peace, ⁊ not trouble (which I geue you all redie) ⁊ that ye might haue hope agayne. Ye shall crie vnto me, ye shal go ⁊ call vpō me, ⁊ I shal heare you. Ye shal seke me, ⁊ fynde me: Yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, I will be founde of you (saieith the LORDE) and will deluyer you out of preson, ⁊ gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue scafed you, saieith the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you be caried awaye captiue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath rayseed you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the kinge that sytteth in the stole of Dauid, and all ŷ people that dwell in this cite, ⁊ youre brethren that are not gone with you in to captiuyte.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil sende a swerde, honger ⁊ pestilence vpon them, and wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eatē for bytternes. And I wil persecute them with the swerde, with honger ⁊ death.

I will deluyer them vp to be vexed of all kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, ⁊ put to confucion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scafed them: ⁊ that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saieith the LORDE) which I sent vnto them by my seruantes the prophetes. I stode vp early, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saieith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presoners, whom I sent from Ierusalē vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab ŷ sonne of Colaias, ⁊ of Sedechias the sonne of Maasia, which prophecie lies vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil deluyer them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slaye them before youre eyes. And all ŷ presoners of Iuda that are in Babilon, shal take vpō them this terme of cursinge, and saye: Now God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedechias ⁊ Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their neighbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, ⁊ assure, saieith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Ierusalem, ⁊ to Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest, yee and sent them to all the prestes: where in thou wrytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordered the to be prest in steade of Ioiada the prest, that thou shuldest be the chefe in the house of the LORDE aboute all prophetes, ⁊ preachers, ⁊ that thou mightest put them in preson, or in ŷ stockes. How happeneth it then, that thou hast not reprobud Ieremy of Anathot, which neuer leaueth of his prophecinge. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure captiuyte shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therein, ⁊ to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes therof. Which letre Sophonias the prest dyd rede, and let Ieremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge: Sende worde to all them that be in captiuyte, on this maner: Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge

The xxx. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes, that the LORDE ſhewed vnto Ieremy, ſaieinge: Thus ſaieth the LORDE God of Iſrael: ^aWryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue ſpoken vnto the, in a booke. For lo, the tyme cometh (ſaieth the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the preſoners of my people of Iſrael and Iuda, ſaieth the LORDE: For I will reſtore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they ſhall haue it in poſſeſſion.

Agayne, theſe wordes ſpake the LORDE, coeernynge Iſrael and Iuda: Thus ſaieth the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and diſquietneſſe. For what els doth this ſignifie, that I ſe? Namely, that all ſtronge men ſmyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauaile. Who euer ſawe a man trauaile with childe? ^b Enquere thereafter, ⁊ ſe. Yee all their faces are maruelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is ſo dredefull, that none maye be lickened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Iacobs trouble, from the which he ſhall yet be delyuered. For in that daye, ſaieth the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neck, ⁊ breake thy bondes. They ſhall nomore ſerue ſtraunge goddes vnder him, but they ſhall do ſeruyce vnto God their LORDE, and to Dauid their kinge, whom I will raiſe vp vnto them. And as for the, o my ſeruaunt Iacob, feare not (ſaieth ſ LORDÉ) and be not afrayed, o Iſrael. For lo, ^cI will helpe the alſo from farre, ⁊ thy ſede from the londe of their captiuyte.

And Iacob ſhall turne agayne, he ſhalbe in reſt, and haue a prosperous life, and no man ſhall make him afrayed. For I am with the, to helpe the, ſaieth the LORDE. And though I ſhal deſtroye all the people, amonge whom I haue ſcattered the, yet will I not deſtroye the, but correcke the, and that with diſcrecion. ^dFor I knowe, that thou art in no wiſe without faute. Therefore thus ſaieth ſ LORDE: I am ſory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to medle with thy cauſe, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy loners haue forgotten the, and care nothinge for the. For I haue geuen the a cruell ſtroke, and chateened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy myszdedes, ^efor thy ſynnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makeſt thou mone for thy harme? I my ſelf haue pite of thy ſorowe, but for the multitude of thy myszdedes and ſynnes, I haue done this vnto the.

^fAnd therefore all they that deuoure the, ſhalbe deuoured, and all thine enemies ſhal be led in to captiuyte. All they that make the waſt, ſhalbe waſted them ſelues: and all thoſe that robbe the, will I make alſo to be robbed. For I will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, ſaieth the LORDE: becauſe they reuyled the, as one caſt awaye and deſpised, o Sion.

^gFor thus ſaieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will ſet vp Iacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite ſhalbe buylded in hir olde eſtate, and the houſes ſhal haue their right foundation. And out of them ſhall go thankesgeynge, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they ſhall not myniſhe: I ſhall endue them with honoure, and no man ſhall ſubdue them. Their children ſhalbe as afore tyme, and their congregacion ſhal cōtinue in my ſight. And all thoſe that vexed them, will I viſet.

A captayne alſo ſhall come of them, ^hand a prynce ſhall ſpringe out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to myſelf, and he ſhall come vnto me. ⁱFor what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me? ſaieth the LORDE. ^jYe ſhalbe my people alſo, and I wilbe youre God. Beholde, on the other ſyde ſhall the wrath of the LORDE breake out as a ſtormy water, as a mightie whyrle wynde: and ſhal fall vpō the heades of the vngodly.

shall not leaue of, vntill he haue done, & performed the intent of his herte,^a which in the latter dayes ye shall vnderstonde. At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) shall I be the God of all the generacions of Israel, & they shall be my people.

The rrrr. Chapter.

THUS saith the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in \bar{y} wildernes from the swerde,^b founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shall the LORDE now also appeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I loue the with an euerlasting loue, therefore do I sprede my mercy before thee. I will repaie the agayne (o thou daughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, & go forth with them, that lede the daunce.

Thou shalt plante vynes agayne vpon \bar{y} hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shall plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon the mount of Ephraim shall crie: ^a Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God, for thus saith the LORDE: Reioyce with gladnes because of Iacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye: The LORDE shall deliuer his people, the remnaunt of Israel, & make them whole. Beholde, I will bringe them agayne from out of the north lode, and gather them from the endes of the worlde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greate with childe, and such as be also deliuered: and the company of them that come agayne, shall be greate.

They departed from hence in heynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne. I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not stamble: For I will be Israels father, and Epraim shall be my firstborne.^c

Heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye Gentiles) preach in the Iles, that lie farre of, and saye: he that hath seatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORDE shall redeme Iacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shall come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORDE shall geue them: Namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shall be as a well watred garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

Then shall the mayde reioyce in the daunce,^c yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shall be satisfied with good thinges, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: ^d The voyce of heynes, wepyng and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saith the LORDE: Ieaeue of from wepyng and crienge, witholde thyne eyes from teares, for thy labour shall be rewarded, saith the LORDE. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies: Yee euen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saith the LORDE) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Morouer I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captiue) complayne on this maner: O LORDE, thou hast correcte me,^e and thy chastenynge haue I receated, as a vntamed calfe. ^f Conuerte thou me, and I shall be conuerted, for thou art my LORDE God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall reforme my self: and when I vnderstonde, I shall smyte vpon my thee. For verely I haue comitted shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reprove and confucion.

Vpon this complaynte, I thought thus by my self: 'is not Ephraim my deare sonne? Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first comoned with him, I haue him euer in remembrance: therefore my very herte dryueth me vnto him: gladly and louyngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saith the LORDE. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (o thou daughter of Israel,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. How longe wilt thou go astrae, o thou shrëkinge daughter?

For the LORDE will worke a new thyng upon earth: A woman shall compasse a man.

For thus saieſt the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: It will come therto, that when I haue brought Iuda out of captiuyte, these wordes shalbe herde in ſy lond and in his cities: ^a The LORDE, which is the fayre brydegrome of rightuousnesse, make the frutefull, o thou holy hill: And there shall dwell Iuda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and huszbonde men: For I shall fede the hongrie soule,^b and refresh all faynte hertes. When I herde this, I came agayne to my self, and mused, like as I had bene waked out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saieſt the LORDE) the dayes come, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Iuda, with men and with catell. Yee it shall come therto,^c that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to rote them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chastē them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buylde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saieſt the LORDE.

^d Then shall it no more be sayde: ſy fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for euery one shall dye for his owne myszdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.

^e Beholde, the dayes come (saieſt the LORDE) ſy I will make a new couenaunt with ſy house of Israel and with ſy house of Iuda: not after the couenaunt that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the honde, and led them out of the londe of Egipte: which couenaunt they brake, wherfore I punyshed them sore, saieſt the LORDE: But this shall be the couenaunt that I will make with the house of Israel after those dayes,^f saieſt the LORDE: I will plante my lawe in the inwarde partes of them, and write it in their hertes, and wilbe their God, and they shalbe my people.

And from thēce forth shall no man teach his neyghboure or his brother, and saye: knowe the LORDE: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hiest, saieſt the LORDE. For I will forgeue their myszdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes eny more. ^g Thus saieſt the LORDE which gaue the sonne to be a light for the daye, and the Moone and starres to shyne in the night: which moueth the see, so that the floudes therof waxe fearece: his name is the LORDE of hoostes. Like as this ordinaunce shall neuer be taken out of my sight, saieſt the LORDE: So shall the sede of Israel neuer cease, but all waye be a people before me.

Morouer, thus saieſt the LORDE: like as the heauen aboue can not be measured, and as the foundations of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: ^h So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue commytted, saieſt the LORDE. Beholde, the daies come saieſt the LORDE, ſy the cite of ſy LORDE shalbe enlarged from the towre of Hananeel, vnto ſy gate of the corner wall. ⁱ From thence shall the right measure be taken before her vnto the hill toppe of Gareb, and shall come aboute Gaatha, and the whole valley of the deed carcasses, and of the ashes, ^k and all Seremoth, vnto the broke of Cedron: and from thence vnto the corner of the horsgate towarde ſy east, where as the Sanctuary of the LORDE also shall be set. And when it is now buylded, and set vp of this fashion it shall neuer be broken, ner cast downe eny more.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THESSE wordes spake the LORDE vnto ^l Jeremy, in the tenth yeaere of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, which was ſy xvij yeaere of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Ierusalem. But Jeremy the prophet laye bounde in ſy courte of the preson, which was in the kinge of Iudaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Iuda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this maner: ^m Thus saieſt the LORDE: Beholde, I will deluyer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shall take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, he shall not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saieith the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hōde to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prospere.

B And Ieremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme ſy londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: ^aFor by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the courte of the preson, (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anothot in the countre of Ben Iamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therefore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him there the moneye: euen seuen sycles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waightes. So I toke the eyduence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and redouer) and I gauē the eyduence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the eyduence, and before all the Iewes that were therby in the courte of the preson.

I charged Baruch also before them, saienge: The LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed eyduence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vnyardes shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

C Now when I had delyuered the eyduence vnto Baruch ſy sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORDE, sayenge: ^bO LORDE God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greate power and hie arme, and there is nothinge to harde for ſy. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, ^cthou recompēcest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the bosome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greate and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes: greate in councell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, ^dto rewarde euery one after his waye, and acordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greate tokens and wonders in the londe of Egipte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon those men: to make thy name greate, as it is come to passe this daye: ^eThou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, with tokens, with wondres, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greate terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lōde, that floweth with mylke and honye.

^fNow when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therefore come all these plages vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulworckes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swearde, with hunger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all things are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (o LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnessetherto: and yet in the meane season the cite is delyuered in to the power of the Caldees.

D Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I shal delyuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor^g the kinge of Babilon, they shall take it in: For the Caldees shall come, and wyne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlors they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offeringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

For seinge the children of Israel and the children of Iuda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, what haue they els done, but prouoked me with the workes of their owne hondes? saieith the LORDE.

Or, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre? Wherin I cast it out of my sight, because of the greate blasphemies of the childrē of Israel and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their prynces, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the cite-syns of Ierusalem.

When I stode vp early, and taught them and instructe them, they turned their backs to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be reformed and correcte. They haue set their goddes in y house,^b that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded hie places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and daughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda synne with soch abhominacion.

Morouer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concernynge this cite, which (as ye youre selues confesse) shalbe deliuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence. Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes wherin I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my fearfull and greate displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, where they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prosper. And I will set vp an euerlastinge couenauent with them, Namely: that I will neuer cease to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shall not runne awaye from me.

Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saieith the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greate plage vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shall haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hōdes of the Caldees: Yee londe shalbe bought for money, and euylcees made ther vpon and sealed before witnesses in the countrie of Ben lamin, and rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpo the mountaynes, and in them that lie beneth, yee and in the cities that are in the deserte. For I will bringe their presoners hither agayne, saieith the LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

MOROUER the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy on this maner, whē he was yett bounde in the courte of the preson: Thus saieith the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh, the LORDE which performeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herde the: I haue shewed greate and hie thinges, which were vnknowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to besege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcasses of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saieith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and treuth.

And I will returne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all myszedes (wherin they haue offended agaynst me) I will cōse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgeue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shall heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shall be afrayed and astonied at all the good dedes and benefites, that I will do for them. Morouer, thus saieith the LORDE: ° In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wilderness, wherin nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shall dwell there) Shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shall syng: (° Prayse the LORDE of hoostes, for he is louynge, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shall offre vp giftes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saith the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. It shall come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Iamin, in the feldes of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, ° the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil performe that good thinge, which I haue promised vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the branch of rightuousnes, and he shall do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. ¶ In those daies shall Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shall dwell safe, and he that shall call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: ¶ Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: ¶ nether shall the prestes and Leuites want one to offre all waye before me, burntofferings, to kyndle the meatofferings, ¶ to prepare the sacrifices.

¶ And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: ¶ Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season? Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruaunt, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. ¶ So shall also the prestes and Leuites neuer fayle, but serue me. ¶ For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the soude of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruaunt, and of the Leuites my ministers.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came to Ieremy, saience: Cōsidrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynredes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, ¶ those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, y they haue no hope to come together eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Yf I haue made no couenaunt with daye ¶ night, and geuē no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruaunt: so that I wil take no prynce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuyte, and be mercifull vnto them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

THESE are the wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, ¶ all his hoostes (out of all the kingdomes y were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Ierusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Go, ¶ speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, ¶ tell him: ¶ The LORDE sendeth the this worde: Beholde, I will deluyer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye presoner, and deluyered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swerde, but shalt die in peace. Like as thy fore fathers, ¶ the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, ¶ in the mournynge they shal saye: oh Iorde. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORDE.

Then spake Ieremy the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Ierusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste beseged Ierusalem, and the remnaunt of the cities: Namely, Lachis ¶ Azecha, ¶ which

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Ierusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a libertie: ^a so that euery man shulde let fre go his seruaunt and handmayde, Hebrue & Hebruesse, & no Lewe to holde his brother as a bonde man. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruauntes and handmaydens, whom they had letten go fre, and so made them bonde agayne.

C For the which cause the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy from the LORDE himself, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with youre fathers, when I brought them out of Egipte, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: ^b When seuen yeares are out, euery man shal let go fre his bought seruaunte an Hebrue, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But youre fathers obeyed me not & herkened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in ^y ye proclaimed, euery mā to let his neighbour go fre, & in ^y ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned youre selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, ^y euery man hath requyred his seruaunt and hand mayden agayne, whom ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be youre bonde men. And therefore thus saith the LORDE: Ye haue not obeyed me, euery man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neighbour: wherfore, I will call you vnto a fredome, saith the LORDE: euen vnto the swearde, to the pestilence, and to hunger, and will make you to be plaged in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Yee those men that haue brokē my couenaunt, and not kepte the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: ^c when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof: The prynces of Iuda, the prynces of Ierusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which wēt thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the hondes of them that folowe vpon their luyes.

^d And their deed bodies shall be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his prynces, I will deluyer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that desyre to slaye them, and in to the honde of the kyng of Babylons hooste, ^e which now is departed from you: But thorow my commaundement (saith the LORDE) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shall fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Morouer I will laye the cities of Iuda so waist, that no man shall dwell therein.

The xxxv. Chapter.

THE wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, (in the reigne of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda) are these: ^f Go vnto ^y house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bringe thē to ^y house of the LORDE in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Iasania the sonne of Jeremy, the sonne of Habazania, and his brethrē and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynces, that is aboute the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the treasury. And before the sonnes of the kyured of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, For Ionadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and youre sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne, ^g buylde no houses, sowe no sede, plante no vynes, yee ye shall haue no vynyardes: but for all youre tyme ye shall dwell in tētes, ^h ye maye lyeue lōge in the lōde, wherin ye be straingers.

Thus haue we obeyed the cōmaudemēt of Ionadab ^y sonne of Rechab oure father, in all ^y he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyeue longe: we, oure wyues, oure sonnes & oure daughters. Nether buylde we eny house to dwell therein, we haue also amouge vs nether vynyardes, ner corne lōde to sowe : but we dwell in tentes, we obeye, ⁊ do accordinge vnto all, that Ionadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now ŷ Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilō came vp in to the lōde, we sayde : come, let vs go to Ierusalē, ŷ we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ad the Assiriās : ⁊ so we dwell now at Ierusalē. Then came ŷ worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayenge : Thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel : Go ⁊ tell whole Iuda ⁊ all the inhabitours of Ierusalē : Wyl ye not be reformed, to obeye my wordes? saieith the LORDE. The wordes which Ionadab the sonne off Rechab cōmaunded his sonnes, ŷ they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast ⁊ surely kepte : for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne : but obeye their fathers cōmaundement.

¶ But as for me,^a I haue stōde vp early, I haue spokē vnto you, ⁊ geuen you earnest warnyng : ⁊ yet haue ye not bene obedict vnto me. Yee I haue sent my seruātes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vp early, ⁊ sent you worde, sayenge : O turne you, euery man from his wicked waye : amēde youre lyues, ⁊ go not after strāge goddes, to worshippe the : ŷ ye maye cōtinue in the lōde, which I haue geuen vnto you and youre fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childrē of Ionadab Rachabs sonne haue stedfastly kepte their fathers cōmaundement, ŷ he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therefore thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes ŷ God of Israel : Beholde, I wil bringe vpō Iuda ⁊ vpō euery one ŷ dwelleth in Ierusalē, all the trouble ŷ I haue deused agaynst thē. ^b For I haue spokē vnto thē, but they wolde not folowe : I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answer. Ieremy also spake vnto the housholde off the Rechabites : Thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel : For so much as ye haue obeyed ŷ cōmaundemēt of Ionadab youre father, ⁊ kepte all his preceptes, ⁊ done accordinge vnto all ŷ he hath bydden you : Therefore thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel : Ionadab the sonne of Rechab shal not fayle, but haue one out of his stocke, to stōde allway before me.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

IN the fourth yeare of Ioachim the sonne ^A of Iosias kyng of Iuda, came ŷ worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy, sayēge : Take a boke, ⁊ ^a write therein all ŷ wordes, ŷ I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Iuda ⁊ to all the people, frō the tyme ŷ I begāne for to speake vnto the (in ŷ reigne of Iosias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda heareth of the plage, which I haue deused for thē, they maye peradventure turne, euery man frō his wicked waye, that I maye forgeue their offenses and synnes.

Then dyd Ieremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, ⁊ Baruch wrote in the boke at ŷ mouth of Ieremy, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken vnto him. And Ieremy commaunded Baruch sayenge : I am in prison, so that I maye not come in to the house of ŷ LORDE : therefore go thou thither, ⁊ rede the boke, that thou hast writē at my mouth : Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, ⁊ rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fastinge daye : that the people, whole Iuda, ^B ⁊ all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peradventure they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, euery one from his wicked waye. For greater is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, accordinge vnto all that Ieremy the prophet cōmaunded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the boke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the fyfth yeare off Ioachim ŷ sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda, in the ix. moneth ^c when it was commaunded, that all the people of Ierusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Iuda vnto Ierusalem.

Then red Baruch the wordes of Ieremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of ŷ treasury of ^d Gamarias the sonne off Saphan the serybe, which is besyde the hyer lofte off the new dore of the LORDES house : that all ŷ people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne of Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of ŷ boke, he wēte downe to the kinges palace in to ŷ srybes chābre, for there all ſ̄ prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnathā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hananias, with all the princes. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, ſ̄ he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent Iehudi ſ̄ sonne of Nathanias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke ſ̄ boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Syt downe, and rede the boke, ſ̄ we maye heare also. So Baruch red, ſ̄ they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abaszhd one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how didest thou wryte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Ieremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the boke in the chambre off Elisama the scribe, ad tolde the kyng all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kyng sent Iehudi to fetch him ſ̄ boke, which he brought out of Elisama ſ̄ scribes chambre. And Iehudi red it, that the kyng and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kyng sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Iehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof,^a he cut the boke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpo the herth, vntil the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kyng himselfe, ner his seruantes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ad Gamarias, besoughte the kinge, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstandinge ſ̄ kyng wolde not heare them, but commaunded Ieremyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia ſ̄ sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Ieremy the prophet: but the LORDE kepte them out of sight. After now that the kyng had brente the boke, ad ſ̄ sermōs which Baruch wrote at ſ̄ mouth off Ieremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Ieremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first boke, which Ioaichin the kyng off Iuda hath brente.

And tell Ioaichin the kyng off Iuda, Thus saieih the LORDE: thou hast brente ſ̄ boke, and thoughttest within thy self: Why hast thou wrytten therein, that the kyng off Babilon shal come, & make this lōde waist? so that he shall make both people and catel to be out of it? Therefore thus the LORDE saieih, of Ioaichin the kyng of Iuda: There shal none of his generacion syt vpon the trone of Dauid. His deed corse shalbe cast out,^c that the heat off the daye, and the frost of the night maye come vpon him: And I will vsyet the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruantes. Morouer all the euell that I haue promised thē (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon ſ̄ inhabitours of Ierusalem, and vpon all Iuda. Then toke Ieremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therein out of the mouth off Ieremy: all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Ioaichin the kyng off Iuda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

SEDECHIAS ſ̄ sonne of Iosias (^a which was made kyng thorow Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon) reigned in the londe of Iuda, in the steade off Iechonias the sonne of Ioaichin. But nether he, ner his seruantes, ner the people in the lōde wolde obeye the wordes of ſ̄ LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Ieremy. Neuertheles Sedechias the kyng sent Iuchal the sonne of Selamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest to the prophet Ieremy, sayenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Ieremy walked fre amonge the people at that tyme, and was not put in prison as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egipte: which when the Caldees that beseged Ierusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ieremy the prophet, sayēge: Thus saieih the ſ̄ LORDE God of Israel. This answere shal ye geue to the kynge of Iuda, that sent you vnto me for counceill: Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, & fight agaynst this cite, wynde it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saieih the LORDE: disceane not your owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs: No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was brokē vp from Ierusalē for feare of the Egiptians armye, Ieremy went out of Ierusalē towards the lōde of Ben Iamin, to do certayne busynesse there amōge ſ̄ people.

And whē he came vnder Ben Iamyns Porte, there was a porter called Ierias the sonne of Selamia^d ſ̄ zōne of Hananias, which fell vpō him & toke him, sayēge: thy mynde is to runne to the Caldees. Then sayde Ieremy: It is nōt so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Ierias wolde not beleue him, but brought Ieremy boūde before the princes. Wherefore the princes were angrie with Ieremy, causinge him to be beaten, & to be layed in prison in the house of Ionathas the scribe. For he was the ruler of the prison. Thus was Ieremy put in to the dongeon & prison, and so laye there a longe tyme. Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, & called him, & axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynesse (that now is in honde) cōmeth of the LORDE? Ieremy answerde: yee ſ̄ it doth: & thou (sayde he) shalt be delyuered in to the kynge of Babilō power.

Morouer, Ieremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What haue I offended agaynst ſ̄, agaynst thy seruaites, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in prison? Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophecied vnto you and sayde, that ſ̄ kynge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you & this lōde? And therefore heare now, o my lorde the kynge: let my prayer be accepte before the, & sende me nomore in to ſ̄ house of Ionathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sedechias the kynge commaunded to put Ieremy in the fore entrie off the prison, and dayly to be geuen him a cake of bred, and els no dighte meate, vntill all the bred in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Ieremy remayned in ſ̄ fore entrie off the prison.

The xxxiiiij. Chapter.

SAPHATIAS the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Iuchal the sonne of Selamia, & Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, ſ̄ Ieremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saieih the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swearde, with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shall escape, wyynnynge his soule for a pray, & shal lyue. For thus saieih the LORDE: This cite (no doute) must be delyuered in to ſ̄ power of the kīge of Babilō, & he also shal wynde it. Thē sayde the prynces vnto ſ̄ kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to death, For thus he discourageth the hōdes of the soudyers ſ̄ be in this cite, & the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto thē. This mā verely laboureth not for peace of ſ̄ people, but mischeffe. Sedechias the kīge answered and sayde: lo, he is in youre hōdes, for ſ̄ kīge maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Ieremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entrie off the prison. And they let downe Ieremy with coardes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Ieremy stack fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Morian beyng a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Ieremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kynge (which thē sat vnder the porte off Ben Iamin) these wordes: My lorde the kynge, where as these men medle with Ieremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in prison, there to dye of hunger, for there is no more bred in the cite. Thē the kynge commaūded Abdemelech the Morian, and sayde: Take from hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, & drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men with him. ⁊ went to ſ house of Amalech, ⁊ there vnder an almyer he gat olde ragges ⁊ worne cloutes. ⁊ let thē downe by a coarde, in to the dongeon to Ieremy.

And Abdemelech the Morian sayde vnto the prophet Ieremy: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte thē and the coardes: ad Ieremy dyd so. So they drewe vp Ieremy with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remainyd in the fore entrie of the prison. Thē Sedechias the kyng sent and caused Ieremy the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE.^a And the kyng sayde vnto Ieremy: I wil axe the somewhat, but hyde nothinge fro me. Thē Ieremy answerde Sedechias: Yf I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death: yf I geue the coicell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kyng swore an ooth secretly vnto Ieremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE Iyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Ieremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saieih ſ LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Yf case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kyng off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kyng off Babilons prynces, then shalt this cite be deluyered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shal set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Ieremy: I am afrayde for the Iewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Ieremy answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseke ſ) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this plainely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kyng of Iudaes house, shal go out to the kyng of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, ſ thou art disceaused: and that ſ men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy fete fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be ſ kyng of Babilons prisoner, ⁊ this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Ieremy: loke ſ no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceauce, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what sayde the kyng to the? hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde ſ kyng to the? Se thou geue them this answer: I haue humbly besought the kyng, that he will let me lye no more in Ionathas house, that I dye not there? Then came all the prynces vnto Ieremy, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kyng bad him.^c Then they helde their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Ieremy abode still in the fore entrie off the prison, vntill the daye that Ierusalem was wonne.

The xxxiv. Chapter.

NOW when the cite off Ierusalē was taken^d (for in the ix. yeare of Sedechias kyng of Iuda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Ierusalem. And in the xi. yeare of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth ſ ix. daye of ſ Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kyng of Babilons prynces came in, ⁊ sat thē downe vnder the porte: Nergall, Sarezzer, Samgarnebo, Sarsechim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarezzer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kyng of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kyng of Iuda with his soudyers sawe them, they fled, and departed out of ſ cite by night thorow the kynges gardē, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Iericho, and brought him prisoner to Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilō vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iudgment vpon him. So the kyng of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Iuda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and boude him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees brēt vp the kynges palace, ^awith \hat{y} other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Ierusalem. As for the remnant of the people that were in the cite, and such as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the comē sorte) Nabuzaradan the chefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lōde off Iuda, and gaue them vnynyardes and corne feldes at the same tyme. Nabuchodonosor also the kyng of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne a charge, cōcernyng Ieremy, sayenge: take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but in-treate him after his owne desyre.

C So Nabuzaradā \hat{y} chefe captayne, Nabuzaszbā the chefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarezet the treasurer and all the kynges of Babilons lordes, ^bsent for Ieremy, τ caused him be fet out off the fore entrie off the preson, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. ^cNow whyle Ieremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie of the preson, \hat{y} worde off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Morian: Thus saiethe the LORDE off hoostes \hat{y} God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue deuysed for this cite, will I bryng vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil delyuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the bondes off those men, whom thou fearest. For doutles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swerde: but thy life shalbe sauēd, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saiethe the LORDE.

The xl. Chapter.

A THIS is the maner, how the LORDE in-treated Ieremy, when Nebuzaradan the ^dchefe captayne had let him go fre from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the presoners, that were caried from Ierusalem and Iuda vnto Babilon. The chefe captayne called for Ieremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spake mightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and performed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therefore commeth this plage vpon you. Beholde, I lowse the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vp thē: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: ^eloke where thou thinkest conueniēt τ good for the to Abyde, there dwell. Yf thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne with Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, (whom the kyng of Babilō hath made gouernoure ouer \hat{y} cities of Iuda, τ dwell with him amonge the people, or remayne, where so euer it pleaseth \hat{y} . So the chefe captayne gaue him his xpēs with a rewarde, τ let him go. ^fThen wēt Ieremy vnto Godolias \hat{y} sonne of Ahicā to Masphat, τ dwelt there with him amonge the people that were left in the londe.

Now when \hat{y} captaynes of the hooste of Iuda (which with their felowes were scatted abrode on euery syde in \hat{y} lōde) vnderstode, \hat{y} the kyng of Babilō had made Godolias \hat{y} sonne of Ahicā gouernoure in the lōde, τ \hat{y} man, wife τ childe, yee τ the poore men in the londe (\hat{y} were not led captiue to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Iurisdiction: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Ismael the sonne of Nathania, Iohāna τ Ionathas the sonnes of Carea, Sareas the sonne of Tanhōmeth, the sonnes of Opheus \hat{y} Netophetite, Iesania \hat{y} sonne of Machati, with their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne off Saphā, swore vnto thē τ their felowes on this maner: ^gBe not afrayed to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde, τ do the kyng of Babilon seruyce, so shal ye prospere. Beholde, I dwell at Masphat to be an officer in the Caldees behalfe, τ to satisfie such as come to vs. Therefore gather you wyne, corne and oyle, and kepe them in youre ware houses, and dwell in youre cities, that ye haue in keepinge.

couñrees, whē they herde, ⁊ the kinge of Babilō had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, gouernoure vpō thē ⁊ were left in Iuda: All the Iewes (I saye) returned out off all places where they were fled vnto: ⁊ came in to the lōde of Iuda to Godolias vnto Masphat, ⁊ gathered wyne and other frutes, and that very moch.

D Morouer Iohanna the sonne of Carea ⁊ all ⁊ captaynes of ⁊ hooste, ⁊ were scatred on euery syde in the londe, came to Godolias in Masphat, ⁊ sayde vnto him: knowest thou not ⁊ Baalis kinge of ⁊ Ammonites hath sent Ismael ⁊ sonne of Nathania, to slaye the? But Godolias ⁊ sonne of Ahicā beleued thē not. Thē sayde Iohāna the sonne of Carea vnto Godolias in Masphat these wordes secretly: Let me go (I praye the) ⁊ I will slaye Ismael the sonne of Nathania, so ⁊ no body shal knowe it. Wherefore will he kyll the, ⁊ all the Iewes which resorte vnto the, might be scatred, ⁊ the remnaunt in Iuda perishe? Thē sayde Godolias the sonne of Ahicā to Iohanna the sonne of Carea: Thou shalt not do it, for they are but lies, that men saye of Ismael.

The xli. Chapter.

BUT in the seuenth Moneth it happened, ⁊ Ismael the sonne of Nathania ⁊ sonne of Elisama (one of ⁊ kynges bloude) came with thē that were greatest aboute the kyng, ⁊ ten men that were sworne with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicā to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael ⁊ sonne of Nathania with those ten men that were sworne to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne of Saphan with the sward, ⁊ slewe hym, whom the kyng off Babilō had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Iewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

B The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vnknowne) there came certayne men from Siche, frō Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdes, rent their clothes, ⁊ were all heuye, bringinge meat offrings and incense in their hondes, to offre it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathania went forth of Masphat wepinge, to mete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go your waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicā. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathania (with them that were sworne vnto him) slewe them, euē at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, ⁊ sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared thē, and slewe them not with their brethren. Now the pyt wherin Ismael dyd cast the deed bodies off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kyng Asa caused to be made, ⁊ for feare off Baasa the kyng off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the rēnaunt off the people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, vpon whom Nabusaradan the chefe Captayne had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicā gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathania caried them awaye proneser towarde the Ammonites. But when Iohāna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, ⁊ herde off all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathania had done: they toke their companyons, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sōne of Nathania, and founde him by the waters of Rabin in Gabaon. Now when all the people, whom Ismael led captiue, sawe Iohāna ⁊ sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Ismael had caried awaye frō Masphat, were brought agayne.

And whē they returned, they came to Iohanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathania fled from Iohāna with eight of his sworne companyons, ⁊ wente to the Ammonites. Then Iohanna the sonne of Carea and all the captaynes of the hooste that were with him, toke the remnaūt of the people, whom Ismael the sonne of Nathania had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne of Ahicā) whom they also had rescued from him: fightinge men, women ⁊ children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and wente from thence, and sat them downe at Geruth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethleē, that they might go in to Egipte for feare of the Caldees: of whom they were afrayed, because that Ismael the somme off Nathanas had slayne Godolias Ahicams somme, whom the kynge off Babilon had made gouernoure in the londe.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO all the rulers, and Iohāna the sonne off Carea, Iesanas the sonne off Osias came with all the people frō the leest vnto the most, and sayde vnto Jeremy the prophet: ^aO heare oure petiō, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE thy God, and for the remnant, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, and tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Jeremy the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto God youre LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and loke what answer the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothinge back frō you. ^cAnd they sayde vnto Jeremy: The LORDE off treuth and faithfulness be oure recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commaundeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We wil herken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende the: that we maye prospere, when we haue folowed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

33 And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Jeremy. Then called he Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the people that were with him: Yee and all the people from the leest to the most, and sayde vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to laye forth youre prayers before him: Yf ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall buyde you vp, and not breake you downe: I shall plante you, and not rote you out: for I am pacified, as eōcernynge the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deluyer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I wil haue mercy vpon you, and brynge you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Neuertheles, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre honger, there will we dwell. Wherefore heare now the worde of the LORDE, o ye remnaunt of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: ^cYf ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, and to be there as straungers: the swearde that ye feare, shall ouer take you in Egipte: and the honger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vndertake to go in to Egipte, there to ease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with honger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plage, that I wil bringe vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitants of Ierusalē, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: For there ye shalbe reuyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbyddeth you (o ye remnaunt of Iuda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye els shal ye begyle youre selues. ^dFor ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and loke what answer the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, and we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. ^eYf ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shall perishe with the swearde, with honger and pestilence: euen in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

The xliij. Chapter.

NOW when Jeremy had ended all ^fwordes of the LORDE God vnto the people, (for their sakes to whom God had sent him) Asarias the sonne of Osias, and Iohāna the sonne of Carea, with all the proude personnes, sayde vnto Jeremy: Thou lyst, the LORDE oure God hath not sent yf to speake vnto vs, that we shulde not go in to Egipte, and dwell

there: But Baruch the sonne of Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs. that he might bringe vs in to the captiuyte off the Caldees: that they might slave vs, and carie vs away pre-soners vnto Babilon

So Iohanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement of the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Iuda: But Iohanna the sonne of Carea ⁊ all the captaynes of the hooste, caried away all the remnaunt in Iuda, that were come together agayne from the Heithen (amōge whom they had bene scatred)^a to dwell in the londe of Iuda: Men, women, childrē, the kynges doughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne of Alicam. They caried away also the prophet Jeremy, Baruch the sonne of Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement of God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

33 And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take greate stones in thine hōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men of Iuda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saieith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: ^b Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon my seruauant, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall sprede his tente ouer them.

And when he commeth, he shal smyte the lōde of Egipte with slaughter, with preson-ment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples of the Egiptiaīs goddes, and burne them vp, ⁊ take them selues presoners.
Morouer he shall araye himself with the lōde of Egipte, like as a shepherde putteth on his cote, and shall departe away from thence in peace. The pilers also of the temple of the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the tempels of the Egiptians
goddes.

The xliiij. Chapter.

34 THIS is the worde ⁊ was shewed to Jeremy cōcerninge all ⁊ lewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis, at Memphis, ⁊ in the londe of Patures. Thus saieith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye

^a Iere. 41. c.^b Iere. 46. c.^c Iere. 25. a. 29. c.

haue sene all ⁊ mysery, ⁊ I haue brought vpon Ierusalem, and vpon all the cities of Iuda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwelling therein: ⁊ ⁊ because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger: In that they wente
backe to do sacrifice ād worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner youre fathers haue knowne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruauētes all the prophetes: ^d I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them
warninge: O do no soch abhominable thinges, ⁊ thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herkē, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge
goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion ⁊ wrath was kyn-dled, and it brente vp the cities of Iuda, the feldes with the stretes off Ierusalem: so that they were made waist and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saieith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greate euell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroie the men and women, childrē and babes of Iuda? so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: whē ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the londe off Egipte, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might vterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all nacions. Or, haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off youre forefathers, the wickednes off ⁊ kynges of Iuda and their wyues, ⁊ wickednes that ye youre selues ād youre wyues haue done in the londe of Iuda, in the cite and in the londe off Ierusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not,
nether walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue geuē vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therefore thus saieith the LORDE off hoostes
the God off Israel: ^e I am stedfastly advyced and determed, to punysh you, and to rote out all Iuda. ^f As for the remnaunt off Iuda that purposly wente in to Egipte, there to ease them off their mysery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In ⁊ londe of Egipte shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swearde and with hunger. For from ⁊ leest vnto ⁊ most, they shal perishe with the

swearde and with honger. Morouer they shalbe reuyled, abhorred, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egipte, ^aas I haue visited Ierusalem: with the swearde, with honger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Iuda, which are gone to dwell in Egipte, shall be left to come agayne in to y^e londe off Iuda: all though they thyne to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shal come agayne, but such as are fled awaye.

C Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, τ a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egipte in the cite of Patures, answerde Jeremy, τ sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so euer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heauen: ^blike as we and oure forefathers, oure kynges and oure heades haue done in the cities off Iuda, and in the stretes and feldes of Ierusalem. For then had we plenteousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no mysfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, ^cwe haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perish with the swearde and honger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heauē, did we make her cakes ad poure vnto her drinkofferings, to do her seruyce, without oure huszbondes wylles?

D Then sayde Jeremy vnto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the folke, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, youre forefathers, ^dyoure kiges τ rulers (with all the people) haue offred in the cities of Iuda, in the stretes and londe off Ierusalem? and hath he not considered this in his mynde? In so moch, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abhominable thynges which ye dyd? ^eIs not youre londe desolate τ voyde, yee and abhorred, so that no mā dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe this daye?

^fDyd not all this happen vnto you, because ye made soch sacrifice, and synned agaynst the LORDE? Ye haue not followed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.^g

Yee this is the cause, that all mysfortune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe this daye.

Morouer, Jeremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Iuda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and youre wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yee thus haue ye sayde: ^hWe will not fayle, but do the thyng that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynkofferings to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, τ hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne intente. And therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Iuda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, ⁱI haue sworne by my greate name (saieyth the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorow eny mans mouth of Iuda, in all the londe of Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plage them, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Iuda that be in the lode of Egipte, ^jshal perish with the swearde and with hōger, vntill they be vtterly destroyed.

Neuertheles, those that fled awaye for y^e swearde, shal come agayne in to the lode of Iuda (but there shal be very fewe of them) And all the remnaunt off Iuda, that are gone in to Egipte, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shalbe founde true: theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil viset you in this place (saieyth the LORDE) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil performe my purpose vpon you, to punysh you. Beholde (saieyth the LORDE) I wil delyuer Pharao Ophram kyng of Egipte in to the hondes of his enemies, y^e seke after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kyng of Iuda ^kin to the hondes of Nabuchodonosor kige of Babilo, which sought after his life.

of Nerias, "after that he had written these Sermōs in to a booke at the mouth of Jeremy, In the fourth yere of Ioachim the sonne of Iosias kynge of Iuda.

Thus saieih the LORDE God of Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORDE hath geuen me payne for my trauayle: I haue weeried my self with sighinge, and shall I fynde no rest? Therfore tell him (O Jeremy) ³ the LORDE saieih thus: Beholde, The thinge that I haue buylde, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole londe. And sekest thou yet promociō? Loke not for it, and desyre it not. For I will bringe a miserable plage vpō all flesh, saieih the LORDE. ⁴ But thy life will I geue the for a pray, where so euer thou goest.

The xlvi. Chapter.

² HERE folowe the wordes off the LORDE vnto the prophet Jeremy, which he spake vnto the Gentiles. These wordes folowinge preached he to the Egipcias concernyng the hoost off Phrao Necho kynge off Egipte, when he was in Charcamis besyde the water off Euphrates: what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon slewe him, In the fourth yere off Ioachim the sonne off Iosias kynge off Iuda.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afrayed? why shrēcke ye backe? wherefore are you worthies slayne? Yee they runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon euerychone off them, saieih the LORDE. The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye, and the worthies shall not escape.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couer the earth: we wil destroye ⁵ cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to horse backe, roll forth ⁵ Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with your buclers, ye Libeans with your bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORDE God of hoostes, a daye of vègeaunce, that he maye avege him of his enemies. The swearde shal deuoure, it shal be satisfied and bated in their bloude: For the LORDE God off hoostes shall haue a slayneoffringe towarde the North, by the water of Euphrates. Go vp (o Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the daughter off Egipte:

But in vayne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The Heithen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shalbe full of thy confucion: for one stronge man shall stomble vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

These are the wordes that the LORDE ⁶ spake to the prophet Jeremy, "concernyng ⁵ hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon, which was to destroye the londe off Egipte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egipte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stonde still, make the redie, for the swearde shal consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie worthies are fallen? why stode they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greate, for one fell euer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne people, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swerdes of oure enemye.

Crie euen there: O Phrao kynge of Egipte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. ⁷ As truly as I lye (saieih the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as ⁵ mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it stode in the see. O thou daughter of Egipte, make redy thy geer to flyt. For Memphis shalbe voyde and desolate, so that nomā shal dwell therein. ⁸ The londe of Egipte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forwarde. Hir wagied souldyers that be with her, are like fat calves.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come with axes, as it were hewers downe of wod. And they shall cut downe hir wod (saie the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shall be mo in nôbre then the greshoppers, so that no man shalbe able to tell thē. The daughter of Egipte shalbe confounded, whē she shalbe deluyered in to the hondes off the people off the north.

¶ Morouer thus saie the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vsyet that restlesse people off Alexandria, Pharao and Egipte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharao, and all them y^e litten vnto him. ^aYee I will deluyere them in to the hondes off those, that seke after their lyues: Namely, in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon, and in to the power off his seruautes. ^bAnd after all these things, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saie the LORDE.

^cBut be not thou afrayed (o my seruaunt Iacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I wil helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuyte. Iacob also shall come agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. ^dFeare thou not (o Iacob my seruaunt) saie the LORDE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the. Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcke the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as one that were faultlesse.

The xlviij. Chapter.

¶ THESSE are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet agaynst the Phylistines, before that Pharao smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saie the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate floude, runnyng ouer and couerynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampynge off their stronge barded horses, at the shakynge off their charettes, and at the romblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to destroye the whole londe off the Phylistynes. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be deuyded frō the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swearde off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to thy sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it cease, when the LORDE himself hath geuen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and rayسد it vp agaynst the cities off the see coast?

The xlviij. Chapter.

THUS saie the LORDE off hoostes ^e God of Israel against Moab: ^fWo be to y^e cite of Nebo, for it shal be layed waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee thy strōge cite of Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afrayed: Moab shall nomore be had in honoure: Wicked counsell shalbe taken vpon Hesebon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yee that they maye nomore be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shall persecute y^e. A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greate waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities. At the goinge vp vnto Lubith there shall arise a lamētacion: and downe towarde Horonaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues t^e be like vnto the heeth in y^e wildernes. ^gFor, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye in to captiuyte.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the feldes shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

Make a token vnto Moab, that she get hir awaye spedely: for hir cities shalbe made so desolate, that no man shall dwell therein.

Moab hath euer bene rich and carlesse from hir youth vp. she hath sytten and takē hir ease with hir treasure. She was neuer yet put out off one vessell in to another (ŷ is) she neuer wente awaye in to captuyte, therfore hir taist remayneth, and hir sauoure is not yet chaunged.

But lo, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her vp. to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankerdes rattell, and shake to τ fro. And Moab shalbe ashamed off Chamos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherin she put hir trust.

¶ Wherefore do ye thinke thus: we are mightie, and stronge men off warre?^b Moab shal be destroyed, and hir cities brente vp: hir chosen yonge men shall be slayne, saieth the kinge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes. The destruction off Moab commeth on a pace, and hir fall is at honde.

All hir neghbours shall mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou daughter Dibō, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shall come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to ŷ strete, τ loke aboute the: axe them that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thyng is happened? O, Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And mysery shall come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpō holon, and Jaza: vpon Mephat and Dibō, vpon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim, vpon Cariatharim and Bethgamul, vpon Bethmaon and Carioth, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

¶ The horne of Moab shal be smyttē downe, τ hir arme broken, saieth the LORDE. Make hir dronken (for she magnified hir self aboue the LORDE:) that men maye clappe their hondes at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israel, shalt thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is taken anōge theues? ^cYee because off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be dryuen awaye. Ye Moabites shal leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like doutes, that make their nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hie mynded. ^dI knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arrogācy and the pryde off hir stomack, saieth the LORDE. For hir furiousnes maye nether vpholde hir with strength, ner dede. Therfore shal there mournynge be made for Moab, and euery mā shal crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall. So will I mourne for the also (o Iazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne braūches shal come ouer ŷ see, and the braunches off Iazer but vnto the see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy haruest and grape gatheringe. Myrth and cheare shalbe taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to crie vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from hesebon to Eleale and Ioaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off thre yere olde. The waters also off Neumrim shalbe dried vp.

Morouer I will make Moab cease (saieth the LORDE) from the offerings and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherefore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my herte mourneth also,^e euen as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shauen, and all beered clipped off: all hondes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Vpō all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shalbe mournynge: For I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessell saieth the LORDE. O how fearfull is she? O how mourneth she? O how doth Moab hange downe hir heade, and is ashamed? Thus shall Moab be a laughinge stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

And Moab shalbe made so desolate, that she shal nomore be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Feare, pyt, and snare shal come vpon the (o Moab) saieþ the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shal be taken in the snare."

For I will bringe a yeaere off visitacion vpon Moab, saieþ the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, ⁊ shall burne vp that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnnes and doughters shall be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiue agayne, saieþ the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The xliij. Chapter.

AS concerninge the Ammonites, thus the LORDE saieþ: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heyre? Why hath youre kynge then taken Gad in? wherfore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme commeth (saieþ the LORDE) that I will bringe a noyse off warre in to Rabath off the Ammonites. Lahel shalbe desolate, and hir cities brent vp: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saieþ the LORDE. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shal be rote out off the grounde, saieþ the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall erie out, and gyrd them selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shall be led awaye prisoner: yee his preestes and prynces with him.

Wherfore trustest thou in the water streames, that flowe to and fro, o thou fearece doughter: and thykest thou art so safe (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shal come to the?

Beholde, I will bringe a feare vpon the, saieþ the LORDE God off hoostes, from all those that be aboute the: so that ye shall be seated euery man from another, and no mā shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiue agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hoostes spoken on this maner: "Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned clene to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backes, crepe downe in to the depe, O ye citesyns off Dedan.

For I will bringe destructiō vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. Yff the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? Yff the night robbers came vpon the, shulde they not take so moch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discouer his secretes, so that he shal not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neighbours, ad he himself shall not be left behynde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behynde the, and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shall take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmete to drinke of the cuppe, haue dronken with the first: and thykest thou then to be fre?

No, no: thou shalt nether be quyte nor fre, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my self (saieþ the LORDE) that Bosra shall become a wyldernes, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursynge: and hir cities shalbe a continuall deserte.

For I am perfectly informed of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Heithen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: "I will make the but small amonge the Heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Idumea shall be a wilderness: "who so goeth by it, shalbe abashed, and wondre at all hir miserable plages. Like as Sodom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpsyde downe (saieþ f̄ LORDE) so shal no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shal haue his habitation there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cōmeth vp from the pleasaunt meadowes of Ethā, so wil I dryue him, and make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordene therto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that will stryue with me? What shepherde maye stonde in my hondes?

Therefore heare the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath taken vpon Idumea: and his purpose, that he hath deuysed vpon the citesyns of Theman: The leest of the flocke shal teare them in peces, and loke what fayre thyng they haue, they shal make it waist, and themselves also. At the noyse of their fall f̄ earth shal quake, the crie of their voyce shalbe herde vnto the reed see. Damascus shalbe sore afrayde, and shal fle, tremblinge shal come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shal ouer take her as a woman trauelinge of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? Heare therefore: hir yonge men shal fall in the stretes, and all hir men of warre shal be takē away in that tyme, saieþ the LORDE of hoostes. I will kyndle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shal cōsume the palace of Benadad.

As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Hasor, whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vp vnto Cedar, and destroye the people towarde the easte. Their tentes and their flockes shal they take awaye, yee their hanginges and their vessel. Their Camels also shal they carie awaye with them. They shall come aboute them on euery syde with a fearful crie.

Arise, and get you vp agaynst yonder rich and carelesse people (saieþ the LORDE) which haue nether gates nor dore barres, and that dwell not together. Their Camels shalbe stollen, and the droues of their catell dryuen awaye.

Morouer, these that be shauen wil I scatre towarde all the wyndes, and bringe them to destruction: Yee and that throw their owne familiars, saieþ the LORDE. Hasor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an euerlastinge wilderness: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitation.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnyng of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda. Thus saieþ the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bringe the foure wyndes from f̄yore quarters of heauen, and wil scatre them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shal be no people, but some of Elam shal fle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be afrayed of their enemies, and of them that seke their lyues: and wil bringe vpon them the indignacion of my wrath, saieþ the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kinge and f̄ prynces from thence, saieþ the LORDE. But in processe of tyme, I wil bringe Elam out of captiuyte agayne, saieþ the LORDE.

The 1. Chapter.

THE wordes f̄ the LORDE spake vnto the prophet Jeremy, concernynge Babilon, and the londe of the Caldees: Preach amonge the Gentiles, let youre voyce be herde, make a tokē: crie out, kepe no sylence, but saye: Babilon shal be wonne, Bel shalbe cōfounded, and Merodach shalbe ouercome.

Yee their goddes shal be brought to shame, and their ymagess shal stonde in feare. For out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir londe so waist, that no body shal dwell therein: nether man ner beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes τ at that tyme (saieyth the LORDE) ^a the childre of Israel shall come, they τ the children of Iuda, weping τ makinge haist, τ shal seke the LORDE their God. They shall axe the waye to Sion, thither shall they turne their faces, τ come, and hange vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shal be broken.

^b My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes have disceaued them, τ haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, τ forgotten their folde. All they \dot{y} came vpon them, haue deuoured thē: τ their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeasid the LORDE, yee euen the LORDE which is the bewtie of their rightuousnes, τ \dot{y} defended their fathers. Yet shal ye fle from Babilon, τ departe out of \dot{y} londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. ^c For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from \dot{y} northern londe, τ bringe them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, τ wyne it: Their arrowes shal not mysse, like as a connynge archer shuteth not wronge. And the Caldees shalbe spoyled, τ all they that spoyle them, shalbe satisfied, saieyth the LORDE: ^d because ye were so chearfull τ glad, to trade downe myne heretage, τ fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calues in the grasse: and triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shalbe sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nacions, voyde, waist, τ dried vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of \dot{y} LORDE, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, ^e shall stonde still, τ be abashed, τ shal wondre at all hir plages.

^f Go forth in youre araye agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all ye that can handle bowes: shute at her, spare no arrowes, for she hath synned agaynst the LORDE. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her rounde aboute: she shal yelde her selfe, her foundaciōs shal fall, τ hir walles shall come downe, for it shalbe the vengeance of the LORDE. ^g Yee vengeance shalbe taken of her, τ as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, τ him \dot{y} handleth the sickle in harvest. For feare of the swearde of the enemye, euery man shall get him to his owne people, τ euery man shal fle to his owne londe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. ^h First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon hath brused all their bones.

Therefore thus saieyth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will viset the kinge of Babilon τ his kingdome, ⁱ as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bringe Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Charmel τ Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim τ Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saieyth the LORDE) ^j yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: Yf men enquire for the synne of Iuda, there shal be none: for I wil be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne ouer.

Go downe (o thou avenger) in to the enemies londe, τ viset them that dwell therin: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saieyth the LORDE: do accordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter τ greate murthur, namely on this maner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken τ brused in sonder? How chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wildernes amonge the Heithen on this maner? I my self haue layed wayte for the, τ thou art taken: vnawarres art thou trapped τ snared: for why, thou hast prouoked \dot{y} LORDE vnto anger: The LORDE hath opened his house of ordinance, τ brought forth the weapens of his wrath. For the thinge that is done in the londe of the Caldees, it is the LORDE of hoostes worke.

These thinges shal come vpon her at the last, they shal breake in to hir prey chābres, they shall leaue her as bare as stones, that be layed together vpon heapes. They shall so destroye her, \dot{y} nothinge shal be left. They shal slaye all hir mightie souldyers, and put them to death. Wo be vnto thē, for the daye ⁊ tyme of their visitacion is at honde. Me-

 agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, pynch youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. ^aRecompence her, as she hath deserued: and acordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORDE, agaynst ^ȝ holy one of Israel. Therefore shal hir yonge men fall downe in the stretes, ⁊ all hir men of warre shal be roted out in ^ȝ daye, saiieth the LORDE. Beholde, I speake vnto of hostes: for thy daye shal come, euē the tyme of thy visitaciō. And the proude shal stombe ⁊ fall, ⁊ no man shal helpe him vp.

 I wil burne vp his cities with fyre, ⁊ it shal

^f Thus saiieth the LORDE of hostes: The children of Israel ⁊ Iuda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuyte, kepe them fast, ⁊ wil not let them go: but their avcger ⁊ redemer is mightie, whose name is the LORDE of hostes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the londe shake, ⁊ iudge them that dwell therein, one with another.
 The swearde shall come vpon the Caldees (saiieth the LORDE) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, ⁊ vpon their wyse mē: The swearde vpon their soithsayers, (as for those, they shall become fooles.) The swearde vpon their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, ⁊ vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder thē: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stollen awaye:
^o The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shalbe dried vp: For the londe worshippeth ymagēs, ⁊ delyteth in straunge wondrefull thinges. Therefore shal wilde beestes, Apes ⁊ Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, nether shal eny man haue his habitacion there for euer more. ^b Like as God destroyed Sodom ⁊ Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saiieth the

LORDE: So shal noman dwell there also, nether shal eny mā haue there his habitacion.
 Beholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, ⁊ many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes ⁊ buclers, cruell are they ⁊ vmercifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, ⁊ come weapened to fight agaynst the: o Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his hondes shal waxe feable: Sorowe and heynes shall come vpon him, as a woman trauefinge with childe. Beholde, ^c like as the Lyon commeth vp from the pleasaunt medowes of Iordane vnto the grene pastures of Ethan, so wil I dryue thē forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, ⁊ ordene to soch thinge? For who is like me, or who wil stryue with me? or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me? Therefore heare the council that the LORDE hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the deuyce that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The leest amonge the people shal teare them in peces, ⁊ loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue:
 they shal laye it waist. The noyse at ^ȝ wyn-nyngē of Babilon shal moue the earth, ⁊ the crie shalbe herde amonge the Gētiles.

C Make sharpe the arowes, and fyll the quyvers: for the LORDE shall rayse vp the sprete of the kyng of the Meedes, which hath already a desyre to destroye Babilon. This shalbe the vengeance of the LORDES, and the vengeance of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babilon, make youre watch stronge, set youre watchmen in araye, yee holde preuye watches: τ yet for all that shall the LORDE go forth with the deuce, which he hath taken vpon them that dwell in Babilon.

O thou that dwellest by the greete waters, o thou that hast so greete treasure and riches, thyne ende is come: τ the rekenyng of thy wynnynges. ^d The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne by himself, that he wil ouerwhelme the with men like greshoppers in nombre, which with a corage shall crie Alarum Alarum agaynst the. ^e Yee euen the LORDE of hoostes, that with his power made the earth, with his wiszdome prepayred y rounde worlde, τ with his discrecion spred out the heauens. As soone as he letteth his voyce be herde, the waters in the ayre waxe feare: ^f He draweth vp the cloudes from the endes of the earth. He turneth y lightenynge to rayne, he bringeth the wyndes out of their secrete places. By the reason of wyszdome, all men are become fooles. ^g Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for y thinge that they make, is but disceate, τ hath no breath. Wayne is it, τ worthy to be laughed at: τ in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Iacob is none soch: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the rodde of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, τ yet thorow the I haue scatred the nacions τ kyngdomes: Thorow the haue I scatred horse τ horse man, yee the charettes, τ soch as sat vpon them: Thorow the I haue scatred man τ woman, olde and yonge, bachelor τ mayden. Thorow the I haue scatred the shepherde τ his flocke, the husband man τ his catell, the prynces τ the rulers. Therefore wil I rewarde the cite of Babilon τ all hir citesyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noysome hill) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my honde ouer the, τ cast the downe from the stony rockes: τ wil make the a brente hill, so that nether corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shalbe taken eny more out of the, but waist τ desolate shalt thou lie for euermore, saith the LORDE.

Set vp a tokē in the londe: blowe the trompettes amonge the Heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her. call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Menni τ Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greete a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them y people of the Meedes with their kynges, prynces τ all their chefe rulers, yee and the whole loude that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake τ be afrayed, when the deuce of the LORDE shall come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waist, that no mā shal dwell eny more therin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, τ kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shalbe like women. Their dwellinge places shal be brent vp, their barres shalbe broken. One purseuaunt shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kinge of Babilon tydinges: that his cite is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupyde, the fennes brent vp, and the souldyers sore afrayed.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: The daughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a threszshing floore, but shortly shal hir harness come. Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. He swalowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicates: he hath cast me out, he hath takē my substauce awaye, ⁊ the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saieith the daughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee ⁊ my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saieith Ierusalem. Therefore thus saieith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, ⁊ auenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, ⁊ drye vp hir water sprynges.

“Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwellinge place for dragons, a fearfulness ⁊ wondringe, because no man dwelleth there. They shall roare together like Lyons, ⁊ as the yonge Lyons when they be angrie, so shal they bēde them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before thē, ⁊ they shalbe droncken for ioye: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, ⁊ neuer wake, saieith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers ⁊ gootes. O, how was Sesah wonne? O, how was the glory of y whole londe taken? how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondrous at amonge the Heithē? The see is rysen ouer Babilon, ⁊ hath couered her with his greate wawes. Hir cities are layed waist, the londe lieth vnbylded and voyde: it is a londe where no man dwelleth, ⁊ where no mā traueleth thorow. Morouer, I wil vsyet Bel at Babilō: ⁊ the thinge that he hath swalowed vp, that same shal I plucke out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shall runne nomore vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

“O my people, come out of Babilon, that euery man maye saue his life, from the fearfull wrath of the LORDE. Be not faynte herted, ⁊ feare not at euery rumoure that shalbe herde in the londe: for euery yere bringeth new tydings, yee straunge wickednes and lordshipe. And lo, the tyme commeth that I wil vsyet the ymages of Babilō, and the whole londe shalbe confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. Heauen and earth with all that is therein, shall reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saieith y LORDE.

slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the swearde, haist you, stōde not still, remembre the LORDE afarre of: and thinke vpon Ierusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were couered with shame, because the straunge aleauntes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherefore beholde (saieith the LORDE) the tyme commeth, that I wil vsyet the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lōde they shal mourne and fall. “Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heaūē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saieith the LORDE.

A piteous crie shall be herde from Babilon, and a greate mysery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryneth out the hie stomach ⁊ proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the wawes of greate water floudes, and made greate crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shall come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to auenge him self vpon them, ⁊ sufficiently to recompence thē. Yee (saieith the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chefe rulers ⁊ all their worthies, dronckē: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saieith the kinge, whose name is y LORDE of hoostes.

Morouer, thus saieith the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shalbe brente vp. And the thinge that the Gētiles and the people haue wrought with greate traouayle and labour, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

This is the charge that Ieremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Maasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, in the fourth yere of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable prynce. Ieremy wrote in a boke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be written agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this

Thus farre are ^ŷ preachings of Jeremy.

The liij. Chapter.

SEDECHIAS was xxj. yeaere olde, when he was made kynge. ^b⁊ he raigned xj. yeaere in Ierusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Ieremies daughter of Lobna. He lyued wickedly before the LORDE enen as Ioachim dyd. Wherefore the LORDE was angrie at Ierusalem ⁊ Iuda, so longe till he had cast thē out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kynge of Babilon. ^cBut in ^ŷix. yeaere of his raigne, In the tēth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon with all his hooste came before Ierusalem, ⁊ beseged it, ⁊ made them bulworkes rounde aboute it. And this beseginge of the cite endured vnto the xj. yeaere of kynge Sedechias.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix daye of the Moneth, there was so greate hongre in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. ^dSo all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now ^ŷCaldees had cōpassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wilderness.

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kinge in the felde of Iericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kynge awaye prisoner to Reblatha, vnto the kinge of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, ^ewhere he gaue iudgment vpon him.

The kinge of Babilō also caused Sedechias sonnes be slayne before his face, yee ⁊ put all the prynces of Iuda to death at Reblatha. Morouer he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be caried vnto Babilon: ⁊ let him lie in preson, till he dyed.

Now ^ŷtenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xix yeaere of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne and the kinge of Babilons seruauantes came vnto Ierusalem, ⁊ brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kynges palace, all the houses ⁊ all the gorgeous buyldinges in Ierusalē. And the whole hoost of the Caldees ^ŷwere with the chefe captayne, brake downe all the walles of Ierusalem rounde aboute.

As for the poore people ⁊ soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kinge of Babilon, yee ⁊ what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caried them awaye prisoners. But ^ŷpoore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chefe captayne leaue in the londe, to occupie the vnyardes ⁊ feldes. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of ^ŷLORDE: ⁊ caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, sprinklers, spones ⁊ all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, sprinklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chefe captayne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes ^ŷstode vnder ^ŷseate, ^fwhich kinge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: ⁊ all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, ⁊ the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, ⁊ foure fingers thick and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, ⁊ euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: ⁊ vpon the knoppes were whopes, ⁊ pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasse.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundreth and xcvi, which hanged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chefe captayne also toke Sarias ^ŷhie prest, ⁊ Sophonias that was chefe next him, and the three keepers of the treasury. He toke out of the cite a chamberlayne which was a captayne of the souldyers, ⁊ seuen men that were the kinges seruantes, which were founde in the cite: ⁊ Sepher a captayne that vsed to muster the men of warre: with lx men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chefe captayne toke, ⁊ caried them to the kinge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kinge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the londe of Hemath. And thus Iuda was ledde away captiue, out of his owne londe.

This is the summe of the people, whom Nabuchodonosor ledde away captiue.

¶ In the seuenth yeare of his reigne, he caried away of ʒ Iewes, thre thousande thre and twenty. In the xvij yeare Nabuchodonosor caried away from Ierusalem eight hunderth and xxxij personnes. In the xxij yeare of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chefe captayne, toke away seuen hundreth xlv Iewes presoners. The whole summe of all the presoners, is foure thousande and sex hundreth.

¶ In the xxxvij yeare after that Ioachim the kinge of Iuda was caried away in the xxv daye of the xij Moneth, Euilmerodach kinge of Babilon (the same yeare ʒ he reigned) gaue Ioachim the kinge of Iuda his pardon, and let him out of preson, and spake louyngly to him: And set his trone aboue ʒ trones of the other kinges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the clothes of his preson, yee and he att with him all his life longe. And he had a cōtinuall luyngye geuen him of the kinge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge alowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

The ende of the prophet Jeremy.

The Lamentacions of Jeremy.

AND it came to passe (after Israel was brought in to captiuite, and Ierusalem destroyed:) that Ieremy the prophet sat wepinge, mournyng and makinge his mone in Ierusalem: so that with an heuy herte he sighed, ⁊ sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

¶ ALAS, how sitteth the cite so desolate, ʒ some tyme was full of people? how is she become like a wedowe, which was the lady of all nacions? How is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londes?

* 2 Re. 4. b. 4 Re. 15. a.

She wepeth sore in the night, so that ʒ teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her eny comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre her, ⁊ are become hir enemies.

Iuda is taken presoner, because she was defyled: ⁊ for seruyng so many strange goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the Heithen. She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man commeth more to the solempne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heuynesse.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, ⁊ haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: hir children are ledde away captiue before their enemye.

All the bewtie of the daughter of Sion is awaye, hir prynces are become like wethers, that fynde no pasture. They are dryuē awaye before their enemye, so that they haue no more power.

Now doth Ierusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery ⁊ disobedience, yee the ioye ⁊ pleasure y she hath had in tymes past: seyng her people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemye, ⁊ there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stōde lokinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Ierusalem synned euer more ⁊ more, therefore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylthinesse. Yee she sigheth, and is ashamed of herselfe.

Hir skyrtes are defyled, she remēbred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. O LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemye hath the vpper honde.

The enemye hath put his honde to all the precious things that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the Heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (neuertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregacion.

All hir people seke their bred with heuynes, ⁊ loke what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wher with the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The yocke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath delyuered me in to those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myselfe.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mightie men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best mē. The LORDE hath troden downe the daughter of Iuda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gusseh out of water: for the cōforter that shulde quycken me, is farre fro me. My children are dryuen awaye, for why? the enemye hath gotten the ouer honde.

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Iacob, and Ierusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue provoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considre my heuynes: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuyte.

I called for my louers (but they begyled me:) for my prestes and counclers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Considre (O LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth aboute in me, and I am full of heuynes. The swearde hurteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt bryng forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The ij. Chapter.

ALAS, how hath y LORDE darekened the daughter of Sion, so sore in his wrath? As for the honoure of Israel, he hath casten it downe from heauen: How happeneth it, that he remembred not his owne fote stole, when he was angrie?

2 The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Iacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the daughter Iuda hath he broken in his wrath, & throwne them downe to the grounde: hir kyngdome & hir prynces hath he suspended.

3 In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the horne of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enimie: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Iacob, & hath consuned vp all rounde aboute.

7 He hath bent his bowe like an enimie, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and euery thinge that was pleasait to se, he hath smyten it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the daughter Zion.

7 The LORDE is become, like as it were an enimie, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the daughter of Iuda with moch sorow and heuynesse.

13 Hir tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solēpne feastes hath he put downe. The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solemne feastes and Sabbathes in Zion, are clene forgottē. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kyng & prestes to be despised.

13 The LORDE hath forsaken his owne aulter, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enimie. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solemne feast daye.

7 The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the daughter Zion, he spred out his lyne, & drewe not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therefore mourne the turrets and the broken walles together.

13 Hir portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smyten in sonder: hir kyng & prynces are caried awaye to the Gētiles.^b They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

13 The Senatours of the daughter Zion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strowed aszshes vpon their heades, and gyrded them selues with sack cloth. The maydens of Ierusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

13 Myne eyes begynne to fayle me thorow

wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leuer is poured vpon the earth, for the greate hurte of my people, seyng the children and babes dyd swowne in the stretes of the cite.

Even when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and some dyed in their mothers bosome.

What shal I saye of the (O thou daughter Ierusalem) to whom shall I lickē the? To whom shal I cōpare the (o thou daughter Zion) to comforte the withall? Thy hurte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

Thy prophetes haue loked out vayne & folish thinges for the,^d they haue not shewed the of thy wickednesse, to kepe the from captiuyte: but haue ouerladen the, and thorow falsede scated the abrode.

All they that go by the, clappe their hondes at the: hissing and wagginge their heades vpon the daughter Ierusalem, and saye: is this the cite that men call so fayre, wherin the whole londe reioyseth?

All thine enemies gape vpon the, whisperinge and bytinge their teth, sayenge: let vs denoure, for the tyme that we loked for, is come: we haue founde and sene it.

The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge, that he was purposed to do: and performed that he had deuysed longe agoo: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused thine aduersary to tryumphe ouer the, and set vp the horne of thine enimie.

Let thine hert crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the daughter Zion: let thy teares rüne downe like a ryuer daye & night: rest not, & let not the aple of thine eye leaue of.

Stonde vp, and make thy prayer in the first watch of the night, poure out thine hert like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine hondes, for the lyues of thy yonge children, that dye of hunger in the stretes.

The iij. Chapter.

I AM the mā, that (thorow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiēce of misery.

He droue me forth, and led me: yee in to darknesse, but not in to light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, ⁊ layeth it euer vpon me.

My flesh ⁊ my skynne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brusced.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, ⁊ closed me in with gall and tranayle.

He hath set me in darknesse, as they that be deed for euer.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, ⁊ hath layed heuy lynckes vpon me.

Though I crie ⁊ call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stopped vp my wayes with foure squared stones, ⁊ made my pathes croked.

He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and brokē me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyuer hath he shot, euen in to my reynes.

I am laughed to scorne of all my people, they make songes vpon me all y daye lōge.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, ⁊ geuen me wormwod to drynke.

He hath smytten my teth in peces, ⁊ rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope for me in the LORDE.

O remembre yet my misery and my trouble, the wormwod and the gall.

Yee thou shalt remēbre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whyle I cōsider these thinges in my hert, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, ⁊ that his louynge kyndnesse ceaseth not.

His faithfulness is greate, and renneth itself as the mornynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saieth my soule) therfore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto thē, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seketh after him?

O how good is it with stilnesse to wate and tarie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with reproues.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for euer.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to y multitude of his mercies) he receaueth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, ⁊ cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To moue the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saieth: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES cōmandement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherfore then murmureth the luyinge man? let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs loke well vpon oure owne waies, ⁊ remembre oure selues, and turue agayne to y LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hondes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers ⁊ haue offended, wilt thou therfore not be intreated?

Thou hast couered vs in thy wrath, ⁊ persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the Heithen.

U All oure enemies gape vpon vs.

U Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee despitte and destruction.

U Whole ryuers of water guszhe out of myne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.

D Myne eyes runne, and can not cease, for there is no rest.

D O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe frō heauen, and consider?

D Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the daughters of my cite.

S Myne enemies hunted me out sharply like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.

S They haue put downe my life in to a pitte, and layed a stone vpon me.

S They poured water vpon my heade, then thought I: now am I vndone.

P I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.

P Thou hast herde my voyce, ⁊ hast not turned away thine eares from my sighinge and crienge.

P Thou hast enclnyed thy self vnto me, whē I called vpon the, ⁊ haist sayde: feare not.

I Thou (O LORDE) hast mayntened the cause of my soule, and hast redemed my life.

I O LORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.

I Thou hast well considred how they go aboute to do me harme, ⁊ that all their counceles are agaynst me.

W Thou hast herde their despytefull wordes (O LORDE) yee and all their ymaginacions agaynst me.

W The lippes of myne enemies, ⁊ their deuyces that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.

W Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their rysinge vp, they make their songes of nothings but of me.

T Rewarde them (O LORDE) acordinge to the workes of their hondes.

T Geue them ſ̄ things, that their owne herte is afrayed of: euen thy curse.

T Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy indignacion, ⁊ rote them out from vnder the heauen.

The iiii. Chapter.

Q HOW is the golde become so dymme? How is the goodly coloure of it so sore changed? and the stones of ſ̄ Sanctuary thus scatred in the corner of euery strete?

The children of Sion that were all waye in honoure, ⁊ clothed with ſ̄ most precious golde: how are they now become like the erthen vessels which be made with the potters honde?

The Lamyēs geue their yonge ones suck with bare brestes: but the daughter of my people is cruel, and dwelleth in the wylder-nesse: like the Estriches.

The tonges of the suckinge children, cleue to ſ̄ rofe of their mouthes for very thirst. The yonge children axe bred, but there is noman, that geueth it them.

They that were wonte to fayre delicately, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moch of donge.

The synne of the daughter of my people is become greater, then ſ̄ wickednesse of Sodome, that sodclly was destroyed,^c and not taken with hondes.

Hir absteyners (or Nazarees) were whyter then ſ̄ snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.

But now their faces are very black:^d In so moch, that thou shuldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones, It is wythered, and become like a drye stock.

They that be slayne with the swearde, are happier, then soch as dye of hunger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the frutes of the felde.

The womē (which of nature are pitefull) haue sodden their owne children^e with their hondes: that they might be their meate, in ſ̄ miserable destruction of the daughter of my people.

The LORDE hath performed his heuy wrath:^d he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundacions therof.

Nether the kinges of the earth, ner all ſ̄ inhabitants of the world, wolde haue beleued, that the enemy ⁊ aduersary shulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Ierusalē.

Which neuertheles is come to passe for ſ̄ synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocentes bloude within her.

So that these blynde men wēte stomblinge in the stretes, and stayned them selues with bloude, which els wolde touche no bloudy cloth.

D But they cried vnto euery mā: fle the staynynge, awaye, get you hēce, touch it not. Yee (sayde they) ye must be brent, ye must dwell amonge the Gentiles, ⁊ byde no longer here.

Y The countenance of the LORDE hath banyshed them, ⁊ shal neuer loke more vpon them: For they them selues nether regarded the prestes, nor pitied their elders.

D Wherefore yet oure eyes fayle vs, whyle we loke for vayne helpe: syngge we be euer waitynge vpon a people, that can do vs no good.

Y They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we can not go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.

P Oure persecuters are swifter then the Aegles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in ȳ wilderness.

Y The very breth of oure mouth: euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe takē in oure synnes, of whom we saye: Vnder his shadowe we shalbe preserued amonge the Heithen.

W And thou (O daughter Edom) that dwellest in the londe of Hus, be glad and reioyce: for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be dronckē.

T Thy synne is wel punished (O thou doughter Sion) he shall not suffre the to be caried awaye eny more. But thy wickednesse (O daughter Edom) shall he vyset, and for thy synnes sake, he shal lede the in to captiuyte.

The v. Chapter.

A CALL to remēbraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure enheritaunce is turned to the straungers, ⁊ oure houses to the aleauntes. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure neckes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.

Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bred ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, ⁊ we must beare their wickednesse. Seruantes haue the rule of vs, and no man delyuereth vs out of their hōdes. We must get oure luyngge with the parrell of oure lyues, because of the drouth of the wilderness.

Oure skynne is as it had bene brent in an ouen, for very sore longer. The wyues are rauished in Sion, ⁊ the maydens in the cities of Iuda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vse no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

Therefore oure hert is full of heynesse, ⁊ oure eyes dymme: because of ȳ hill of Sion that is destroyed, In so moch, that the foxes runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that remainest for euermore, and thy seate worlde with out ende: Wherefore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE: Turne thou vs vnto the, ⁊ so shal we be turned. Renue oure daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and bene sore displeasid at vs.

The Prophet Baruch.

What Baruch conteyneth.

Chap. I.

Baruch readeth the boke before the kynge and all the people, which sende money to Ierusalem.

Chap. II.

They knowlege, that they haue deserued punyshment : God promyseth them forgeuenesse.

Chap. III.

They praye hartely beinge in preson, and he exorteth them to amende.

Chap. IIII.

A sermon to the people, with an exortacion to pacience.

Chap. V.

He conforteth them, and sheweth the vocacion of the Heithen.

Chap. VI.

A copie of the epistole, that Ieremy sent to the Iewes, which were led awaye presoners vnto Babilon.

THESSE are the wordes of the boke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fifth yeare the seuēth daye of the moneth: " what tyme as the Caldees wanne Ierusalem and brent it.

The first Chapter.

AND Baruch dyd rede the wordes of Ioachim kynge of Iuda might heare : and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke : yee and before all the noble kinges sonnes, before ŷ lordes of the councell and elders : and before the whole people, from ŷ lowest vnto the hiest : before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by ŷ water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

They made a colleccion also of money, acordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Ierusalem vnto Ioachim the sonne of Helchia the sonne of Salon prest, with ŷ other prestes : and to all the people which were with him at Ierusalē, what tyme as they had gotten the ornaments of the temple of ŷ LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might brynge them agayne in to the londe of Iuda, the x. daye of the moneth Sibān :

namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Iosias kinge of Iuda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had takē Iechonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captiue from Ierusalem vnto Babilon.

And they sayde : " Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burntofferings and incense withall : make you vneleuednged and offer for synne vpon the alter of the LORDE oure God. " And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne : ŷ their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen : that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes : that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne : that we maye longe do them seruyce, and fynde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be reheared in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hie dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

Thus shal ye saye : " The LORDE oure God is righteous, but we are worthy of cōfucion and shame : like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Iuda, ⁊ to euery one ŷ dwelleth at Ierusalem: to oure kinges, prynces, prestes, prophetes ⁊ to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egipte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a mysbeleuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto ŷ LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues vnterly, and shrenckinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

¶ Wherefore there are come vpon vs greate plagis ⁊ dyuere curses,^a like as the LORDE deuysed by Moses his seruaut: which brought oure forefathers out of the löde of Egipte, to geue vs a löde, that floweth with mylke and hony, like as it is to se this daye. Neuertheles, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man folowed his owne mynde and wicked ymaginacion: to offre vnto straunge goddes, and to do euell in the sight of the LORDE oure God.

The ij. Chapter.

¶ FOR the which cause the LORDE oure God hath performed his deuycē,^b wherof he certified vs, and oure heades that ruled in Ierusalē: yee and oure kynges, oure princes, with all Israel and Iuda. And soch plagis hath ŷ LORDE brought vpō vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauē: like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, accordinge as it is written in the lawe of Moses: 'that a man shulde eate ŷ flesh of his owne somme, ⁊ the flesh of his owne daughter. Morouer, he hath deliyuered them in to the hondes of all the kinges, ŷ are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) ⁊ scatred thē abrode in all londes ⁊ naciōs. Thus are we brought beneth ⁊ not aboue, for we haue synned against the LORDE oure God, ⁊ not bene obedient vnto his voyce. ^dTherefore ŷ LORDE oure God is righteous, ⁊ we with oure fathers (as reason is) are brought to opē shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plagis ŷ are come vpon vs allready, ŷ LORDE had deuyced thē for vs: yet wolde we not praye vnto ŷ LORDE oure God, ŷ we might euery mā turne frō his vngodly wayes. So ŷ LORDE hath caused soch plagis to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath comaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner herkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in ŷ commaundementes of ŷ LORDE, ŷ he had geuē vnto vs.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou 'that hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egipte with a mightie houde, with tokens and wōdres, with thy greate power ād outstretched arme: and hast gotten thy self a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE oure God, ^fwe haue synned, we haue done wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy rightuousneses. ^gTurne thy wrath frō vs (we beseke the) for we are but a few left amonge the Heithen, where thou hast scatred vs. Heare oure prayers (o LORDE) ⁊ oure peticiōs, ^ebringe vs out of captiuyte, for thine owne sake: get vs faouore in the sight of thē, which haue led vs awaye: ŷ all lödes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE oure God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

^hO LORDE, loke downe frō thy holy house vpon vs: enclyne thine eare, ⁊ heare vs. For the deed, ŷ be gone downe to their graues, ⁊ whose soules are out of their bodies, ⁱascribe vnto the LORDE nether praye ner rightuousmakyng: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuely and weakely, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule ascribeth praye and rightuousnesse vnto the LORDE. ^jO LORDE, we poure out oure prayes before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE oure God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath ⁊ indignacion vpon vs: accordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruauētes the prophetes, sayenge:

^kThus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre shuldres and neckes, and serue the kyng of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. I will also take from you the voyce off myrth and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the bryde-grome and the voyce of the bryde, ad there shal no man dwell more in the londe. But they wolde not herken vnto thy voyce, to do the kyng of Babilon seruyce: and therefore hast thou performed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruantes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of oure kynges and the bones of oure fathers shulde be trāslated out of their place.

And lo, now are they layde out in the heate of y Sonne, and in the colde of y night, ad deed in greate mysery: with hunger, with swearde, with pestilence and are clene cast forth. As for the tēple wherin thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it waist, as it is to se this daye: and y for the wickednes of the house of Israel and the house of Iuda. O LORDE oure God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes and according to all y greate louinge mercy of thyne, like as thou spakest by thy seruante Moses, in the daye when thou didest cōmaūde him, to wryte thy lawe before the children of Israel, sayenge: Yf ye will not herke vnto my voyce, thē shal this greate multitude be turned in to a very smal people, for I wil scatre thē abroad. Not withstōdinge I am sure, that this folke will not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. But in y lōde of their captiuyte, they shall remembre them selues, and lerne to knowe, y I am the LORDE their God: when I geue thē an herte to vnderstōde, and eares to heare. Then shal they praye me in the lōde of their captiuyte, and thynke vpon my name. Then shall they turne them frō their harde backes, and from their vngodlynes: Then shal they remembre the thynges, y happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised with an oath vnto their fathers: Abraham, Isaac and Iacob: and they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increase thē, and not minysh thē. And I wil make another couenaūt with them: soch one as shal endure for euer: namely, y I will be their God, and they shalbe my people: and I wil nomore dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe y I have geue thē.

AND now o LORDE allmightie, thou God of Israel: oure soule y is in trouble, and oure sprete y is vexed, crieth vnto the: heare vs (o LORDE) and haue pite vpon vs, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto vs, for we haue synned before y. Thou endurest for euer, shulde we thē vtterly perishe? O LORDE almightie, thou God of Israel: Heare now y prayer of y deed Israelites and of their childrē, which haue synned before y, and not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, for the which cause these plages hang now vpō vs. O LORDE, remēbre not y wickednes of oure forefathers, but thinke vpō thy power and name now at this tyme: for thou art y LORDE oure God, and y (o LORDE) wil we praye. For thou hast put thy feare in oure hartes, to y intēt y we shulde call vpon thy name, and praye y in oure captiuyte: and y we might turne from the wickednesse of oure forefathers, y synned before the.

Beholde, we are yet this daye in oure captiuyte, where as thou hast scatred vs, to be an abhominacion, curse, and synne: like as it hath happened vnto oure fathers also, because of all their wickednesse and departyng from the.

O Israel, heare the commaundementes of life: ponde them well with thine eares, that thou mayest lerne wysdome. But how happeneth it Israel, that thou art in thine enemies lōde? thou art waxen olde in a straige cōunte, and defyled with the deed. Why art thou become like them, that go downe to their graues? because thou hast forsaken the well of wysdome. For yf thou shuldest walked in the waye of God, truly thou shuldest haue remayned still safe in thine owne londe.

O lerne then where discretion is, where vertu is, where vnderstōdinge is: that thou mayest knowe also frō whence cōmeth longe life, a necessary luyngge, the light of the eyes and quietnes. Who euer fōude out hir place? or who came euer in to hir treasures?

is worth of them, that coynd siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not bringe their workes to passe? They be rote out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade: Yonge men haue sene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformation haue they not knowne, ner vnderstonde the pathes therof: nether haue their children receaied it, yee right farre is it fro thē. It hath not bene herde of in the lōde of Canaan, nether hath it bene sene at Theman.

D The Agarenes sought after wisdomē, but that which is earthly, like as the marchautes of the lōde do. They of Theman are conynge also, ⁊ they labour for wisdomē ⁊ vnderstandinge: but ſ waye of true wisdomē they knowe not, nether do they thinke vpon the pathes therof. O Israel, how greate is the house of God? and how large is the place of his possession? ^a Greate is he, and hath none ende: hye and vmeasurable. What is become of those famouse giauntes, that were so greate of bodies, and so worthy men of warre? Those had not the LORDE chosen, nether haue they founde the waye of reformation, therefore were they destroyed: and for so much as they had no wisdomē, they perished because of their foolishnesse.

E Who hath gone vp in to heauen, to take wisdomē there, ⁊ brought her downe fro the cloudes? Who hath gone ouer the see to fynde her, ⁊ hath chosen her aboue golde, and so brought her hither? No man knoweth the wayes of wisdomē, nether is there eny ſ can seke out hir pathes. When he sendeth out the light, it goeth: ⁊ whē he calleth it agayne, it obeyeth hi with feare. The starres kepe their watch, ⁊ geue their light, yee and ſ gladly. When he calleth them, they saye: here we be. And so with chearfulnes they shewe light vnto him ſ made thē. T HIS is the boke off the commaundemētes of God, and the lawe ſ endureth for euer. All they ſ kepe it, shall come to life: but such as forsyake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Iacob, and take holde of it: waike by this waye, thorow his brightnesse and shyne. Geue not thyme honour to another, and thy worshipec to a straunge people. ^a O Israel, how happie are we, seige that God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasaūt vnto him? Be of good cheare, thou people of God, o thou awiçit Israel. Now are ye solde amonge the Heithen, howbeit not for youre vtter destruccion: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath and displeasure, therefore were ye delyuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastingē God that made you, offerynge vnto denels and not God. Ye haue forgottē him that brought you vp, ⁊d youre nurse haue ye greued, o Ierusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Herkē o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me in to greate heuynesse: ⁊d why? I se the captiuyte of my people, of my sonnes and daughters, which the euerlastyngē God will bryngē vpon them. With ioye dyd I norish them, but now must I leaue them with wepyngē and sorow.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddowē ⁊d forsaken: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of euery man. For why, they departed from the lawe of God: they wolde not knowe his rightuousnes, ner walke in the waye off his cōmaundementes: and as for the pathes off the treuth and godlynesse, they had no lust to go in them.

C O ye dwellers aboute Sion: come, and let vs call to remembrance the captiuyte, that the euerlastingē God hath brought vpon my sonnes and my daughters. Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye: for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put of the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sackcloth off prayer, and for my tyme I will call vpon the most hiest. Be off good cheare, o my children: "crie vnto the LORDE, and he shal delyuer you from the power of the prynces, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnesse is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that ye shall haue offoure euerlastinge Sauioure.

With mournynge and wepinge dyd I let you go fro me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agayne vnto me. Like as the neighbours of Sion sawe youre captiuite from God, Euē so shal they also se shortly youre health in God, which shal come on you with greate honoure and euerlastinge worshipe.

O my children, suffre paciētly the wrath that shal come vpon you, For the enemy hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruction, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlinges haue gone rough harde wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke that is scatred abroad with the enemies. But be of good cōforte (o my children) ¶ crie vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraūce: and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarue from youre God, so shal ye now endeouore youre selues x. tymes more, to ^aturne agayne, and to seke him. For he that hath brought these plages vpō you, shal brynge you euerlastinge ioye agayne with youre health. Take a good herte vnto the, o Ierusalē: for he which gaue ¶ that name, exorteth the so to do.

The wicked doers that now put the to trouble, shall perish: and such as haue reioysed at thy fall, shalbe punished. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue caried awaye thy sonnes, shal be correcte. For like as they be now glad of thy decaye, so shal they mourne in their owne destruction. The ioye off thy multitude shalbe taken awaye and their cheare shalbe turned to sorowe. For a fyre shal fall vpon them from the euerlastinge God, longe to endure: and it shalbe inhabited of deuels for a greete season.

The v. Chapter.

O IERUSALEM, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that commeth vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsakē, and that were scatred abroad) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysing in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put of thy mournynge clothes (o Ierusalem) and thy sorow, and decke the with the worshipe and honoure, that commeth vnto the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shal put the cloake off rightuousnesse vpon the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge worshipe vpon thine heade: for vpon the will God declare his brightnes, that is vnder the heauen: Yee an euerlastinge name shalbe geuen the of God, with peace of rightuousnesse, ¶ ¶ honoure of Gods feare.

Arise o Ierusalem, stōde vp on hye: loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, hauynge God in remembrance. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shal the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off ¶ kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute moūtaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fylle the valleys, ¶ so to make them eauen with the grounde: ¶ Israel maye be diligēt to lyue vnto ¶ honoure of God. The woddes ¶ all pleasaūt trees shal ouersadowe Israel, at the cōmaundement of God. For hyther shal God brynge Israel with ioyfull myrth, and in the light of his magesty: with the mercy and rightuousnesse, that cōmeth of himself.

A copie off the epistle, that Ieremy the prophet did sende vnto the Iewes, which were led awaye presoners by the kyng of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was cōmaunded him of God

The vi. Chapter.

BECAUSE of the synnes that ye haue done agaynst God, ^aye shal be led awaye captiue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remaine there many yeares, and for a longe season: namely, vij. generacions: ¶ after that wil I bringe you awaye peaceably from thence. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddesses of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens sholders, to cast out a fearfulnes before the Heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afrayed, and let not the feare of them ouercome you.

B Therefore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde τ before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped? ^a Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddesses, \ddot{y} carpeter hath polished them: yee gylted be they, τ layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, τ can not speake. Like as a wench \ddot{y} loueth peramouris is trynly deckte, euen so are these made τ hanged with golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddesses vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, τ put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, ad trynne their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their goddesses therewith. Yet can not these goddesses deliuer them selues from rust and mothes. ^b Whē they haue couered them with clothynge off purple, they wpe their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye such as offende him. Another hath a swearde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murtherers.

C By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddesses: therefore se \ddot{y} ye nether worships them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel \ddot{y} a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddesses. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as \ddot{y} dores are shut in roude aboute vpō him, \ddot{y} hath offended the kinge: Or as it were a deed body kepte besyde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepte the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddesses be spoyled with robbers. They set vp cādels before thē (yee verely and \ddot{y} many) wherof they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, \ddot{y} the serpentis and wormes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them τ their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, thorow the smoke \ddot{y} is in the temple. The oules, swalows τ byrdles fle vpon them, yee and the cattes runne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddesses, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beautifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast in to a fourne, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens sholders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothinge worth. Confounded be they then, that worships them. For yf they fall to the grounde, they can not ryse vp agayne of thē selues: Yee though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, ad abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe τ the mēstruous laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddesses, therefore be not ye afrayde of them. From whence cometh it thē, that they be called goddesses? The women syt before the goddesses of syluer, golde and wodde, and the prestes syt in their temples, hauynge open clothes, whose heades and beerdles are shauen, and haue nothige vpon their heades: roaringe and cryenge vpon their goddesses, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garments of the ymages, and decke their wyues τ children withall. Whether it be good or euell \ddot{y} eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kyng, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them ad kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. ^c They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to \ddot{y} fatherles. Their goddesses of wodd, stone, golde τ syluer, are but euen as other stones, \ddot{y} be hewē of \ddot{y} mountayne. They \ddot{y} worships thē, shal be cōfounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē goddes? And though the caldees worshiped thē not, hearinge ŷ they were but domme ⁊ coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre vnto Bel, and wolde fayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude fele, ŷ maye not mone. But when these mē come to vnderstōdinge, they shall forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greate sorte off women gyrdled with coardes, syt in the stretes, ⁊ burne olyue beries. Now yf one off them be conueyed awaye, ⁊ lye with eny such as come by: she casteth hir neghburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ād lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, ŷ they are goddes? Carpenters ⁊ goldsmythes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thīges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therefore are the thīges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ynagyn, where they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner delyuer thē fro mysfortune? For seynge they be but of wodde, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people ⁊ kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shalbe openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, ⁊ that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe frō wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixte heuen and earth.

Whē there happeneth a fyre in to the house of those goddes of wodde, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape ⁊ saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin. They can not withstōde eny kyng or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Morouer, these goddes of wodde, of stone, of golde ⁊ syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee ŷ very wicked are stronger thē they. These strype them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde ⁊ syluer frō thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therefore it is moch better for a man, to be a kinge ⁊ so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wheriu he ŷ oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a dore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mone ⁊ all the starres when they geue their shyne ⁊ light, are obedient, ⁊ do men good: When the lightenyng glistreth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, ⁊ whē God cōmaundeth the cloudes to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe frō aboue ⁊ cōmaunded, it burneth vp hilles ād woddes: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynge, nether in beuty ner strēgth. Wherefore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they cā nether geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake enell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for ŷ Heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mone: yee ŷ vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rose, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therefore feare thē not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are their goddes of wod, of syluer ⁊ golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrle sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodde, syluer and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ād soone faydeth awaye, yee maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greate cōfucion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, ŷ hath no ymages ⁊ worshipeth none, for he shalbe farre from reprofe.

From this chapter vnto the ende, the prophet seith in a vision the buyldinge agayne of Ierusalem, and the temple: Wherby is describyed the mystery off the church off christ, and saluacion of the faithfull in him.

The first Chapter.

IT chaused, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the presoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, and I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kyng Ioaquims captiuyte. At the same tyme came \hat{y} worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi prest, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpō him. "And I loked: and beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which with his glistre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in \hat{y} myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the licknesse of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sauyng, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

B Their legges were straight, but their fete were like bullockes fete, and they glistred, as it had bene fayre scoured metall. Vnder their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and their wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one euer touched another. ^aWhen they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out aboute: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the sprete led them, thither they wente, and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenaunce of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whē ŷ beestes wēte forwarde ⁊ backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

^c Eze. 10. c.

¶ The fashion ⁊ worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute ī their goinge. They were large, greate and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whē the beestes wēte, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes lift them selues vp from ŷ earth, the wheles were lift vp also. Whyther so euer the sprete wente, thither wente they also, ⁊ ŷ wheles were lift vp ⁊ folowed thē, for ŷ sprete of life was in the wheles. When ŷ beestes wēte forth, stode still, or lift them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, ⁊ were lift vp, for ŷ breth off life was in the wheles.

¶ Aboue ouer ŷ heades of the beestes there was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Christall, ⁊ that was spread out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abrode, one towards another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse of greate waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greate God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their wynges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Aboue the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vpwarde.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder ŷ loynes, me thought he was like a shyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Yee the shyne and glistre ŷ lightened rounde aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye apareth in the cloudes. Euē so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE apared. Whē I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The ij. Chapter.

¶ THEN sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. And as he was commonyng with me, the sprete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I mareked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off man: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye from me: both they, and their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende ŷ vnto a people ŷ haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himself hath spoken, ŷ whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde houlholde) they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

Therefore (thou sonne off man) feare thē not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise ŷ. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwerde houlholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne of man) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto ŷ, and be not thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked houlholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.

So as I was lokinge vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ THEN sayde he vnto me: thou sonne of mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thy bely shal eate, and thy bowels shalbe fylled with $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ boke, that I geue the.

^aThen dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then hony.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne of mā, get the soone vnto the house off Israel, $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ ^bshewe the $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ wordes, that I cōmaunde the:
 for I sende the not to a people that hath a straūge, vnkowne or harde speache, but vnto
 the house off Israel: Not to many nacions, which haue diuerse speaches and harde languages, whose wordes thou vnderstōdest not: Neuertheles, ^cyf I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe $\text{\textcircled{f}}$, for they wil not folowe me: ^dYee all the house off Israel haue stiif foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therefore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy foreheade shall be harder then an Adamāt or flynt stone: ^e that thou mayest feare them, $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ lesse, and bē lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwerde housholde.

33 He sayde morouer vnto me: thou sonne off man, take diligent hede with thine eares, to $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ wordes that I speake vnto the, fasten them in thine herte: and go to the presoners off thy people, speake vnto them, $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spokē:
 Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the sprete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greate russhinge and remouynge off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that rushed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlyng off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge $\text{\textcircled{a}}$ noyse was very greate.

^fNow when the sprete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heuy and a sorouful mynde, but the honde off $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnynge off the Moneth Abib, I came to the presoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, ^gand remayned in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seuen dayes, beinge very sory.

34 And when the seuen dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, ^hI haue made the a watch man vnto the house of Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, ⁱand geue them warnynge at my commaundement.

Yf I saye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that (without doute) he must dye, and thou geuest him not warnynge, ner speak-est vnto him, that he maye turce from his euell waye, and so to lyue: Then shall the same vngodly man dye in his owne vnright-uosnes: but his bloude will I requyre off thyne honde. Neuertheles, yf thou geue warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forsake not his vngodlynesse: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous mā go frō his righteous-nesse, ^jand do the thinge that is euell: I will laye a stomblynge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not geuen him warnynge: Yee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre of thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhorte the right-uous, that he synne not, and so $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ righteous do not synne: Then shall he lyue, because he hath receaued thy warnynge, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the hōde off the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vnto me: Stonde vp, and go in to the felde, ^k $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ I maye there talke with the.

So when I had rysen vp, and gone forth in to the felde: ^lBeholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Cobar.

^mThen fell I downe vpon my face, and $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ sprete came in to me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparre thy self in thine house.
 Beholde (O thou sonne off man) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the withall, so that thou shalt not escape out off the. And I will make thy tunge cleue to the rofe off thy mouth, that thou shalt be domme,

The iiii. Chapter.

A THOU sonne off man: take a tyle stone, and laye it before the, and descrybe vpon it the cite off Ierusalem: how it is beseged, how bulworkes and ströge diches are grauen on euery syde off it: descrybe also tentes, and an hoost off men rounde aboute it.

Morouer, take an yron panne, and set it betwixe the τ γ cite in steade off an yron wall. Then set thy face towarde it, besege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynst it, to wynde it. This shal be a token vnto the house off Israel. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left syde, and laye the synne of the house off Israel vpon the.

Certaine dayes apoynted, thou shalt slepe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes.^a Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: Thre hundred τ xc. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house of Israel. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house of Iuda.

B A daye for a yeare,^a a daye (I saye) for a yeare, will I euer laye vpon the. Therefore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Ierusalem, and discouer thine arme, that thou mayest prophecie agaynst it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes of thy sege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barley beanes, growell sede, milium and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaves of bred therof, accordinge to the nombre of the dayes that thou must lye vpon γ syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for thre hundredh and XC. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall haue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie syeles every daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begynnyng to the ende.

C Thou shalt dryncke also a certayne measure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an Hin shalt thou dryncke daylie from the begynnyng to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake the ouer with mas donge, γ they maye se it. And with that, sayde the LORDE: 'Euen thus shal the children of Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scatre them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Beholde, my soule was yet neuer stayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, nether came there euer eny vnclene flesh in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde: Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the longe off a man, and to strake the bred ouer with all, before the.

And he sayde vnto me: 'Beholde thou sonne off man, I will mynische all the prouision of bred in Ierusalem, so that they shall weye their bred, and eate it with scarcenesse. But as for water, they shall haue a very litle measure theroff, to dryncke. And when they haue nomore bred uer water, one shal be destroyed with another, and famish awaye for their wickednesse.

The v. Chapter.

TAKE the then a sharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shaue the hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scoales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a sunder. And burne the thirde parte therof in the fyre in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe.^a As for the thirde parte that remaineth, cast it in the wynde, and then shewe the bare knyfe.

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the same, τ bynde it in thy cote lappe. Then take a curtesy of it, and cast it in the myddest of γ fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the same fyre shall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Israel.

Morouer, thus sayde the LORDE God: B This same is Ierusalem. I set her in the middest of the Heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgmētēs more then γ Gentiles the selues, and broken my cōmaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus saieih the LORDE God: For so much as ye with youre wickednesse farre exceede the Heithē, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kepte myne ordinaūces) Therefore thus saith ꝑ̄ LORDE God:

I will also come vpon the, for in the myddest of the will I syt in iudgmēt, in the sight of the Heithen, and will handle the of such a fashion, as I neuer dyd before, and as I neuer wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. ^a For in the the fathers shal be fayne to eate their owne sonnes, and the sonnes their owne fathers. Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the whole remnaunt will I scatere in to all the wyndes.

^c Wherefore, as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) seynghe thou hast defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhominacions and with all thy shameful offences: For this cause will I also destroye the. Myne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the.

^b One thirde parte within the, shall die of the pestilence and of hunger: Another thirde parte shall be slayne downe rounde aboute the, with the swearde: The other thirde parte that remaineth, will I scatere abrode towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out the swearde after them. Thus wil I perfourme my indignacion and set my wrath agaynst them, and ease my self. So that when I haue fulfilled myne anger agaynst them, they shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which with a seruent gelousy haue spoken it.

^d Morouer I will make the waist and abhorred, before all the Heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the sight off all them, that go by the: so that when I punysh the in my wrath, in myne anger, and with the plage off my whote displeasure: thou shalt be a very abhominacion, shame, a gasinge and wondrous stocke, amonge the Heithen that lye aboute the.

Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, and it shall come to passe, when I shute amonge them the perulous dartes of hōger, which shalbe but death: ^e Yee therefore shall I shute them, because I will destroye you. I will encrease hunger, and mynish all the prouysion off bred amonge you.

Plages and mysery will I sende you, yee and wilde beestes also to destroye you. Pestilence and bloudsheddinge shall come vpon you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you. Euen I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The vi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, ^d turne thy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophecie vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: Thus hath the LORDE God spoken to the moūtaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will bringe a swearde ouer you, and destroye youre hie places: I wil cast downe youre alters, and breake downe youre temples. Your slayne men will I laye before youre goddes, and the deed carcases off the children off Israel will I cast before their ymages, youre bones wil I strowe rounde aboute youre alters, and dwellinge places.

The cities shalbe desolate, ꝑ̄ hillchapels layed waist: youre alters destroyed, & broken: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, youre tēpels layde eauē with the groūde, youre owne workes clene roted out. Your slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how ꝑ̄ I am the LORDE. Those ꝑ̄ amōge you haue escaped the swearde, will I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatere you amonge the nacions. ^e And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

As for that whorish and vnfaithfull herte of theirs, wherwith they runne awaye from me, I will breake it: yee & put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeasid with their selues, for the wickednesses ād abhominacions, which they haue done: and shal lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vayne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch mysery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: ^c Smyte thine bondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the abhominacions and wickednesses of the house of Israel, for because of thē, they shal perish with the swearde, with hōger and with pestilence. Who so is farre of, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swearde: and ꝑ̄ other that are beseged, shall dye of hunger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure upon them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē youre slayne men lye amōge youre goddes, and aboute youre altars: vpon all hie hilles and toppes off mountaynes, amōge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euen in the places, where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols. I will stretch myne honde out vpon them, and will make the londe waist: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wilderness off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The vij. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: The I call, O thou some off man. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel: The ende commeth, yee verely the ende commeth vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the: for I will sende my wrath vpon the, and wil punysh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and rewarde the after all thy abhominaciōs. Myne eye shall not ouerse the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, accordinge to thy waies, and declare thy abhominacions. Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, and hour is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at honde, the daye of sediciō is hard by, and no glad tidings vpon the mountaynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wrath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy waies, and recompence the all thy abhominacions.

Myne eye shall not ouerse the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the after thy waies, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how I am the LORDE, and smytheth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come, the houre is runne out, the rodde flourisheth, wyfulness waxeth grene, malicious violence is growne vpon, and the vngodly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no complaynt be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye:

^e Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that selleth, let him not be sory: for why, ^f Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lye. For the vision shall come so greatly ouer all, and it shall not be hyndered: No mā also with his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

The trompettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The swearde shalbe without, pestilence and hunger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the swearde: and he that is in the cite, shall perish with hunger and pestilence.

And soch as escape and fle from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the doues in the felde: euery one shalbe afrayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

All hondes shalbe letten downe, and all knees shalbe weake as the water: they shall gyrd the selues with sack cloth, feare shall fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confounded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: ^g Yee their syluer and golde maye not deluyer them, in the daye of the fearful wrath of the LORDE.

They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, nether fyll their emptie belies therwith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly Ieweles for their pompe and pryde, ^h but also abhominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhorred. Morouer, I will geue it in to the hondes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to the wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

My face wil I turne from the, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go in to it, and suspende it. I wil make clene rydaunse, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrightuous iudgment of innocent bloude, and the cite is full off abhominacions.

Wherefore, I will bringe the most cruell tyrauntes from amonge the Heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to cease, and they shal take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shal seke peace, but they shal haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shal folowe another, and one rumoure shal come after another: Then shall they seke visions in wayne at their prophetes. ^aThe lawe shall be gone from the prestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kyng shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heynesse, and ^ƒhōdes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, [†] according to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The viij. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the sixte yeaere, the fifth daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the lordes off the councell off Iuda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpo me.

And as I loked vp, I sawe as it were a licknesse off fyre from his loynes downward, ^b and from his loynes vpwarde it shyned maruelous cleare.

This symilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayrie lockes off my heade, and the sprete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Ierusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all things in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: ^ceuē as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, O lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then lift I vp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an aluter made vnto the ymage off prouocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what these do? Seist thou the greates abhominacions that the house off Israel commytte in this place? which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and whē I loked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, dygge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a clore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy waye in, [†] loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes [†] and beastes, all Idols and abhominacions of ^ƒ house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

^d There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes of the councell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Iaasania the sonne off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censure in his honde, [†] out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, ^e hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off Israel do secretly, euery one in his chambre? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt se the greates abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there sat women mournyng for Thamus. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of mā? Turne ^ƒ aboute, [†] and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde courte of the LORDES house: [†] and beholde, at the porte of the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aluter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backes vpon the Temple of the LORDE, [†] and their faces towarde the easte, and these worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinketh the house of Israel, that it is but a trife, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vnto anger? Yee [†] purposely to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therefore wil I also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouerse them, nether wil I spare them. ^ƒ Yee and though they crye in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

A HE cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, every man with his weapened honde to the slaughter. Then came there sixe men out of the strete of the vpper porte towards the north, and every man a weapen in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lynnyng rayment, and a wryters ynckhorne by his syde.

These wente in, and stode beside the brasen altur: ^afor the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the thresholde of the house, ¹ he called the mā, that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him, and the wryters ynckhorne by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Ierusalem, and set this mark ² Thau vpō the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sore for all the abhominacions, that be done therein. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, ouersee none, spare none: ³ Kyll, ⁴ destroye both olde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this mark ⁵ Thau vpō them: se that ye touch them not, and begynne at my Sanctuary. ⁶ Then they begāne at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wēte out and slewe downe thorow ⁷ y cite. Now when they had done ⁸ y slaughter, ⁹ I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, ¹⁰ I cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the resydue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpō Ierusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house of Israel and Iuda is very greate: so that the lode is full of bloude, and ¹¹ y cite full of vnfaithfulnesse: ¹² For they saye: Tush, ¹³ y LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therefore will I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether will I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lynnyng

rayment vpon him, and the wryters ynckhorne by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The v. Chapter.

A ND as I looked, beholde, In the firmament that was aboute the Cherubins there appeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpō them: ¹ Then sayde he that sat therein, to him that had the lynnyng rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crepte in, that I might se.

Now the Cherubins stode vpō the right syde of the house, when the man wēte in, and the cloude fylled the ynnner courte. ² But the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the thresholde of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shynde of the LORDES glory. Yee and the sounde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man ³ y was clothed in lynnyng, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest of ⁴ y wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth his honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto ⁵ y fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lynnyng rayment) in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges of ⁶ y Cherubins, there appeared the lieknes of a mā hōde: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cherubins, so that by every Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to loke vpon) after ⁷ y fashion of ⁸ y precious stone of Tharsis: Yet (vnto the sight) were they fashioned ⁹ l like, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they wēte all ¹⁰ iij together, not turnynge aboute in their goinge: But where the first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. ¹¹ Their whole bodies, their backes, their hōdes ¹² t wynges, yee ¹³ t the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call fy wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Euery one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, and they were lifted vp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar.

C Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles went with them: and when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vpwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, fy wheles were lift vp also with thē, for the sprete of life was in the wheles.

Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the thresholde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flackred with their wynges, and lift thē selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Euery one had foure faces, and euery one foure wynges, and vnder their wynges, as it were mēs hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, euen as I had sene them, by the water of Cobar, and so was the countenance of thē: Euery one in his goinge wente straight forwarde.

The xi. Chapter.

MOROUER, the sprete of the LORDE lift me vp, and brought me vnto fy east porty of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xxv men vnder the dore: amōge whom I sawe Iaasanijs the sonne of Asur, and Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked counceyl take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at honde, let vs buylde houses: This Ierusalem is the cauldron, and we be the flesh. Therefore shalt thou prophecie vnto them, yee prophecie shalt thou vnto them, O sonne of man. And with that, fell the sprete of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me:

Speake, thus saieth the LORDE: On this maner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginaciōs of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthered in this cite, and filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therefore, thus saieth the LORDE God: The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, and this cite is the cauldron: But I wil bringe you out of it: ye haue drawē out fy swearde, euc so wil I also bringe a swearde ouer you, saieth fy LORDE God. I wil dryue you out of this cite and deluyer you in to youre enemies honde, and wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therin: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punysh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, ner kepte his lawes: but haue done after the customes of the Heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpo my face, and cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then vterly destroye all the remnaunt in Israel? And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynsfolke, and fy whole house of Iuda, which dwell at Ierusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therefore tell them, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amōge the Gentiles, and scatere you amonge the nacions, and I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, and bringe you from the countrees where ye be scatred, and will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: and thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, and all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, and wil plante a new sprete within youre bowels. That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, and geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinaunces, and do them: that ye maye be my people, and

I youre God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked luynges: Those mens dedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saith the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. ^a So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, ^b and stode vpon the mount of the cite towards the east. But the wynde toke me vp, and in a vision (which came by the sprete of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the presoners. Then the vision that I had sene, vanysched awaye fro me. So I spake vnto the presoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The xij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: 'Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde housholde: which haue eyes to se, and yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, ^c they maye se. Yee euē in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peraduenture they will conside, ^d they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maie se: and thou thy self shalt go forth also at euē in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flitteth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not ^e earth, for I haue made the a shewtokē vnto the house of Israel. Now as ^f the LORDE cōmaunded me, so I dyd: ^g I gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euen I brake downe an hole thorow the wall with my honde: and when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpon my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, ^h they frauwerde housholde axe the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: This punyishment toucheth the chefe rulers at Ierusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoken: like as I haue done, so shalt it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go in to captiuyte. ⁱ The chefest that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: He shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lyne will I sprede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, and carie him to Babylon, in the lōde of the Caldees: which he shal not se, and yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatere them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them. ^j So when I haue scatred them amonge the Heithen, and strowed them in the londes: they shal knowe, that I am ^k the LORDE. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger and pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the Heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fear full treblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse and sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Ierusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke youre water with heynnesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shalbe layde waist, for ^l the wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what maner of byworde is that, ^m which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in comynge, ⁿ all the visiōs are of none effecte: Tell them therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: I will make that byworde to cease, so that it shall nomore be comonly vsed in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shalbe fulfilled. There shall no vision be in vayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it is I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I ſpē LORDE speake, it shal be performed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euen in youre dayes (O ye frauwarde housholde) will I denyse some thinge, ⁊ bringe it to passe, saieyth the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: It is farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecieth. Therefore saye vnto them: Thus saieyth the LORDE God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saieyth the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: ⁊ saye thou vnto them that prophetic out of their owne hertes: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saieyth the LORDE God: Wo be vnto those folish prophetes, that folowe their owne sprete, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, ^b that mē might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORDE. Vayne thinges they se, ⁊ tell lies, to mayntene their preachings withall. The LORDE (saye they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORDE hath not sent them. Vayne visiōs haue ye sene, ⁊ spokē false prophecies, when ye saye: the LORDE hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

^b Therefore, thus saieyth the LORDE God: Because youre wordes be vayne, ⁊ ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saieyth ſ LORDE. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out vayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the councill of my people, ner written in the boke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the londe of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE God. And that for this cause: they haue disceaued my people, ⁊ tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, ⁊ they dawbe it with lowse claye. ^c Therefore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered morter, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shuwer of rayne, greate stones shall fall vpon it, ⁊ a sore storme of wynde shal breake it, so shal ſ wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall? Therefore thus saieyth the LORDE God: I will breake out in my wrathfull displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shuwer of rayne, ⁊ hale stones in my wrath, to destroye withall.

As for ſ wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, ⁊ make it eauen with the grounde: so that the foundation therof shal remoue, ⁊ it shal fall, yee ⁊ ye youre selues shall perish in the myddest therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. Thus wil I perfourme my wrath vpon this wall, ⁊ vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered morter, and then will I saye vnto you: The wall is gone, ⁊ the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophetic vnto the cite of Ierusalem, ⁊ loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saieyth the LORDE God. Wherefore (o thou sonne of mā,) set thy face agaynst the daughters of thy people, which prophetic out of their owne hertes: ⁊ speake thou prophetic agaynst them, ⁊ saye: Thus saieyth the LORDE God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all arme holes, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, ye promyse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for an hand full of barley, ⁊ for a pece of bred: when ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, ⁊ promyse life to them, that lyue not: Thus ye dyssemble with my people, ſ beleueth youre lies.

Wherefore thus saieyth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil also vpō the pillowes, wherewith ye catch the soules in flyenge: thē will I take from youre armes, ⁊ let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters also wil I teare in peces, ⁊ deliuer my people out of youre honde: so that they shal come no more in youre hōdes to be spoyled, ⁊ ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. Seinge ŷ with youre lyes ye discomferte the herte of the righteous, whom I haue not discomforted: Agayne: "For so moch as ye corage the honde of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, ⁊ lye: therefore shall ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophecie youre owne gessings: for I wil deliuer my people out of youre honde, that ye naye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xiiij. Chapter.

THERE resorted vnto me certayne of ŷ elders of Israel, ⁊ sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou some of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, ⁊ go purposely vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then axe counsell at me? Therefore speake vnto them, ⁊ saye: thus saith the LORDE God: Euery man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stamble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquere eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answer, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snared in their owne hertes, because they be cleue gone fro me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORDE God: "Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youe faces from all youre abhominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sogeourneth in Israel) which departeth fro me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to axe counsell at me thorow him: vnto ŷ man wil I the LORDE geue answer, by myne owne self.

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how ŷ I am the LORDE. "And yf that prophet be disceaued, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORDE myself haue disceaued that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punyshed for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to ŷ synne of him that axeth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that ŷ house of Israel be led nomore fro me thorow erreure, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouysion of their bred, and sende derth vpon them, to destroye man ⁊ beast in the londe. "And though Noe, Daniel and Iob these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their righteousnesse deliuer but their owne soules, saith the LORDE God.

Yf I bringe noysome beestes in to the londe, to waist it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therein for beestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner daughters, but be only deliuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waist.

Or, yf I bringe a swerde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beast in it, and yf these thre men were therein: As truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) they shal deliuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but only be saued them selues.

Yf I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and beast, and yf Noe, Daniel and Iob were therein: As truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) they shal deliuer nether sonnes ner daughters, but saue their owne soules in their righteousnesse.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: "Though I sende my foure trubulous plages vpon Ierusalem: the swerde, hunger, perulous beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and beast out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therein, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and daughters. waye, and what they take in honde, ⁊ ye shal be cōforted, as touchinge all the plagis that I haue brought vpon Ierusalem.

They shall comforte you, when ye se their waye and workes: and ye shal knowe, how ſ̄ it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Ierusalem, as I dyd, saieth the LORDE God.

The rb. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What commeth of the vyne amonge all other trees? and of the wyne stocke, amōge all other tymbre of the groaue? Do mē take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to aszshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therefore thus saieth the LORDE God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wod: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Ierusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shall go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shall consume them. Then shal ye knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the loude waist: because they haue so sore offended, saieth the LORDE God.

The rbi. Chapter.

AGAYNE, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Ierusalem their abhominacions, and saye: thus saieth the LORDE God vnto Ierusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, thy mother a Cethite. In ſ̄ daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, ſ̄ stringe of thy nauel was not cut of: thou wast not bathed in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed with salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for ſ̄, or to shewe the soch fauoure, but thou wast vtterly cast out vpon ſ̄ felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, ⁊ sayde vnto the: thou shalt be poured from thine owne bloude, frō thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clensed. So I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, ⁊ waxē greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by ſ̄, ⁊ loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee eūē the tyme to wowe the. Then spred I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: Yee I made an ooth vnto the, ⁊ married my self with the (saieth the LORDE God) ⁊ so thou becamest myne owne. Then waszshed I the with water, ⁊ poured thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I gaue the change of raymentes, I made the shues of Taxus lether: I gyrthed ſ̄ aboute with white sylcke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the with costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spāges vpō thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, ⁊ set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckte with syluer ⁊ golde, ⁊ thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke ⁊ of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothinge but symnels, honny ⁊ oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou ⁊ beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the Heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpō the, saieth the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, ⁊ played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, ⁊ hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētēs of dyuerse colours, ⁊ deckte thine aulters therwith, where vpon thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. The goodly ornamētēs ⁊ Iewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou takē, ⁊ made the mēs ymages therof, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmentes of dyuerse colours hast thou taken, and deckte them therewith: myne oyle ⁊ incense hast thou set before them. My meate which I gaue the, as synnels, oyle ⁊ hony: (to fede the withall) that hast thou set before them, for a swete sauoure. And this came also to passe, saieþ the LORDE God:

 C Thou hast takē thine owne sonnēs ⁊ daughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me: ⁊ these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and geuest them ouer, to be brēt vnto them? And yet in all thy abhominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembered the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, ⁊ troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saieþ ⁊ LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and brodel houses in euery place: yee at the heade of euery strete hast thou buylded the an aluter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred: thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. ⁊ Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which had moch flesh: ⁊ thus hast thou vsed thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of fode, and deluyer the ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. ⁊ Thou hast played the whore also with the Assrians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, ⁊ not had ynough. Thus hast thou still cōmitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circuncide thine herte (saieþ the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these things, thou precious whore:
 buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of euery
 strete, and thy brodel houses in all places?
 Thou hast not bene as an other whore, ⁊
 maketh booste of hir wynnynge: but as a wife ⁊ breaketh wedlocke, ⁊ taketh other in steade of hir huszbōde. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vnto all thy loners: ⁊ offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, ⁊ to committe fornicaciō with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee there hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, ⁊ no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therefore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saieþ the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spēt thy moneye, ⁊ discovered thy shame, thorow thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abhominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast geuen them: ⁊ Beholde therefore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee ⁊ all them whom thou fauourest, and euery one that thou hatest: ⁊ will discouer thy shame before thē, that they all maye se thy fylthines.

Morouer, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne bloude in wrath and gelousy.
 I wil geue the ouer in to their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre ⁊ beautifull Jewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked ⁊ bare: ⁊ Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, ⁊ slaye the downe with their swearde. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to cease, so that thou shalt geue out no mo rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased? seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges? Beholde therefore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saieþ the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd vnto the, acordinge to thy wickednesse and all thy abhominacions. Be-holde, all they ⁊ vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a daughter.

Thou art euen thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir houszbonde and hir children: Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoke their huszbōdes and their children. ⁊ Yourre mother is a Cethite, and youre father an Amorite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir daughters that dwel vpō

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on thy right hōde, is Sodoma and hir daughters. Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

As truly as I lye, saieþ the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euell, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the synnes of thy sister Sodoma were these: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Idilnesse: these things had she and hir daughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and nedey, but were proude, and dyd abhominable things before me: ^atherfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. ^cNether hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceeded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therefore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast ouercome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amōge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comferte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with thy self τ thy daughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whē thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynges and abhominacion, saieþ the LORDE.

For thus saieþ the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despyed the ooth, and broken the couenaunte. Neuertheles, I wil remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an euerlasting couenaunt: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of thē: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy daughters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. ^dAnd so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, \forall thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saieþ the LORDE God.

The xvij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto ^a me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakyng and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saieþ the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee with mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a branch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it in to the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a branch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, τ set it as a wyllye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, τ spred out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, \forall rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spred out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Neuertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde besyde greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saieþ the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be pluckte out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythered and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shall it prospere therfore? Shall it not be dried vp and withered, yee euen in the shutyng out of his blossomes, as soone as \forall east wynde bloweth?

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: "Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Ierusalem, and toke the kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours in to Egipte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in y place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge: whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hath broken. Nether shall Pharao with his greate hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diches, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despised the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (where as he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despised, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade.^a I will cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punysh him, because of the greate offence that he made me. As for those y fle from him out of y hoost, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. The residue shalbe scatred towards all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I will also take a branch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppernost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greate Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shall knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dried vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to flourish: Euen I the LORDE y spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The xviij. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and the childrens teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith y LORDE God, ye shal vse this byworde nomore in Israel.

^a Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y some myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. Yf a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he lifeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth with no menstruous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clotheth the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraweth his honde from doinge wronge: he hadleth faithfully betwixte man & man: he walketh in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & performeth thē faithfully:)^b This is a righteous mā, he shal surely lyue. saith the LORDE God.

Yf he now get a sonne, that is a murthurer,^c a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all)^d he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and nedey: he robbeth and spoyleth: he geueth not the detter his pledge agayne: he lifeth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abhominable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abhominacions, he shall dye: his bloude shalbe vpon him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seith all this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like:

Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes : he lifeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he vexeth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge: he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he dealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clotheh the naked: he oppresseth not the poore: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thing ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye in his fathers synne, but shall lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherefore thē shulde not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therefore: because the sonne hath done equyte and right, hath kepte all my commaundementes, and done them: therefore, shall he lyue in dede.

The same soule ſynneth, shall dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, nether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf ſynngodly will turne away, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundemētes, and do the thinge ſe is equal and right: doutles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shall not be thought vpon: but in his rightuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saieih the LORDE God? but rather that he conuert, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne away from his rightuousnes, and do iniqute, acordinge to all the abhominacions, that ſynngodly mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuousnes that he hath done, shall not be thought vpo: but in the fawte that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: Tush, the waye of ſynngodly LORD is not indifferēt. Hearre therefore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth away from his rightuousnes, and medleth with vngodlynes: he must dye therin: Yee for the vngodlynes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: when the wicked man turneth away from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equal and right: he shal saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shall lyue, and not dye.

And yet saieih the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not equal. Are my wayes vnright, o ye house of Israel? Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge every man, acordinge to his wayes, O ye house of Israel, saieih the LORDE God. Wherefore, be conuerted, and turne you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye frō you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you newe hertes and a new sprete. Wherefore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel? seynge I haue no pleasure in ſynngodly death of him that dyeth, saieih the LORDE God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

The xii. Chapter.

BUT mourne thou for the prynces off Israel, & saye: Wherefore laye thy mother that lyonesse, amonge the lyons? & nourished hir yonge ones amonge the lyons whelpes? One of hir whelpes she brought vp, & it became a lyon: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The Heithen herde of him, & toke him in their nettes, & brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope & comforth was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lyon of him: which wente amonge the lyons, & became a fearece lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folcke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waist: In so moch that the whole londe and euery thinge therin, were vtterly desolate, thorow the very voyce of his roaringe.

Then came the Heithen together on euery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in their pytte. So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babilon: which put him in preson, that his voyce shulde nomore be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy mother, she is like a vyne in thy bloude, planted by the water syde: hir frutes and braunches are growen out of many waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might haue made staures therof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceeded y^e heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was roted out in displeasure, and east downe to the grounde. The East wynde dryed vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, wythered and brent in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderness, in a drye and thurstie grounde. And there is a fyre gone out of hir stalkes, which hath brēt vp hir braunches and hir frute: so that she hath no mo stronge stalkes, to be staures for officers. This is a pitceus and miserabell thinge.

The xx. Chapter.

IN the xvij yeare the x daye of the v Moneth, it happened, ^athat certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to axe counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to axe eny thinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE,) I will geue you no answer. Wilt thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewe them the abhominacions of their forefathers, and tell thē: Thus saieth the LORDE God: ^bIn the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the seide of the house of Iacob, and shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lifte vp myne honde ouer thē, and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, euen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with mylke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lōde amonge all other: Then sayde I vnto them: ^cCast awaye euery man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye euery man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them in to the wilderness: ^dI gaue them my commaundementes, and shewed thē my lawes: which who so kepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and therby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they haue cast awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them.) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

Thē I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, and to cōsume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the Heithē, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them in to the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylke and hony, and is a pleasure of all londes: and y^e because they refused my lawes, and walked not in my commaundementes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Neuertheles myne eye spared thē, so y^e I wolde not vtterly slaye thē, and cōsume thē in the wilderness. Morouer, I sayde vnto their sonnes in ^ewildernes: ^fwalke not in the statutes of youre forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and defyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE youre God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes and do them, halowe my Sabbathes: ^gfor they are a token betwixte me and you, that ye maye knowe, how y^e I am the LORDE. ^hNotwithstōdinge, their sonnes rebelled against me also: they walked not in my statutes, they kepte not my lawes to fulfill them (which he that doth shal lyue in them) nether halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Thē I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wilderness. Neuertheles I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the Heithē, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatre them amonge the Heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes throw the which they shulde not lyue, ^a & I vnhalowed them in their owne giftes: (when I appoynted for my self all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Therefore (O thou some of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Besyde all this, youre forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, ^b I promised to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thicke trees: they made there their offeringes, and prouoked me with their oblacions, makinge swete sauoures there, & poured out their drinke offeringes. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therefore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherefore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vncleue as youre forefathers, ^c & committe whordome also with their abhominaciōs. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblacions, & to whose honour ye burne youre children: ye defyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye thē come, and axe eny question at me? O ye housholde of Israel? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answer of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the Heithen, & do as other people in the londe. wod & stone wil we worship.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretchedout arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherin ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie hōde, with a stretchedout arme & with indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you in to the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished your forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenannt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitacion: as for the londe of Israel, they shall not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Go now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blaspheme my holy name with youre offeringes and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, eue vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worships me: ^d and in the same place will I fauoure them, and there will I requyre youre heauceofferings, and the firstlings of youre oblacions, with all youre holy thinges.

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherin ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the Heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same hōde, that I swore to geue vnto youre fore fathers. There shal ye call to remembrance youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginacions, wherin ye haue bene defyled: ^e and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I entreate you after my name, not after youre wicked wayes, ner accordinge to youre corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Morouer, the worde of ^f LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou some of mā, set thy face towarde the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde towarde the south: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil kyndle a fyre in the, ^g shal cōsume the Then sayde I: O LORDE, they wil saye of me: "Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The xxi. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face towarde Ierusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, ⁊ prophecie agaynst the londe of Israel. saye to the lode of Israel: Thus saieith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, ⁊ wil drawe my swearde out of ŷ sheath, ⁊ rote out of ŷ both the righteous ⁊ the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous ⁊ wicked, therefore shal my swearde go out of his sheath, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue drawn my swearde out of the sheath, ⁊ it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therefore (o thou sonne of man) ŷ thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that commeth, at the which all hertes shal melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it commeth ⁊ shal be fulfilled, saieith the LORDE God.

Agayne, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecie, and speake: Thus saieith the LORDE God: speake, the swearde is sharpened ⁊ wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, ⁊ scoured ŷ it maye be bright. O, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to ŷ dighting, ŷ good holde maye be takē of it. This swearde is sharpened ⁊ dight, ŷ it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, ⁊ all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpō thy thee, for, wherfore shulde not the plage ⁊ staff of iudgmēt come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, ⁊ smyte thine hōdes together: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, ŷ manslayers swearde, that swearde of the greate slaughter, which shal smyte them, euen in their prey chambers: to make them abaszshed ⁊ faynte at the hertes, ⁊ in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is it, how wel dight ⁊ mete for ŷ slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so euer thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignacion: Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORDE came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of ŷ kinge of Babilō maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shal he chose him out a corner. Make ŷ a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Ierusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnyng of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: to axe counsell at the soyslayers, castinge the lottes with his arowes, to axe counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyer. But the soysayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon Ierusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greate noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batellrammes agaynst the gates, to graue vp dyches, ⁊ to make bulworkes.

Neuertheles, as for ŷ soysayenge, they shall holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they them selues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be takē and wonne. Therefore saieith the LORDE God: For so moch as ye youre selues sheve youre offence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shalbe taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saieith the LORDE God: take awaye the mytre, and pnt of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them will I, and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgment belongeth, and to whom I haue geuē it. And thou (o some of man) prophecy, ⁊ speake: ^o Thus saiethe the LORDE God to the children of Ammon, ⁊ to their blasphemy, speake thou: The swerde, the swerde, is drawen forth alreedy to the slaughter, ⁊ scoured that it glistreth (because thou hast lokēd the out vanities, ⁊ prophecied lyes) ŷ it maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpo the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vp agayne in to the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe where thou wast norished ⁊ borne, and poure my indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and deluyer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and thy bloude shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

The xxij. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of ŷ LORDE came vnto me, ⁊ sayde: Thou some of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloud-thurstie cite? Shewe the their abhominaciōs, ⁊ tell them: Thus saiethe the LORDE God: O thou cite, ŷ sheddest bloude in ŷ myddest of the, ŷ thy tyme maye come also: and make the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self giltē, in ŷ bloude ŷ thou hast shed: ⁊ defyled ŷ i ŷ ydols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, ⁊ made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therefore will I make ŷ to be confounded amōge the Heithē, ⁊ to be despised in all the lōdes, whether they be nye or farre frō the: they shal laugh ŷ to scorne, thou ŷ hast gottē the so foule a name, ⁊ art full off myschefe. ^b Beholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought euery man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father ⁊ mother, in the haue they oppressed the straūger, in the haue they vexed the wyldowe ⁊ the fatherlesse. Thou hast despysed my Sanctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. ^c Murtherers are there in the, that shed bloude, ⁊ eate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse vnhappyenesse.

In ŷ haue they discouered their fathers shame, in the haue they vexed women in their sicknesse. ^e Euery mā hath dealete shamefully with his neightbours wife, ⁊ abhominably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath euery man forced his owne sister, ^e euen his fathers daughter: Yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken vsury ⁊ encrease, thou hast oppressed thy neightbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saiethe the LORDE God. Beholde, I haue smytten my hondes vpo thy couetousnesse, that thou hast vsed, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them selues, in the tyme that I shall bringe vpon the? Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.

^f I will scatre the amonge the Heithen, ⁊ strowe the aboute in the lōdes, and will cause thy fylthynesse to cease out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the Heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse. ^g All they that shulde be brasse, tynne, yro ⁊ leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therefore, thus saiethe the LORDE God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will brynge you together vnto Ierusalem, like as syluer, brasse, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowne there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will brynge you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therin.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therin: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of mā, tell her: Thou art an vu clene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: ^h thy prophetes that are in the, are sworne together to deuoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in ȳ. Thy prestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. ^aThey put no dyfference betwene the holy and vnholy, nether discernne betwene the cleue and vnclene: they turne their eyes for my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.

^bThy rulers in the are like rauyshinge wolues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities, and prophcie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorcio and robbery. ^cThey vex the poore and nedy: and oppress the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vp the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lodes behalfe, ȳ I shulde not vtterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therefore wil I poure out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: their owne wayes will I recompence vpō their heades, saieih the LORDE God.

The xxiij. Chapter.

THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: ^dThese (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes brused, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria. and that was Oola: and Ierusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whorynge, when I had takē her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: ^eeuē the prynces and lordes, that were deckte in costly araye: fayre yonge men, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yonge men off Assiria: Yee she was made vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Nether ceased she frō the fornicaciō, that she vsed with the Egiptians: for in hir youth they laye with her, they brused the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. ^fWherfore, I delyuered her in to ȳ hōdes of hir louers, euē the Assirians, whom she so loued. ^gThese discouered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, and they pmushed her.

^hHir sister Ooliba sawe this, and destroyed herself with inordinate loue, more then she, ⁱexceeded hir sister in whordome: she loued ȳ Assirians (which also laye with her) namely, the prynces and greate lordes, that were clothed with all maner of gorgious apparell, all lusty horsmen and fayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymagēs off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with fayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokyng all like prynces (after ȳ maner of the Babiloniās and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Imediatly, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messaūgers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Now when the Babiloniās came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with their whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discouered and sene: then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euē the longer the more, and remembered the dayes off hir youth, wherin she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like ȳ flesh of Asses, ^kand their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast reuened the fylthyngnesse of thy youth, when thy louers bressed thy pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therefore (o Ooliba) thus saieih ȳ LORDE God. I will raiſe vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians:

all yonge and fayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, ⁊ a greate multitude of people: which shal be harnesssed aboute the on euery syde, with brestplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punyssh ŷ before them, yee they thē selues shal punyssh the, accordinge to their owne iudgmēt. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shal cut of thy nose and thine eares, and the remnaunt shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall cary away thy sonnes and daughters, ⁊ the resydue shalbe brent in the fyre. They shal strype the out of thy clothes, ⁊ cary thy costly Lewels awaye with them.

D Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthy-nesse ⁊ whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, ⁊ cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will deluyer ŷ in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hatest: yee enen in to the hondes of them, with whō thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with ŷ: All thy labour shall they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled thy self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therefore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy honde.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe ⁊ farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dronckennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of thy sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruction ⁊ waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out euē to ŷ dregges, yee thou shalt eate vp the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For enen I haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

E Therefore thus saith ŷ LORDE God: For so much as thou hast forgottē me, ⁊ east me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylthinesse ⁊ whordome. The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reproue Oola ⁊ Ooliba? Shewe thē their abhominaciōs: namely, ŷ they haue brokē their wedlocke, ⁊ stayned their hōdes with bloude: yee euen with their Idols haue they committed aduoutry, ⁊ offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. ^a Yee ⁊ this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sactuary in that same daye, ⁊ haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent thy messaungers for men out of farre cōitrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: ^c thou sattet vpō a goodly bed, ⁊ a table spred before the: wher vpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greate cheare with her, ⁊ ^f the men ŷ were sent frō farre cōitrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue braceletes vpon their hondes, ⁊ set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harloty also with yōder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola ⁊ Ooliba, those filthy women.

^d O ye all that loue vertue and rightuousnes, iudge thē, punyssh them: as aduoutrers and murtherers ought to be iudged and punysshed. For they are breakers off wedlocke, and the bloude is in their hondes. Wherefore thus saith the LORDE God: bringe a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be scatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gorre them with their swerdes. They shal slaye their sonnes and daughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all soch fylthyne out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vnclēnesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthinesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shalbe punysshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: ⁊ ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xliiiij. Chapter.

I N the ix. yeaere, in the x. Moneth, the ^a x. daye off the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, wryte vp the name off this daye, yee euē ſ̄ houre of this present daye : when the kynge of Babilon set himself agaynst Ierusalē. ^a Shewe ſ̄ obstinate housholde a parable, ⁊ speake vnto thē : Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Get the a pot, set it on, ⁊ poure water in to it : put all the peeces together in it, all the good peeces : the loyne and the shulder, ⁊ fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, ⁊ an heape off bones withall : let it boyle well, ⁊ let the bones seyth well therin.

With that, sayde the LORDE God on this maner: ^b Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of ſ̄ pot, wherupon the rustyennesse hāgeth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peeces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast therefore, for the bloude is yet in it. Vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with dust. And therefore haue I letten her poure hir bloude vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrothfull indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saieſt ſ̄ LORDE God: O, wo be vnto that bloudthurstie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde : beare thou ſ̄ bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well soddē, that the bones maye be sucte out. Morouer, set the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote : that the fylth and rustyennesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so moch off it: the rustyennesse must be brent out. Thy filthinesse is abhominable, for I wolde haue clenſed the, but thou woldest not be clenſed. Thou canst not be poured from thine vnclennesse, till I haue poured my wrothfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue so deuyſed: Yee it is come therto alreedy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I will not be intreated: but accordinge to thy wayes and ymaginations, thou shalt be punyshed, saieſt the LORDE God.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge : Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine eyes with a plague: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therefore: thou mayest mourne by thy self alone, but vse no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, couer not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I spake vnto the people by tymes in the mornynge, and at euen my wyfe dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was cōmaunded. And ſ̄ people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Tell the house of Israel, thus saieſt ſ̄ LORDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary: euē the glory of youre power, the pleasure of youre eyes, and the thinge that ye loue: youre sonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, shal fall thorow the swerde.

Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: ^d Ye shal not hyde youre faces, ye shal eate no mourners bred: youre bonettes shal ye haue vpon youre heades, ⁊ shues vpon youre fete. Ye shal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre synnes ye shal be soroufull, and one repēt with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shewtokē. For loke as he hath done, so (when this cometh) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am ſ̄ LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne of man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burthē of their bodies: namely, their sonnes and daughters: Thē shall there one escape, and come vnto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shal thy mouth be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be nomore domme: Yee and thou shalt be their shewtokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xrb. Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto ^a me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst ſ̄ Ammonites, prophecy vpon them, and saye vnto the Ammonites: Hear the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saieſt the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe of Israel, I trow it be now desolate: yee and ouer the house of Iuda, I trow they be now led awaye prisoners: Beholde, I will deluyer ſ̄ to the people of the east, ſ̄ they maye haue the in possession: these shal set their castels and houses in the. They shall eate thy frute, and drynke vp thy mylke. As for Rabath, I will make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepefolde: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: In so much as thou hast clapped with thine hondes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioysed in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the also, and deluyer the, to be spoyled off the Heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the be layed waist, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God: "For so much as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Iuda, it is but like as all other Gētiles be: Therefore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weaponlesse, and take awaye their strength: their cities and chefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely. Betiesimoth, Baalmeō and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto the off the east, \hat{y} they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remēbraunce amonge the Heithen. Euen thus will I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: ^b Because that Edom hath avenged α eased himself vpon the house off Iuda, therefore thus saith the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and beest out off it. From Themā vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, ^c wil I avenge me agayne vpō Edō: they shal hādle him, accordinge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

Thus saith \hat{y} LORDE God: "For so much as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despitefull stomackes, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hōde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perish. A great vengeance will

I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The xxvi. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the xi. yeare, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Ierusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my bely full. Yee therefore saith \hat{y} LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpō the, I wil bringe a great multitude off people agaynst \hat{y} , like as whē the see aryseth with his wawes: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hange vp their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gētiles shal spoyle her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perish with the swearde, \hat{y} they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will brynge hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kyng off Babilon α a kyng of kynges) from the North, vpō Tyre, with horses, charettes, horsmen and with a great multitude of people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with \hat{y} swearde: But agaynst \hat{y} , he shal make bullworkes α graue vp dyches aboute the, α lift vp his shyld agaynst \hat{y} . His slynges α batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, α with his weapēs breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer \hat{y} , they shalbe so many: thy walles shal shake at the noyse of \hat{y} horse men, charettes α wheles: when he cōmeth to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hōffes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people with the swearde, α breake downe the pilers of thy strength. Thy shal waist awaye thy riches, α spoyle thy marchaūdis. Thy walles shal they breake downe, α destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre α foundations, shall they cast in the water. Thus wil I brynge the melody of thy songs, α the voyce of thy

C mynstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal no more be herde. I wil make a bare stone off the yee, vnto a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For euē I ꝑ LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The Iles shall be moued at the noyse off thy fall, ꝛ at the crye of the slayne, ꝑ shall be murthered in the. All kynges off the see shall come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their robes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with tremblinge shal they be clothed, they shall syt vpon the grounde: they shal be affrayed at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, ꝑ hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, ^othou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see with thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so vtterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Iles, yee and the Iles them selues shall stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I brynge the depe vpon the, ꝑ greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to ꝑ pytte: vnto a people that hath bene lōge deed, and set the in a londe ꝑ is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so ꝑ no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in honoure, in the lōde of the luyunge. I wil make an ende off the, and thou shalt be gone. Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for euermore, saith ꝑ LORDE God.

The xxvij. Chapter.

A THE worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mā, make a lamentable cōplaynte vpon Tyre, ꝛ saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, ꝑ occupieth with moch people:^b and many Iles: thus speaketh ꝑ LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruelous goodly. All thy tables haue they made of Cipre trees of the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they takē Cedre trees, to make the mastes: ꝛ the Okes of Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made of yuery, ꝛ of costly wod out of the Ile of Cethiū. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle worke out off the londe of Egipte, to hāge vpon thy mast: ꝛ thy hanginges of yalow sylcke ꝛ purple, out of ꝑ Iles of Elisa. They of Sidō ꝛ Arnad were thy maryners, ꝛ the wysest in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest ꝛ wysest at Gebal were they, that mended ꝛ stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipmē occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hanged vpon their shildes ꝛ helmettes with the, these set forth thy beuty.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost rōude aboute thy walles, ꝛ were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vpon their shildes rōude aboute thy walles, and made the maruelous goodly. Tharsis occupied with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yron, tymne and lead, and made thy market greate. Iauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchautes, which brought the men, ꝛ ornaments off metall for thy occupyeuge. They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Marte, horse, horsmen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchautes: and many other Iles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephāt bones and Paycockes for a present. The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with nedle worke, with whyte lynninge cloth, with sylcke and with Christall.

Iuda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, ꝛ triacle. Damascus also vsed marchaundies with the, in the best wyne and whyte woll: because thy occupyeuge was so greate, and thy wares so many. Dan, Iauan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Casia and Calamus, acordinge to thyne occupyeuge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quyszhyms. Arabia ꝛ all the princes off Cedar haue occupied with the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchautes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with ŷ and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, ⁊ therefore packte ⁊ boude together with roapes) Yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off thy markettes. The shippes of Tharsis were the chefe off thy occupienge.

C Thus thou art full, and in greute worshipec, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But ŷ easte wynde shal ouer-bear the in to the myddest off the see: so ŷ thy wares, thy marchaūdiēs, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipnasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shall perish in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbes shall shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpon the see, shall leape out of their boates, and set them selues vpon the lode. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, and lye downe in the ashes. They shal shawe them selues, ⁊ put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with hertfull sorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what cite hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is? When thy wares ⁊ marchaundies came frō the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abashed at the, and all their kynges are afrayed, yee their faces haue chaunged coloure. The marchauntes off the nacions wondre at the, In that thou art so clene brought to naught, ⁊ comest nomore vp.

The xxviij. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the prynce of Tyre: " Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: " I am a God, I haue my seate in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man ⁊ not God, ⁊ yet stondest in thine owne cōceate, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynkst thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from ŷ. " With thy wisdome ⁊ thy vnderstōdinge, thou hast gottē the greate welthynesse, and gathered treasure of syluer ⁊ golde. With thy greute wisdome and occupienge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greate riches thy hert is proude.

Therefore thus saith ŷ LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bringe enemies vpon the, euen the tyrauntes of the Heithē: these shal drawe out their sweardes vpon thy beuty and wisdome, and shal defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the myddest of the see, as they that be slayne. Let se, yff thou wilt saye then (before thē that slaye ŷ) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the bondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hōdes of ŷ enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complainyte ouer the kyng of Tyre, ⁊ tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a scale of a licknesse, full off wysdome ⁊ excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in ŷ pleasaūt gardē off God: thou art dectē with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Christall, Iacynete, Onyx, Iaspis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, ⁊ golde. Thy beuty ⁊ ŷ holes ŷ be in ŷ were set forth in the daye of thy creacion. Thou art a fayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue set the vpon the holy mount off God, there hast thou bene, and walked amōge the fayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, tyll wickednesse was founde in the. " Because off thy greute marchaundise, thy hert is full of wickednesse, ⁊ thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount of God, (O thou couering Cherub) and destroye the amōge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in thy fayre beuty, ⁊ thorow thy beuty thou hast destroyed thy wisdome. I wil cast ŷ downe to the grounde, ⁊ ŷ in ŷ sight of kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sæctuary, with the greate wickednesse off thy onrighteous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddest of the, to consume the: ãd wil make the to ashes, in the sight of all thē ŷ loke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the Heithē, shal be abashed at the: seinge thou art so clene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst Sidō, Prophecie vpō it, and speake. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpō the, ⁊ get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am ŷ LORDE, when I punysh her, ⁊ get me honoure in her. For I will sende pestilence ⁊ bloud sheddinge in to hir stretes, so ŷ those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest of her: ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, ⁊ an hurtinge brere vnto the house of Israel, ner vnto thē that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde of Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be scatred: then shal I be sanctified in thē, in ŷ sight of the Gētiles: ⁊ they shal dwell in the lōde, ŷ I gauē to my seruauit Iacob. They shal dwell safely therin, ⁊ buylde houses, and plante vynyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therin, when I haue punyshed all those, that despyse them rounde aboute: and then shall they knowe, ŷ I am the LORDE their God.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

IN the x. yeare, vpon the xij. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: O thou sonne off mā, set now thy face agaynst Pharao the kyng off Egipte, Prophecye agaynst him and agaynst the whole lōde of Egipte: Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharao thou kinge of Egipte, I wil vpō the, thou greate whall fysh, ŷ lyst in thy waters: Thou ŷ sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, ⁊ hāge all the fish in thy waters vpō thy skales: after ŷ I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee ⁊ all the fish of thy waters that hange vpon thy skales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lōde with the fish of thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, ⁊ for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egipte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of rede to the house of Israel. When they toke holde of ŷ with their hōde thou brakest and prydest them on euery syde: and yff they leaned vpō the, thou brakest, ãd hurtdest the reynes of their backs. Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: beholde, I will brynge a swearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beast. Yee the londe of Egipte shalbe desolate and waist, ⁊ they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I my self haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, ⁊ vpon thy waters: I will make the londe off Egipte waist and desolate, from the towre of Syenes vnto the borders of the Moriās londe: so that in xl. yeares there shall no fote off man walke there, nether fote of catell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe of Egipte to be desolate amonge other waist countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeares, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil scatere the Egipcians amonge the Heithen and nacions.

Agayne, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Whē the xl. yeares are expyred, I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the nacions, amonge whō they were scatred, and wil bringe the presoners off Egipte agayne in to the londe off Pathures their owne natyue cowntre, that they maye be there a lowly small kyngdome: yee they shal be the smallest amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exalte them selues aboute the Heithen: for I will so mynish them, that they shall nomore rule the Heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke thē anymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ãd they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yeaere, the first daye of the first Moneth, came ſ̄ worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate trauayle and labour to come before Tyre: that euery heade maye be balde, and euery shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether him ner his hoost eny rewarde, for ſ̄ greate trauayle ſ̄ he hath taken there. Therefore thus saieſt ſ̄ LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lode of Egipte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō, ſ̄ he maye take awaye all hir substaunce, robbe hir robberies, and spoyle hir spoyle, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egipte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the horne off the house of Israel to growe forth, and open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The xxx. Chapter.

a MOROUER, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, prophecy and speake: thus saieſt the LORDE God: "Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of ſ̄ LORDE is come: the darcke daye of ſ̄ Heithē, the houre is at honde, the swearde commeth vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundaciōs are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afrayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia and Lydiā, all their comon people, and Chub, and all ſ̄ be confederate vnto thē, shal fall with thē thorow ſ̄ swearde.

b Thus saieſt ſ̄ LORDE: The maynteyners of the lode of Egipte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: euē vnto the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe with the swearde, saieſt ſ̄ LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, and amonge other waist cities they shalbe waisted. And they shal knowe, ſ̄ I am ſ̄ LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egipte, and when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth from me in shippes, to make ſ̄ carelesse Morians afrayed: and sorowe shal come vpon them in the daye of Egipte, for doutles it shal come. Thus saieſt the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egipte thorow the honde of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrantes of the Heithen shalbe brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their swearde vpon Egipte and fyll the londe full of slayne men. I wil drye vp their floudes of water, and sell the lode in to the hondes of wicked people. The lode and all ſ̄ is therin, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē I the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saieſt the LORDE God: I wil destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. There shal nomore be a prynce of Egipte, and a fearfulnessse wil I sende in to the Egipcians londe. As for Pathures, I wil make it desolate, and kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria wil I punysh, and poure my wrathfull indignaciō vpō Sin, which is the strength of Egipte. All the sustaunce of Alexandria wil I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egipte.

Sin shalbe in greate heuynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Noph shall haue daylye sorowe. The best men off Heliopolis and Bubasto shalbe slayne with the swearde, and caried awaye captiue. At Taphnis the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egipte, and when ſ̄ pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A cloude shal couer her, and hir daughters shalbe led awaye in to captiuyte. Thus wil I punysh Egipte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

b It happened in the xi. yeaere, vpon the seuēth daye of ſ̄ first Moneth, ſ̄ the LORDES worde came vnto me, sayēge: Beholde, thou sonne of mā, I wil breake ſ̄ arme of Pharao kynge of Egipte: and lo, it shal not be boude vp to be healed, nether shal eny playstre be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so strōge, as to holde a swearde. Therefore, thus saieſt the LORDE God: beholde, I wil vpon Pharao ſ̄ kynge of Egipte, and brusse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) and wil smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatere them amonge the Heithen, and strowe thē in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strength ſ̄ arme of the kinge of Babilō, and geue him my swearde in his hōde: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so ſ̄ he shal holde it before him piteously, like a wounded man.

Yee I will establish the kyng of Babilōs arme, ⁊ the armes of Pharao shal fall downe: that it maye be knowne, that I am the LORDE, which geue the kyng of Babilon my swerde in his hōde, that he maye drawe it out vpon the loude of Egipte: and that when I scatre the Egipcians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in ſ̄ lōdes aboute, they maye knowe, ſ̄ I am the LORDE.

The xxxi. Chapter.

MOROUER, it happened in the xi. yeare ſ̄ first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharao the kyng of Egipte, ād to all his people: Whom art thou like in thy greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpō the mount of Libanus, with fayre braūches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hie. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hie. Rōude aboute the rotes of him rāne there floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therefore was he hyer thē all the trees of the felde, and thorow ſ̄ multitude of waters that he sent frō him, he optayned many and longe braunches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his braūches, vnder his bowes gēdred all the beastes of ſ̄ felde, ⁊ vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Fayre and beautifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasaūt garden of God, there was no Fyrre tre like his braūches, the playne trees were not like ſ̄ bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, ſ̄ all the trees in the pleasaūt gardē of God, had envye at hi. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, ⁊ stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, ⁊ seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil deluyer him in to ſ̄ hondes of ſ̄ mightiest amōge ſ̄ Heithē, which shall rote him out. Acordige to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, ⁊ the mighty men of the Heithen shall so scatre him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes ⁊ in all valleys: his bowes shall be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the loude. Then all the people of the loude shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all ſ̄ foules of ſ̄ ayre shal syt vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his braūches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall attayne to his hyennesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hie, as he hath done. For vnto death shall they all be deluyered vnder the earth, and go downe to ſ̄ graue, like other men.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his floudes, and the greate waters shalbe restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be soroufull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be smyttē. I wil make the Heithen shake at the sounde of his fall, when I cast him downe to hell, with them ſ̄ descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eden, with all the chosē and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitaciōs: for they shal go downe to hell with him, vnto thē that be slayne with the swerde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amōge the Heithē. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious ⁊ greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder ſ̄ earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne with the swerde. Euen thus is it with Pharao ⁊ all his people, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeare, the first daye of the xij. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpō Pharao the kyng of Egipte, ⁊ saye vnto him: "Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the Heithen, ⁊ as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest thy waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters with thy fete, and stampst in their floudes. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: "I wil sprede my net ouer ſ̄, namely, a greate multitude of people: these shal dryne the in to my yarne, for I will cast the vpō the lōde, and let the lye vpō the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt vpō the: I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpō the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyencesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the moūtaynes, ⁊ ⁊ valleys shal be full off the.

When thou art put out, I will couer the heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will sprede a cloude ouer the Sonne, ⁊ the Moone shal not geue hir light. All the lightes off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bringe dareknesse vpon thy londe, saith ⁊ LORDE God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bringe thy destruccion amōge the Heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afrayed thorow ⁊, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at ⁊ daye of thy fall.

For thus saith the LORDE God: the kyng of Babilons swearde shal come vpon ⁊, with ⁊ swearde of the worthies will I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mightie amouge the Gētiles, shal waist the proude pompe of Egipte, and bringe downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nomore vpō the waters: so that nether mān fote ner beastes clawe, shal stere them eny more. Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when ⁊ countre with all that is therin, shalbe layde waist: and whē I smyte all thē which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mournynge, that the daughters off the Heithen shal make: Yee a sorow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saith the LORDE God.

In the xij. yeaere, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge: Thou some of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee ⁊ the mightie people of the Heithē also, euen with thē that dwell beneth: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how fayre so euer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amōge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen already, he shal be drawen forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, ⁊ be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with ⁊ swearde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, ⁊ their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne ⁊ fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his graue: altogether wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare in to ⁊ londe off the luyunge.

There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the luyunge: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to ⁊ graue.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayne thorow the swearde: for seyng that in tymes past they made the londe off the luyunge afrayed, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircumcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the luyunge afrayed.

Shulde not they then lye also amonge ⁊ worthies, and vncircumcised Giauntes? which with their weapens are gone downe to hel: whose swearde are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to ⁊ lōde of ⁊ luyunge? Yee amōge the vncircumcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and prynces also, which with their strēth are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Morouer, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidoniās, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to the pytte. Now when Pharao seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharao & all his hoost, saith the LORD God. For I haue geuē my feare in the lōde of the luyunge. But Pharao & all his people shal lye amōge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saith the LORD God.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Speake to the childrē of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: "the same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Yf a man now heare the noyse off the trompet & will not be warned, and the swearde come ad take him awaye: his bloude shall be vpō his owne heade: For he herde the sōide of the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therefore his bloude be vpon him. But yf he will receaue warnyng, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watch man se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so the people is not warned: yf the swearde come then, and take eny man from amōge thē: the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

33 And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yf I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geuest him not warnyng, that he maye beware off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deluyered thy soule.

Therefore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, Ye saye thus: Oure offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lye (saith the LORD God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, but moch rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lyeue. Turne you, turne you from youre vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

Thou sonne off man, tell the children off thy people: "The righteousnes of the righteous shall not saue him, when so euer he turneth awaye vnfaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, when so euer he couerteth from his vngodlynesse:

And the righteousnesse of the righteous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yf I saye vnto the righteous, that he shall surely lyeue, and so he trust to his owne righteousnesse, and do synne: then shall his righteousnesse be nonore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yf I saye to the wicked: "thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne frō his synnes, and do the thinge that is lauffull and right: In so moch that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doth no wrōge:

Then shall he surely lyeue, and not dye. Yee the synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moch as he doth now the thyng that is lauffull and right, he shall lyeue. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORD is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnright.

34 When the righteous turneth from his righteousnesse, and doeth the thyng that is wicked, he shall dye therefore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lauffull and right, he shall lyeue therefore. Yet ye saye: the waye of the

LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yeaere, the v. daye of the x. Moneth of oure captuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Ierusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: \hat{y} cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORDE had bene vpon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyl the mornynge that he came to me: Yee he opened my mouth, so \hat{y} I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of \hat{y} LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, \hat{a} d he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saieih the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, your eyes haue ye lift vp to Idols, \hat{a} nd haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swardes, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto thē: Thus saieih the LORDE God: As truly as I lyeue, all ye that dwell in this wilderness, shall be slayne with the sward: what so is vpon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and dennes, shall dye off the pestilēce. For I wil make the londe desolate and waist, and \hat{y} pōpe off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauayle therby.

\hat{a} Then shall they lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē I make the lōde waist and desolate, because off all their abhominacions, that they haue wrought. And thou sonne off man, the children off thy people \hat{y} talke of the, by the walles \hat{a} d in the dores of their houses, sayenge one to another: come, let vs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vnto the, after \hat{y} maner of a greate people: yee my people syt downe before the, and heare thy wordes, but they do not thereafter: \hat{c} For in their mouthes they shewe them selues, as though they were feruent, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous lucre. And as a balet \hat{y} hath a swete tune, \hat{a} d is pleasūt to syng, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do thereafter. Whē this commeth to passe (for lo, it cōmeth in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

AND the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, propheeye agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, propheeye, and speake vnto them: Thus saieih the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, \hat{a} that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede \hat{y} flockes?

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but \hat{y} flocke haue ye not nourished: \hat{c} The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: \hat{c} \hat{y} lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled thē. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandringe vpon all moūtaynes and vpon euery hyl, yee they be scatred abroad in all feldes, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

Therefore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyeue, for so moch as my shepe are robbed, and deuoured off all the wykle beestes off the felde, hauynge no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therefore heare \hat{y} worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I my self will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make thē cease from fedyng of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nomore: For I will delyuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saieih the LORDE God: Beholde, \hat{c} I will lōke to my shepe myself, and seke them. Like as a shepherde amōge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, euen so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatted in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bringe them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the cowntre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall their foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes of Israel.

I will fede my shepe myselff, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: "soch as go astraye, wil I brynge agayne: soch as be woüded, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykinge, those will I preserue, and fede them with \hat{y} thinge that is lauffull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, ^b amonge the wethers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture with youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus myshepe must be fayne to eate \hat{y} thinge, that ye haue troden downe with youre fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will scuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so moch as ye haue shot the weake shepe ap^o \hat{y} sydes τ shulders, and runne vpon them with youre hornes, so longe till ye haue vtterly scatted them abrode. I wil helpe my shepe, so \hat{y} they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from another. I wil raise vp vnto them one only shepherde: "euen my seruauit Daud, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherde. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my seruauit Daud shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Morouer, I will make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the woddes.

Good fortune τ prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. ^a A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wodde maye bringe forth their frutes, τ \hat{y} grounde hir increase. They shalbe safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brokē their yocke, and deluyered them out of the hondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore be spoyled of the Heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lode: but safely shal they dwell, τ no man shall fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so \hat{y} they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprove of \hat{y} Heithen eny more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am with them, τ \hat{y} they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saith the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: and I am youre God, saith the LORDE God.

The xxxv. Chapter.

MOROUER, the worde of the LORDE ^a came vnto me, sayenge: Thou soune of man, turne thy face towarde the mount Seir, prophecy vpon it, τ saye vnto it: "Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waist τ desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, τ thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. ^c For so moch as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, τ with a cruel honde hast made them afrayed, what tyme as they were troubled τ punyshed for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lye (saith \hat{y} LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: ^b seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shall bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate τ waist, and bringe to passe, that there shall no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fyll with his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleyes shal lye full of them, that are slayne with \hat{y} swearde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderness, so that noman shal dwell in thy cities: \hat{y} ye maye knowe, how \hat{y} I am the LORDE.

33 And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nacions and both these londes must be myne, & I wil haue them in possession,^a where as the LORDE was there. Therefore, thus saieih the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will hādle the accordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amōge them, how I haue punyshed the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyteful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waist, and geuen vs to deuoure.

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee & multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saieih ŷ LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waist. ^b And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: euen so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, & knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxiii. Chapter.

34 THOU sonne of man, prophecie vpon the mountaynes of Israel, & speake: Heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saieih the LORDE God: Because youre enemie hath sayde vpon you: A ha, ŷ hie euerlastyng places are now become ours: prophecie therfore, & speake: thus saieih ŷ LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted & trodē downe on euery syde, & become a possession vnto ŷ resydue of ŷ Gētiles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes & vnto an euel name amonge ŷ people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saieih the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys & dales, to the voyde wildernesses & desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the resydue of the Heithē: Yee eūē thus saieih the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuoyce, agaynst the resydue of the Gētiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue takē in my lōde vnto thē selues for a possession: which also reioysed frō their whole herte with a despiteful stomacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it.

35 Prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto ŷ mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saieih the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my gelousy and terrible wrath: For so moch as ye haue suffred reprove of the Heithen, therfore thus saieih the LORDE God: I haue sworne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you wil I turne me, that ye maye be tyllid and sowed. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and ŷ decayed places shalbe repayred againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase & bringe frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes thē euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe, ŷ I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. Agayne, thus saieih the LORDE God: For so moch as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no mo men, nether destroye thy people eny more, saieih the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from hensforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprove of the nacions, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saieih the LORDE God.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of mā, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes & ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vnclennesse of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, & because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scatred them also amonge the Heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lōdes. Accordinge to their wayes & after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punysh them.

D Now when they were gone vnto the Heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe? Then spared I my holy name, which y house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therefore tell y house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I do not this for youre sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amōge the Heithen, when ye came to them. Therefore, I wil halowe my greate name agayne, which amonge the Gētiles is euell spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amōge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith y LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the Heithen, and gather you together out of all cōuntries, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe. ⁶Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, & ye shalbe clene: Yee from all youre vnclennesse and from all youre Idols shal I cleanse you. A new herte also wil I geue you, ⁷and a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony hert, I will take it out of youre body, and ⁸geue you a fleszshy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaudemētes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to youre forefathers, & ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vnclēnesse, I wil call for the corne, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no honger. I wil multiplie the frutes of the trees and y increase of the felde for you, so that ye shal beare no more reprove of honger amōge the Heithē. Then shal ye remēbre youre owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginaciōs, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

J But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therefore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal cōse you from all your offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repayre the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waist, in the sight of all them, that wēte by. Then shal it be sayde: This waist lōde is become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and brokē downe cities, are now stronge, and fensed agayne. Then the residue of the Heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repayre that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waist. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of y house of Israel, & do this for them: ¹I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Ierusalem are in the hie solempne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

THE honde of the LORDE came vpon A me, & caried me out in the sprete of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & beholde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & maruelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these bones maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: Prophecy thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breth in to you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with skynne: & so geue you breth, ⁷that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

⁸So I prophecied, as he had cōmaunded me. And as I was prophecience, there came a noyse and a greate mocion, so that the bones rāme euery one to another. Now whē I had lokēd, beholde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboute they were couered with skynne, but there was no breth in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou B sonne of man, prophecie thou towarde the wynde : prophecy, and speake to the wynde : Thus saieyth the LORDE God : Come (o thou ayre) from the foure wyndes, ⁊ blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophecied, as he had commaunded me : Then came the breth in to them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their fete, a maruelous greate sorte.

Morouer, he sayde vnto me : Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye : "oure bones are dried vp, oure hope is gone, we are clene cut of. Therefore prophecie thou, ⁊ speake vnto them. Thus saieyth the LORDE God : Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) ⁊ take you out of youre sepulchres, ⁊ bringe you in to the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe y I am the LORDE, when I open youre graues, ⁊ bringe you out of them. My sprete also wil I put in you, ⁊ ye shal lyue : I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

¶ The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge : Thou sonne of man, take a sticke and wryte vpon it : Vnto Iuda ⁊ to the children of Israel his companys. Then take another sticke, and wryte vpon it : Vnto Ioseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the housholde of Israel his companys. And than take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stycke therof. Now yf the childrē of thy people saye vnto the : wilt thou not shewe vs, what thou meanest by these ? Then geue them this answer : Thus saieyth the LORDE God : Beholde, I wil take the stocke of Ioseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim and of the trybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Iuda, ⁊ make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wrytest, shalt thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saye vnto them :

¶ Thus saieyth the LORDE God : beholde, I wil take awaye the childrē of Israel from amonge the Heithen, vnto whom they be gone, and wil gather them together on euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe : yee I wil make one people of thē in y londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall nomore be two peoples from hensforth, nether be deuyded in to two kingdomes : they shal also defyle the selues nomore with their abhominacions, Idols and all their wicked-doinges. I wil helpe thē out of all their dwellinge places, wherin they haue synned : ⁊ wil so clense them, that they shalbe my people, and I their God.

¶ Daud my seruauit shalbe their kinge, ⁊ they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe ⁊ fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my seruauit, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee euē in the same londe shal they, their children, ⁊ their childers children dwell for euermore : and my seruauit Daud shal be their euerlastyng prynce. Morouer, I wil make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlasting couenaunt. I wil sattle thē also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge thē for euermore.

¶ My dwellinge shalbe with them, yee I wil be their God, ⁊ they shalbe my people. Thus the Heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y holy maker of Israel : whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for euer more.

The xxxviij. Chapter.

¶ AND the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge : Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towarde Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chefe prynce at Mesech and Tubal : prophecy agaynst him, and saye : Thus saieyth the LORDE God : "O Gog thou chefe prynce of Mesech and Tubal : beholde, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the aboute, and put a bytt in thy chawes : I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse ⁊ horsmen, which be all weapened of the best fashion : a greate people, that handle altogether speares, shykles, and swerdes : the Peres, Moryans and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes : Gomer, and all his hoostes : the house of Thogorma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

¶ Therefore prepare the, set thy self in aray with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and be thou their defence. After many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeares thou shalt come in to the lōde, that hath bene destroyed with the swerde, ⁊

now is replenished agayne with dyuerse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which haue lōge lye waist. Yee they be brought out of the nacions, ⁊ dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lōde, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

35 Morouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many things come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt ymagyn myschefe, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor dores) to spoyle them, to robbe thē, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, ⁊ is gathered together from amonge the Heithē, which haue gotten catell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchauntes of Tharsis with all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle? to take syluer and golde: to cary away catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therefore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophecie, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saieth the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwelleth safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people with the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an innumerable sorte. Yee thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the lōde. This shal come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the Heithen maye knowe me, when I get me honoure vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou art he, of whom I haue spoken afore tyme, by my seruauntes ⁊ prophetes of Israel, which prophecied in those dayes ⁊ yeares, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog commeth vp in to the londe of Israel (saieth the LORDE God) shal my indignaciō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure ^a I haue deuyced, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fyszhes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the bestes of the felde, and all the men ⁊ are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vp side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swearde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saieth the LORDE God: so that euery mans swearde shal be vpon another. With pestilēce and bloude wil I punysh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the Heithen: that they maye be sure, how ⁊ I am ⁊ LORDE.

The xxxij. Chapter.

36 THEREFORE o thou sonne of man, ⁊ prophecie agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: ^bthou chefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute, ⁊ carie the forth, ⁊ lede ⁊ from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arrowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Then wil I geue the vnto ⁊ foules and wilde bestes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, saieth the LORDE God.

In to Magog, and amonge those that sit so carelesse in the Iles: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, ⁊ I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I will not let my holy name be euel spoken of enymore: but the very Heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it commeth, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saieth the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in ⁊ cities of Israel, shal go forth and set fyre vpon the weapens, and burne them: shyldes and speres, bowes and arrowes, bylles and clubbes: seuen yeares shall they be burnynge therof, so that they shall els bringe no sticket from ⁊ felde, nether haue nede to hew downe eny out of the wodde: For they shall haue weapens ynew to burne. They shall robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saieyth f LORDE God.

At the same tyme will I geue vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, where thorow men go from the east to the see warde. Those that trauallye therby, shall abhorre it. There shall Gog and all his people be buried: and it shall be called the valley of the people of Gog. Seuen monethes longe shall the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye cense the lōde: Yee all the people of the londe shall burie them. O it shall be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saieyth the LORDE God. They shall ordene men also to be deedburiers, euer goinge thorow the lōde, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be censed. From ende to ende shall they seke, and that vij monethes lōge. Now those that go thorow the londe, where they se a mans bone, they shall set vp a token by it, till the deedburiers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shall be called Hamona: Thus shall they make the londe clene.

And thou sonne of man: thus saieyth the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and euery byrde, yee and to all the wilde beastes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather you rōude aboute vpo my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euen a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eate flesh, and drynke bloude. ^a Ye shall eate f flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the oxen that be all slayne at Basan. Eate f fat youre bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be droncken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Fyl you at my table, with horses t stronge horsmen: with captaynes and all mē of warre, saieyth the LORDE God.

I will bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the Heithen maye se my iudgment, that I haue kepte, and my honde which I haue layed vpon them: that f house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am f LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the Heithen shall knowe, that where as the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte:

it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and deluyered them in to the hondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swearde. Acordinge to their vnclennesse and vnfaiethfull dealinges, so haue I entreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therefore thus saieyth f LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captuyes of Iacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shall be taken awaye: and so safelye shall they dwell in their londe, that no man shall make them afrayed. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am prayed in them before many Heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the Heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nomore from them, but will poure out my sprete vpon the house of Israel,^b saieyth the LORDE God.

The xl. Chapter.

IN the xxv yeare of oure captiuyte, in the begynnynge of the yeare, the x daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij yeare, after that f cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vpo a maruelous hie mountayne, whervpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) towarde the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, t sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shall shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therefore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde

33 rounde aboute the house: the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe τ a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vp the staires, τ measured the postes of the dore: wherof euery one was a meterodde thicke. Euery chambre was a meterodde longe and brode: betwene the chambers were fyue cubites. The poste of the dore within the porche, was one meterodde. He measured also the porche of the ynnerner dore, which conteyned a meterodde. Thē measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eght cubites, and his pilers two cubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde: alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, τ the heyth of the dore xiiij cubites. The edge before the chābres was one cubite brode vpō both the sydes, τ the chambres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured \mathfrak{f} dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, τ one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnerner dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto \mathfrak{f} dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres τ paued workes, made in \mathfrak{f} fore courte rōnde aboute: xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worke was a lōge besyde the dores, and that was the lower paued worke. After this, he measured \mathfrak{f} bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnerner courte of the out syde, which had an hundred cubites vpon the east τ the north parte. And the dore in the vttemost courte towarde the north, measured he after the lēgth and bredth: his thre chambres also on either syde, with his pilers τ fore entries: which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites: his wyndowes τ porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore towarde the east: there were vij steppes to go vp vpō, τ their porche before them. Now \mathfrak{f} dore of the ynnerner courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was towarde \mathfrak{f} north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore towarde \mathfrak{f} south: whose pilers and porches he measured, these had the fyrst measure, τ with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, \mathfrak{f} bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon: his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnerner courte stode towarde the south, τ he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to \mathfrak{f} ynnerner courte, thorow the dore of the south syde: which he measured, τ it had the measure a fore sayde. In like maner, his chambres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hie, τ xxv cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto \mathfrak{f} vttemost courte: vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, acordinge to \mathfrak{f} measure afore sayde. His chābers, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had: τ with his porches he had wyndowes rōnde aboute. The heith was l cubites, \mathfrak{f} bredth xxv cubites: His porches reached vnto the vttemost courte: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the foresayde measure. His chābres, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute: whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode towarde the vttemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose inтраnce was at the dore pilers, and there the burntofferings were waszshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge: to slaye the brentofferings, synneofferings and trespassofferings ther vpon. And on the out syde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure tables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, wherupon they slaughtered. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntofferings, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: wherupon were layed f vessels and ornamentes, which were vsed to, the burnt t slayne offerings, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes foure fyngers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hange flesh vpou, t vpon the tables was layed the offering flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnmer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde y north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also, besyde the east dore north warde.

And he sayde vnto me: " This chambre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the altur: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the altur stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thiknesse also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The lēgth of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The xlii. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, according to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of y dore was x. cubites, t the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. Thē wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore it self was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the lēgth and bredth therof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres y stode rounde aboute f house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpō another, wherof there were xxxij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare thē vp: but in y wall of y house they were not fastened: The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute y house. Thus was it wyder aboue, that from the lowest men might go to the hiest t mydde chābers. I sawe also that the house was very hie rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambres was a meterodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thiknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, t so dyd y outwall of the chābers in y house.

Betwene the chambers, was the wydenes xx. cubites rounde aboute y house. The chambre dores stode ouer agaynst the out wall, the one dore was towarde the north, y other towarde the south: and the thiknesse of the outwall was v cubites rounde aboute. Now the buyldinge that was separated towarde the west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke rōūde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites lōge also. The wydensse before the house and of it y was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chābers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnmer temple, the porch of the fore courte, y syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes them selues were syled ouer with bordes: t thus was it aboute the dore, vnto the ynnmost house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer with greate bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euer betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, y face of a man lokinge asyde towarde the date tre, and a lyous face on the other syde. Thus was it made rōūde aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboute the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypotes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in y vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greate thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpō both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beanes and balkes, like as the house had.

The xliij. Chapter.

THEN caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, & brought me in to the chambre that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnerner courte, & agaynst the paued worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer against another: And before this chābre there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hiest chambres were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmost of y buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.

The wall without that stode by y chambres towarde the vttemost courte vpon the fore syde of the chambres, was L. cubites lōge: for the lēgh of y vttemost chambers in the fore courte was L. cubites also: but the length therof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambres had vnder them an inтраunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chābers also, which had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inтраunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee euen like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the waye towarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stōde before the backe buyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offrings: and there must they laye the most holy offrings: meat offrings, synneoffrings & trespaceoffrings, for it is an holy place. When the prestes come therin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seyngge they be holy) they shal leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue eny thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnerner house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with y meterodde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meteroddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so moch. The other two sydes also towarde the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meteroddes. So he measured all y foure sydes where there wente a walle rounde aboute v. C. meteroddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholly.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO he brought me to y dore, that turneth towarde the east. Beholde, thē came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar.^a Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me in to y^e ynnermer courte: ⁊ beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

3 I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: ^b O thou sonne of man, this rowme is my seate, and the place of my fote-steppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: nether thei, ner their kinges, thorow their whordome, thorow their hie places, ⁊ thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholdes in maner harde vpon my thresholdes, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwixte me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherefore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put away their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonge them for euermore. ^c Therefore (o thou sonne of man) shewe thou the housholde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and descripcion therof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, y^e they maye kepe ⁊ fulfill all the fashions and customes therof.

8 This is the descripcion of the house: Aboue vpo^e the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shalbe y^e holiest of all. Beholde, that is the descripcion and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the altar (after the true cubite: which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heyth of the altar: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, ⁊ the bredth but one cubite.

^g The altar was foure cubites hie, ⁊ from the altar vpwarde stode foure hornes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the altar was xiiij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towarde the easte. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saieith the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the altar, in the daye whē it is made, to offre burntofferings, and to sprenkle bloude ther vpon. ^h To the prestes, to y^e Leuites that be of the sede of Sadoch, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saieith the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: ⁊ take the bloude of him ⁊ sprenkle his foure hornes withal, ⁊ the foure corners of the altar coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: herewith shalt thou cense it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullocke also of the synoffringe, ⁊ burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

9 The nexte daye, take a gootbuck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the altar withall: like as it was reconciled with y^e bullocke. Now when thou hast made it cleane, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: ⁱ Offre them before the LORDE, and let the prest cast salt therupon, and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burntoffringe. Seuen dayes shalt thou bringe, every daye a gootbucke. A yonge bullocke ⁊ a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shal they offre. Seuen dayes shal they reconcile and cense the altar, ⁊ offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and so forth, the prestes shal offre their burntofferings and healthofferings vpo^e y^e altar: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saieith the LORDE God.

The xliiij. Chapter.

10 AFTER this, he brought me agayne to y^e outwarde dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for eny mā to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The prynce himself shal come thorow it, that he maye eate bred before the LORDE. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. ^aThen brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I loked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligēt hede to all that I wil saye vnto thee, concernyng all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: ponde well with thine herte the comyng in of the house and the goyng forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate housholde of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominaciōs, seyng that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary straungers, hauyng vncircumcised hertes & flesh, where thorow my Sāctuary is defiled, whē ye offre my bred, fat, & bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenant, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary: but set keepers of my Sanctuary, euen after youre owne mynde. Therefore thus saith ŷ LORDE God: Of all the straungers that dwell amōge the childrē of Israel, no straunger (whose herte & flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: No ner the Leuites that be gone backe fro me, and haue discaued the people of Israel with errours, goyng after their Idols: therefore shal thei beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordered to ministre, vnder the dores of the house of my Sanctuary? and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burntofferings and sacrifices for ŷ people: to stōde before them, and to serue them: seyng the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and cause the house of Israel to stamble thorow wickednesse?

^bFor the which cause I haue plucked out myne honde ouer them (saith the LORDE) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nye me, to serue me with their preasheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holyest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abhominacions, which they haue done. Shulde I vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce ŷ is done therein? ^cBut the prestes ŷ Leuites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORDE God.

They shall go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpon myne ordinaunces. Now whē they go in at the dores of the ymmermer courte, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no wollyne come vpon them: whyle they do seruyce vnder the dores of ŷ ymmermer courte, and within. They shal haue fayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge breches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherin they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitacion of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they onhalowe ŷ people with their clothes.

^dThey shal not shaue their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but rōude their heades only. ^eAll the prestes that go in to the ymmost courte, shall drynke no wyne. They shall mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir huszbonde: but a mayde of the sede of the house of Israel, or a wydowe, that hath had a prest before.

^fThey shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and vnholy, betwixte the clene and vnclene. Yf eny discorde aryse, they shal discern it, and geue sentence after my iudgmentes. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. ^gThey shal come at no deed persone, to defyle them selues: (excepte it be father or mother, sonne or daughter, brother or sister that hath had yett no huszbonde) in soch they maye be defyled.

And when he is clenched, there shal be rekened vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go in to the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synoffringe saith the LORDE God. ^hThey shall haue an heretage, yee I my self wilbe their heretage: els shall ye geue thē no possession in Israel, for I am their possession. The meatoffringe, synoffringe & trespass offering shal they eate, and euery dedicate thinge in Israel, shalbe theirs. The firstlinges of all the first frutes, and all fre willoffringes shal be the prestes.

Ye shall geue vnto the prest also the firstlinges of youre dowe, that God maye prospere the resydue. "But no deed carion shal the prest eate, ner such as is deuoured of wilde bestes, foules or catell.

The xlv. Chapter.

WHEN ye deuyde the lōde by the lott, ye shal put asyde one parte for the LORDE, ^bto be holy from other londes: namely, xxv M meteroddes longe, and x M brode. This shalbe holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this parte there shal be-lyge vnto the Sanctuary v C meteroddes in all the foure corners, and l cubites wyde rounde aboute to the suburbes. And from this measure, namely of xxv M metteroddes longe, and x M brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy grounde shall be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORDE, and go in before the LORDE to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Leuites that serue in the house, there shalbe geuen xx habitacions, of the xxv M lēgth & x M bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessiō of v M meteroddes brode, & xxv M longe, besyde the parte of y Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole house of Israel. Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuaries parte, & by the cite, there shalbe geuen vnto the prynce, what so euer lyeth ouer agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shalbe as longe as one parte, frō y west vnto y east.

This shalbe his owne lōde in Israel, that my princes be nomore chargeable vnto my people. And such as remayneth yet ouer in the londe, shalbe geuen to the house of Israel accordinge to their trybes. Thus saiethe the LORDE God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leaue of, handle now accordinge to the thinge, that is equal and lafull: and thrust out my people nomore, sayeth y LORDE God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

^dThe Epha & the Bat shalbe a like. One Bat shal cōteyne y tēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after y Homer. One Sytle maketh xx. Geras. ^eSo xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the Heaue offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaued: namely, the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one lābe from two hundredth shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōcile them. sayeth the LORDE God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the prynces part to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynk-offrynges vnto the LORDE, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, brentoffrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recōcile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth y LORDE God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemysh, and clense the Sanctuary.

So the prest shal take of the bloude of y synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure corners of the aulter, with the dorepostes of the ynnermer courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of y moneth (for such as haue synned of ignorance, or beyng discaued) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon y xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. ^fSeuē dayes shal the feast contynue, wherin there shal no sower ner leuēded bred be eatē.

Vpon the same daye shal y prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are with out blemysh, for a burntoffrynge vnto the LORDE: & an he goate daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shal geue euery an Epha to a bullocke, an Epha to a ram, τ an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Vpon y^{v} xv. daye of the seuenth moneth, he shal kepe the seuen dayes holy one after another, euē as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burntoffrynge, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The xlvi. Chapter.

THUS sayeth the LORDE God: y^{d} dore of the ymermer courte towarde the east, shall be shut the vj. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shalbe opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, τ stonde still without by the dore cheke. So y^{p} prestes shall offre vp his burnt τ healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipe at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but y^{d} dore shal nomore be shut till the euenyng.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipe before the LORDE, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the prynce shall bringe vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemysh, τ a ram without blemysh, and an Epha for a meatoffrynge, with y^{r} ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, τ an Hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke with out blemysh, sixe lambes τ a ram also without blemysh. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatoffrynge: but to y^{r} lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cometh, he shall go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipe, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at y^{n} north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shall go in and out amonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shalbe the meatoffrynge: An Epha to a bullock, and an Epha to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Now when the prynce bryngeth a burntoffrynge oran healthoffrynge with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east dore shalbe opened vnto him, y^{d} he maye do with his burnt τ healthoffrynges, as he doth vpō the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie bryng vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yeare olde without blemish for a burntoffrynge: this shall he do euery mornynge. And for a meatoffrynge he shal geue the sixte parte of an Epha, τ the thirde parte of an Hin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) euery mornynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meatofferynge vnto the LORDE, for an euerlasting ordinance: τ thus shal the lambe, the meatofferynge and oyle be geuen euery mornynge, for a dailie burntofferynge.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Yf the prynce geue a gifte vnto eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his somes heretage perpetuall, y^{d} he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruauantes some of his heretage, y^{d} it shall be his to the fre yeare, and thē to returne agayne vnto y^{d} prynce: y^{d} for his heretage shalbe his sonnes only. The prynce also shal take none of the peoples inheritaunce, ner put thē from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abrode, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the intrance at the syde of the dore to y^{d} habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to y^{p} prestes and stode towarde the north, τ beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shall dight the trespase and synoffrynges, τ bake y^{r} meatoffrynges: that they nede not beare thē in to the outwarde courte, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vttemost courte, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in euery corner of y^{r} fore courte, there was yet a litle courte. Yee in all the foure corners of the courte, there was made a litle courte of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, τ there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were harthes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the kechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offerynges of the people.

The xlvij. Chapter.

AFTER this he brought me agayne before the dore of the house: ⁊ beholde, there guszshed out waters from vnder ſ̄ postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode towarde the east) that ranne downe vpo the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the alther south warde. Thē caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the vttemost dore, ſ̄ turneth eastwarde. Beholde, ⁊ there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now whan the man ſ̄ had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east dore, he measured a M. cubites, ⁊ thē he brought me thorow ſ̄ water, eūc to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, ⁊ brought me thorow ſ̄ water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, ſ̄ I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, o thou soune of man? and with that, he brought me to the ryuer banck agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer bācke. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out towarde the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, ⁊ maketh the waters whole. Yee all that liue and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recouer. And where this water cōmeth, there shalbe many fysh. For all that commeth to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this ryuer shal the fyszshers stonde from Engaddi vnto En Eglaim, ⁊ there sprede out their nettes: for there shalbe greate heapes of fysh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, nether shal their frute perish: ^b but euer be rype at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. His frute is good to eate, and his leaf profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, wherin ye shall deuyde the londe vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: ^c of the which lōde I swore vnto youre fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zadada: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabarim: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazar Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauerā. Thus the borders frō the see forth, shalbe Hazar Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Haueran and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by Iordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Tamar forth to the waters of strife vnto Cades, ^d the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greete see from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, accordinge to the trybes of Israel, and deuyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straigers that dwell amōge you, and begette children.

For ye shal take them amonge the childrē of Israel, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childrē of Israel.

Loke in what trybe the straunger dwelleth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saieith the LORDE God.

The xlvijij. Chapter.

THESE are ſ̄ names of the trybes that lye vpon the northsyde, by the waye of Hetlon, tyll thou comest vnto Hemath and Hazar Enam, the borders of Damascus towarde the north besyde Hemath: Dan shal haue his porciō from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shal Asser haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Asser frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Nephtali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Nephtali from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shal Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shal Ruben haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Iuda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Iuda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shal set a syde one porciō of xxv. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west,) wherin the Sanctuary shal stōde.

B As for the porcion, that ye shal^e separate out for the LORDE, it shalbe xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shal belonge vnto these: namely to the prestes, towarde the north xxv. M. τ towarde the west x. M. brode, towarde the east x. M. brode also, τ towarde the south xxv. M. longe, wherin the Sanctuary of the LORDE shal stonde. Yee this same place shal be the prestes, \hat{y} are of the childrē of Sadoch, ^a τ haue kepte my holy ordinaunce: which wente not astraye in the erreure of the children of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shalbe the most holy, hardē vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the prestes, shal the Leuites haue xxv. M. lōge and x. M. brode. This shalbe on euery syde xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porciō they shal sell nothings, ner make eny permutacion therof, lest the chefe of the londe fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORDE.

C The other v. M. after the bredth, \hat{y} lyeth by the xxv. M. shalbe comon: it shal belonge to the cite and to the suburbes for habitacions, and \hat{y} cite shal stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: towarde \hat{y} north parte, v. C. τ iiij. M: towarde the south parte, v. C. τ iiij. M: towarde the east parte, v. C. and iiij. M: towarde \hat{y} west parte, v. C. and iiij. M.

The suburbes hardē vpon the cite, shall haue towarde the north, L. and ij. C: towarde the south, L. and two C: towarde the east, L. and two C: towarde the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy ground: namely, x. M. towarde the east and x. M. towarde the west, next vnto the holy porciō: it and the increase therof shal serue for their meate, that labour in the cite. They that labour for the welth of the cite, shall manteine this also, out of what tribe so euer they be in Israel.

All that is separated of the xxv. M. longe and xxv. M. brode on the foure partes, \hat{y} shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, τ for the possession of \hat{y} cite. The resydue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, ^cshall belonge to the prynce, before the place of \hat{y} xxv. M. vnto the east ende, τ before the place of \hat{y} xxv. M. westwarde, vnto the borders of \hat{y} cite: this shalbe \hat{y} prynces porciō. This shalbe the holy place, and the house of the Sanctuary shal stonde in the myddest. Morouer, from the Leuites and the cities possession, \hat{y} lye in the myddest of the prynces parte: loke what remaineth betwixe the border of Iuda τ the border of Ben Iamin, it shal be the prynces.

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Iamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Iamin frō the east syde vnto \hat{y} west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Symeō from the east parte vnto the west, shal Isachar haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Isachar from the east syde vnto the west, shal Sabulon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Sabulon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Gad haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Gad southwarde, the coastes shal reach frō Thamar forth vnto the waters of strife to Cades, and to the floude, euen vnto the mayne see.

^dThis is \hat{y} lōde with his porciōs, which ye shal distribute vnto the trybes of Israel, saieth \hat{y} LORDE God. Thus wyde shal the cite reach: vpon the north parte v C and iiij M measures. The portes of the cite, shal haue the names of the trybes of Israel. Three portes of \hat{y} northsyde: One Ruben, another Iuda, the thirde Leui.

Vpō \hat{y} east syde, v C τ iiij M measures, with \hat{y} thre portes: The one Ioseph, another Bē Iamin, the thirde Dan. Vpon the south syde v C and iiij M measures, with the thre portes: the one Symeon, another Isachar, the thirde Sabulon. And vpon the west syde v C and iiij M measures, with thre portes also: the one Gad, another Asser, the thirde Nephtali. Thus shal it haue xvij M measures rōude aboute. And from that tyme forth, \hat{y} name of the cite shal be: the LORDE is there.

Certaine reuelacions of thinges for to come : some, of the delyuerance frö the captiuyte of Babilon : some, of the destruccion of Ierusalem : some, concernyng the latter dayes.

The first Chapter.

IN ȳ thirde yeare of ȳ raigne of Ioachim kyng off Iuda, ⁊ came Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon vnto Ierusalem, ⁊ beseged it : and the LORDE delyuered Ioachim the kyng off Iuda in to his honde, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried away vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god, and there brought them in to his gods treasury. And the kyng spake vnto Asphenes ȳ chefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynges sede and of prynces, yöge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but fayre and wellfaoured, instructe in all wisdome, connyng and vnderstödinge : which were able to stonde in the kynges palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kinge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he drancke himselff, so to norish the thre yeare : that afterwarde they might stonde before the kyng. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Iuda : namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chefe chamberlayne gauē other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar : Ananias, Sydrac : Misael, Misac : and Asarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt with himself, that he wolde not be defyled thorow the kynges meate, ⁊ ner ȳ wyne which he dröke. And this he desyred off the chefe chäberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himselff. So God gaue Daniel faouore and grace before f chefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, ad so ye shal make me loose my heade vnto f kynge.

C Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Asarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynges meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter, ad proued thē x. dayes. And after f ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge t fatter, then all the yonge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynges meate.

B Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes connyng and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstandinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to bryng in these yonge springaldes vnto him: the chefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge commoned with them. But amonge them all were founde none such as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Asarias. Therefore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstodinge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, thē all the soysayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yere of kynge Cyrus.

The ij. Chapter.

A IN the secöde yere off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, "where thorow his sprete was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge cömaunded to call together all f soysayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, t my sprete was so troubled therewith, f I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answeare, ad sayde: It is gone fro me: Yf ye wil not make me vnderstonde the dreame with the interpretation theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be prysed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meanyng therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the signification of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceae off a treuth, that ye do but prolöge f tyne: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therefore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye fayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to put off the tyne. Therefore tell me the dreame, ad so shall I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it meaneth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answeare before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which f kynge speaketh of: Yee there is nether kynge prynce ner lorde, that euer axed soch thinges at a soysayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyeth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

For f which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciö, and cömaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and f proclamacion wete forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cöpanyons. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynges stewarde, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth already to kyli soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kynges debyte: Why hath the kynge proclaimed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kinge, f he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretacion: and then came he home agayne ⁊ shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael ⁊ Asarias his companiōs: ⁊ they shulde beseke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other such as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel prayed ⁊ God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be prayed for euer and euer, for wysdome and strength are his owne: he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde: he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth ⁊ thyng that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him.^a I thanke the, and prayse the (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, ⁊ hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynges matter vnto me.

¶ Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kinge had ordered to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not such as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kyng, and I shal shewe the kyng the interpretation. Then Arioch brought Daniel in to the kyng in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue founde a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, ⁊ shal shewe the kinge the interpretation. Thē answered the kyng, and sayde vnto Daniel, whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, ⁊ cāst shewe me ⁊ dreame, which I haue sene, ⁊ the interpretation therof? Daniel answered the kyng to his face, and sayde: As for this secrete, for the which the kinge maketh inquisition: it is nether the wyse, the sorcerer, the charmer ner the deuell coniuurer, that can certifie the kyng off it: Only God in heauē cā open secretes, and he it is, that sheweth the kinge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kyng, thou didest cast in thy mynde, what shulde come herafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secrete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more then eny other lyuynge: but only that I might shewe the kyng the interpretation, ⁊ that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kyng sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose figure was maruelous greate, and his vysage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body ad loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte of earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (without eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone^d which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake thē to poulder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from ⁊ somer floores, that they cā nomore be foude. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kyng, what it meaneth.

¶ O kyng, thou art a kyng off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geuē the a kyngdome, ryches, strength and maiesty: ⁊ hath deliuered the all thinges, that are amōge ⁊ children off men: the beastes off the felde, ad the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that goldē heade. After ⁊ there shal aryse another kyngdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrde kyngdome shal be lyke copper, and haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth kyngdome shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron brusseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beateth euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheless shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifieth: that it shalbe a kyngdome partly stronge and partly weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues with ⁊ sede off symple people, ⁊ yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be soldered with a potsherde.

¶ In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny bondes there was cut out of the mount a stone,^b which brake the yron, the copper, y^e earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath y^e greate God shewed the kynges, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kyng Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat-offrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kyng answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kyng made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lorde of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kyng for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remaind still in the courte by the kynges.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ NABUCHODONOSOR the kynges caused a goldē ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hie, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon^a sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes & nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites and shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: y^e they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kynges had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them to gether, and came vnto the dedicatyng of y^e ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynges had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedellier cried out with all his might: O ye people, kyureddes and tinges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, with y^e harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ymage, y^e Nabuchodonosor the kynges hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, Psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: thē all the people, kyureddes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynges had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused y^e Iewes, and sayde vnto kyng Nabuchodonosor: O kynges, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beyng kynges hast geuen a commaudemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so thē fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certayne Iewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offyces of the londe off Babilon:^c namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kynges) regarde not thy comaudemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, y^e Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kynges. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes? nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp? wel, be redy hereafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trompettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y^e other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshipe the ymage which I haue made. But yf ye worshipe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, y maye delyuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kyng, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto y in this matter, for why: oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hote burnynge ouen (O kyng) and can right wel delyuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (o kyng) that we will not serue thy goddes, ner do reuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that y countenance of his face chaunged vpō Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charched and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wōte to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ad cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kyngs commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was exceedynge hote. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in y hote burnynge ouen,^a beinge fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his councel and sayde: dyd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kyng: Yee o kyng. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goynge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothinge corrupte: and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wēte Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he speake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruauntes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges councell came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies:^d In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes vunchanged: Yee there was no smell of fyre felt vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: Blessed be the God of Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, ad defended his seruauntes, that put their trust in him: y haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies thervpon: rather then they wolde serue or worshippe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaūde, that all people, kynreddes & tungen, which speake eny blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe prysed: Because, there is no God y maye saue, as this. So the kyng promoted Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.

^e Nabuchodonosor kyng, vnto all people, kynreddes and tungen that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amōge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokēs & maruelous workes, y y hye God hath wrought vpon me. ^h O how greate are his tokēs, & how mightie are his wonders? His kyngdome is an euerlasting kyngdome, and his power lasteth for euer and euer.

The iiii. Chapter.

I NABUCHODONOSOR beyng at rest in myne house, ad flourishinge in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afraied: ad the thoughtes that I had vpō my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wiszdome at Babilō shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretacion of the dreame. So there came the soythayers, charmers, Caldees and coniuers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, accordinge to the name of my God) which hath the sprete of the holy goddes in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynce of saythsayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, and no secrete is hyd from the: tel me therfore, what y visio of my dreame (y I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde, which was very hye, greate and mightie: ⁊ heyth reached vnto the heauē, and the bredth extended to all the endes of the earth: his leaues were fayre, he had very moch frute, so ⁊ euery mā had ynough to eate therin.

The beastes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed of it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: ⁊ beholde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightely, sayenge: Hew downe the tre, breake off his braunches, shake of his leaues, and scatre his frute abroad: that all the beestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his braunches. Neuertheles leaue the gronde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the gronde with other wyld beastes.

That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundment grounded and sought out in the council off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hyst hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ⁊ geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, ⁊ I kyng Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therefore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for ⁊ sprete of the holy Goddes is in the.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ⁊ his thoughtes troubled him. So the kyng spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my lorde, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate ⁊ mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaues were fayre, ⁊ the frute moch: vnder the which the beastes of the felde had their habitacion, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (o kyng) art the tre, greate ⁊ strōge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, ⁊ reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kyng sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the gronde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: He shall be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parte shalbe with the beestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (o kyng) is ⁊ interpretaciō, yee it is the very deuyce of him, ⁊ is hyst of all, ⁊ it toucheth my lorde the kyng.

Thou shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an ox. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hyst hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, ⁊ geueth them, to whom he lyst. Morouer, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be left still in the gronde: it betokeneth, ⁊ thy kyngdome shall remaine whole vnto ⁊, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power commeth from heauen. Wherefore (o kinge) be cōtēt with my council, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightuousnesse, ⁊ thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for such thynges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kyng Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kyng walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power ⁊ strength) haue made a kynges courte, for the honoure off my magesty. Whye these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heauē, sayenge: O kinge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be cast out of mens company: thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an ox, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hyst hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vpō Nabuchodonosor: so that he was cast out off mēs cōpany, & ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as great as Aegles fethers, and his nales like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonor lift vp myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vnderstandinge was restored vnto me agayne. Then gaue I thanks vnto the hyst. I magnified and prayed him that lyueth for euermore, whose power endureth allwaye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, ^a are to be reputed as nothinge.

He handleth accordinge to his will, amōge [¶] powers of heauen [¶] & amonge the inhabitours of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: ' what doest thou? At the same tyme was myne vnderstondynge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kyngdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My great estates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshippe.

The dyd I Nabuchodonor, loaue, magnifie and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bringe them downe.

The b. Chapter.

BALTHASAR the kyng made a greate banquet to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken with wyne, he commaunded to brynge him [¶] golden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonor had taken out of the temple at Ierusalem: ^d that the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drie therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was takē out of the temple of the LORDES house at Ierusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubines dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and prayed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde writynge, right ouer agaynst the candelsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of [¶] honde [¶] wrote. Then chaunged the kyng his countenance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherefor the kyng cryed mightly, that they shulde brynge him the charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels. The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanyng theroff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men: but they coude nether rede the wrytynge, ner shewe the kyng what it signified. The was the kyng sore afrayed, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore vexed. So by reason off this matter, [¶] had happened to the kyng & his lordes, the quene went vp herself in to the banquet house, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer: Let not thy thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in thy kyngdome, that hath the sprete of the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstondingē ad wysdome like the goddes. Yee the kyng Nabuchodonor thy father made this man chefe of the sothsayers, charmers, Caldees and deuell coniurers: because that soch an abundaunt sprete, knowlege & wisdome (to expōude dreames, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kinge. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the presoners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Iewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstōdinge, and that there hath bene greate wisdome founde in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wise and conynge charmers, to rede this wrytynge, and to shewe me the meanyng theroff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, [¶] thou canst expōude darcke thinges, and declare harde doutes.

Well than, yf thou canst rede this writinge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne of golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

D Daniel answered, and sayde before \hat{y} kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue thy rych giftes to another: ^a yet not thelesse, I wil rede the wrytynge vnto \hat{y} kyng, and shewe him the interpretation therof. O kyng, God the hyst gane vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, ^b \hat{y} dignite of a kyng, with worshippe & honoure: so \hat{y} all people, kynredde & tunges stode in awe & feare of him, by reason off the hie estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. ^c But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulness: he was deposed from his kyngly throne, and his magesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellynge was with the wylde Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyst had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

E And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy self aboute the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wyne therout: And hast prayed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, ^d in whose honde consisteth thy breth \hat{a} d all thy wayes: thou hast not loaued him.

Therefore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token vp this wrytynge. And this is the scripture, that is written vp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretation off the thynges is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art founde to light: Phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth

Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. ^e The very same night was Balthasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beyng lxij. yeare off age.

The vi. Chapter.

IT pleased Darius to set ouer his kigdome ^a an C. and xx. lordes, which shulde be in all his kyngdome aboute. Aboute these he set thre prynces (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might geue accomptes vnto them, and the kyng to be vndiseased.

But Daniel exceeded all these princes \hat{a} d lordes, for the sprete off God was plenteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherefore the prynces and lordes sought, to pyke out in Daniel some quarell agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fawte vpon him. For why: he was so faythful, \hat{y} there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the princes and lordes together vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: kyng Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

All the great estates off the realme: as \hat{y} prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are determed to put out a commaundement off \hat{y} kyng, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyret hie eny peticion, ether of eny god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast in to the Lyons denne. Wherefore, o kyng, confirme thou this statute, and make a wrytynge: that the thynges which the Medes and Perses haue ordered be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wrytynge, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wrytynge was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall towarde Ierusalem stode open. There kneled he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his peticion, and prayed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his petition, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kyng, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: O kyng, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyreth his petition off any god or man, but only of thyself, o kyng: he shalbe cast in to the denne of the Lyons? The kyng answered, and sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of y Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kyng: Daniel one of the prisoners of Iuda (O kyng) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his petition thre tymes a daye. When the kyng herde these wordes, he was sore greued, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to delyuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne wete downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kyng) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kyng maketh, maye not be altered. Then the kyng bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him in to the Lyons denne.

The kyng also spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kyng sealed with his owne ryng, and with y signet of his prynces: that the kynges commaundement concernynge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kyng wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take eny slepe. But be tymes in the mornynge at the breake off the daye, the kyng arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto y denne, he cried with a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee y kige spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruauot off the lyuyng God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to delyuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kyng: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer:

b My God hath sent his angel, which hath shut the Lyons mouthes, so that they might not hurte me. For why: myne vngiltynesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kyng) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kyng excedinge glad, and commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the denne, and no maner of hurte was founde vpō him. For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kige commaunded to bringe them, and to cast them in the Lyons denne: them, their children and their wyues. So the Lyons had the mastry of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or euer they came at the grounde.

After this, wrote kyng Darius vnto all people, kynredes and tungen, that dwelt in all loundes: peace be multiplied with you: My commaundement is, in all my dominiō and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:

For he is the lyuing God, which abydeth euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is euerlastynge. It is he that delyuereth, and saueh: he doth wonders and maruelous workes, in heauen and in earth: he hath preserued Daniel from the power of the Lyons. This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cirus of Persia.

The vij. Chapter.

IN the first yere off Balthasar kyng off Babilon, sawe Daniel a dreame, and a vision was in his heade vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe off the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of y heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnlike another.

The first was as a lyon, and yet had he Aegles wynges. I sawe, that his wynges were plucte from him, and he taken awaye from the earth: that he stode vpon his fete as a man, and that there was geuen him a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde best was like a Beer, and stode vpon the one syde. Amonge his teth in his mouth he had iij. greate lōge teth and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eate vp moch flesh.

Then I loked, and beholde, there was another like vnto a Leopard: this had wynges as a foule, euen foure vpon the backe. This beest had foure heades, and there was power geuen him. ^a After this I sawe in a vision by night, ^b and beholde: the fourth beest was grymme and horrible, and maruelous stronge. It had greate yron teth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder fete. It was farre vnlike the other beestes that were before it: ^c for it had ten hornes, wheroff I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge the, another like horne, before whom there were thre of the first hornes plucked awaye. Beholde, this horne had eyes like a mā, and a mouth speakyng presumptuous things. I looked till the seates were prepared, and till the olde aged sat him downe. His clothinge was as white as snowe, and the hayres of his heade like the pure woll.

His trone was like the fire flame, and his wheles as the burnyng fyre. There drew forth a fire streame, and wente out from him. ^d A thousand tymes a thousande serued him, x. M. tymes ten thousande stode before him. The iudgment was set, and the bookes opened. Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which that horne spake.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, and geuen ouer to be brent in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by night, and beholde: there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power and dignite regall, ^e that all people, trybes and tungen shulde serue him. His power is an euerlasting power, which shall neuer be put downe: and his kyngdome endureth incorrupte. ^f My herte was vexed, and I Daniel had a troubled sprete within me, and the visions off my heade made me afrayed: till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these things. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstode the interpretaciō of these things.

These foure greate beastes, are foure kynges which shall aryse out of the earth. These shall take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more and more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnlike the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teth were of yron, and his nales off brasse: which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the resydue vnder his fete. ^g I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face there fell downe thre: which horne had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous things, and looked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same horne made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee and gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geuen to the chefest sayntes: and till the tyme, that the sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shalbe the fourth kyngdome vpon earth: it shalbe more then all other kyngdomes, it shall deuoure, treade downe and destroye all other londes.

The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shall aryse out of that kyngdome, after whō there shall stonde vp another, which shall be greater then the first.

He shall subdue thre kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shall destroye the sayntes of the most hyest, and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. ^h They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and half a tyme.

But the iudgment shalbe kepte, so that his power shalbe taken from him, for he shall be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, ⁱ whose kyngdome is euerlastinge, yee all powers shall serue and obeye him. Thus fare extēde the wordes.

Neuerthelesse, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenance chaanged, ^j but the wordes I kepte still in my herte.

The viij. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare off the raigne of kinge Balthasar, there appeared a visiō vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. "I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in y vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Vlai.

Then I loked vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hiest came vp last. I sawe that this ramme puszhed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcely vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very fearece vpon him: yee he gaue him soch a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Nether had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to delyuer the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed exceedinge greate, and when he was at the strongest, his greate horne was broken also. Then grewe there other foure soch like in the steade, towarde the foure wyndes off the heauen. ⁶ Yee out of one of the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet another horne, which waxed maruelous greate: towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the fayre pleasaunt londe. It grewe vp to the hoost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fete.

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prospere in all thinges, that it went aboute. Vpon this I herde one off the sayntes speakeynge, which saynte sayde vnto one that axed this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fote? And he answered him: Vnto the euenynge ⁊ the morninge, euen two thousande and thre hūdreth dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be clenسد agayne.

Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the vnderstandinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Vlai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstonde the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cōminge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was speakeynge vnto me, I waxed faynte, so that I suncke downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayenge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wrath: for in the tyme appoynted it shal be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kyng off the Medes ad Perses: but the goate is the kyng off Greke londe: the greate horne that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the pryncipall kyng. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifyeth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodlynesse is a growinge) there shall aryse a kyng off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shalbe mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboute measure, and all that he goeth aboute, shall prospere: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynes, falsede shall prospere in his honde, his herte shall be proude, and many one shall he put to death in his welthynesse. He shal stonde vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shalbe destroyed without honde. ^aAnd this vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the evenyng and the morninge. Therefore wryte thou vp this sight, ^bfor it wylbe longe or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel very faynte, so that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but when I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busynesse, and marueled at the vision, neuerthelesse no man knewe of it.

The ij. Chapter.

IN the first yeaere off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, ^cwhich was of the sede off the Medes, ^dand was made kyngue ouer the realme off the Caldees: Yee euen in the first yeaere off his raigne, I Daniel desyred to knowe the yearly nombre out of the booke, ^ewherof the LORDE spake vnto Ieremy the prophet: that Ierusalem shulde lie waist lxx. yeaeres: ^fand I turned me vnto God the LORDE, ^gfor to praye and make myne intercessio, with fastinge, sack cloth ^hand ashes I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowledged, sayenge:

O LORDE, thou greate ⁱand fearfull God, thou that kepest couenauant and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commaundementes: ^jWe haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe: yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and iudgments.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure fore fathers, and to all the people off the londe. ^kO LORDE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertayneth nothyng but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man off Iuda, and to them that dwell at Ierusalem:

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye: thorow out all londes, wherin thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

Yee o LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kynges ^land prynces, to oure fore fathers: euen to vs all, that haue offended the, ^mbelongeth open shame.

33 But vnto the o LORDE oure God, pertayneth mercy and forgouenesse. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes: ⁿye all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not herkened vnto thy voyce.

^oWherfore the curse and ooth, that is writen in the law of Moses the seruauit of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wordes, ^pwhich he spake agaynst vs, ^qand agaynst oure iudges that iudged vs: to bringe vpon vs such a greate plage, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Ierusalem. Yee all this plage, as it is writen in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therefore hath ^rthou LORDE made haist, to bringe this plage vpon vs: for the LORDE oure God is rightuous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, o LORDE oure God, thou that ^swith a mightie honde hast brought thy people out of Egipte, to get thy self a name, which remaineth this daye: we haue synned (o LORDE) ^tand done wickedly agaynst all thy rightuousnes: yet let thy wrothfull displeasure be turned awaye (I beseke the) from thy cite Ierusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers: is Ierusalem and thy people abhorred, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therefore (O oure God) heare the prayer of thy seruauit, and his intercession: O let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waist.

O my God, encline thine eare, and herken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated, yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name: For we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne rightuousnesse, no: but only in thy greate mercies. O LORDE, heare: O forgeue LORDE: O LORDE conside, tary not ouer longe: but for thine owne sake do it, O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

As I was yet speakeing at my prayers, ^uknowlinge myne owne synnes and ^vthy synnes of my people, makinge so myne intercession before the LORDE my God, for the holy hils sake of my God: yee whyle I was yet speaking in my prayer, beholde. the mā Gabriel (whom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute f offeringe tyme in the euenyng. Wherfore, pondre the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstonde the vision. Lxx. wekes are determed ouer thy people, ⁊ ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse maye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bringe in euerlastinge rightuousnesse, to fulfill f visions and the prophetes, and to anoynte the most holy one. Vnderstode this then, and marcke it well: that from the tyme it shalbe concluded, to go and repayre Ierusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoynted) prynce: there shalbe seuen wekes. Then shall the stretes ⁊ walles be buylded agayne lxij. wekes, but with harde troublous tyme. Afither these lxij. wekes, shal Christ be slayne, ⁊ they shal haue no pleasure in him. Then shal there come a people with the prynce, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shal come as the water floude. But the desolacion shall continue till the ende of the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space of a weke: and when the weke is half gone, he shal put downe the slayne and meatoffringe. ^d And in the temple there shalbe an abhominable desolaciō, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, f this waistinge shal continue vnto the ende.

The 1. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare of kinge Cirus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a longe tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceived what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of thre wekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for flesh and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anoynte my self, till the whole thre wekes were out.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greate floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and lokod: and beholde, a man clothed in lynnyng, whose loynes were gyrled vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Christolite stone, his face (to loke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and fete were like fayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like f voyce of a multitude.

I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greate fearfulness fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greate vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my coloure clene, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: ⁊ as soone as I herde it, fayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees ⁊ vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto f, ⁊ stode right vp, for vnto f am I now sent.

And when he had sayd these wordes, I stode vp tremblinge. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine herte to vnderstonde, and didest chasten thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou begannest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kingdome of the Perses with stonde me xxj. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chefe prynces, ^a came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kinge of Persia, ⁊ am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to f grounde, and helde my tunge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lorde, my ioyntes are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strēgh within me: How maye my lordes seruaunt then talke with my lorde? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I can not take my breth? Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moch like a man, & comforted me, sayenge: "O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recouered, & sayde: Speake on my lorde, for thou hast refreszshed me. Thē sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto y? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Grekelonde shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, y is fast noted in the scripture of treuth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael youre prynce.

The xi. Chapter.

AND in the first yere of Darius of Media, I stode by him, to comforte him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stonde vp yet three kynges in Persia, but y fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chefest power of his riches, he shal prouoke every man agaynst the realme of Grekelonde. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kinge, that shal rule with great dominion, and do what him list. ^a And as soone as his kingdome commeth vp, it shalbe destroyed, & ^c deuyded towarde y foure wyndes of the heauen. They y come after him, shall not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kingdome shalbe scatred, yee euen amonge other thē those. And the kyng of y south shalbe mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself stroge, & shal rule his dominiō with great power.

But after certayne yeaes they shalbe ioyned together, & the kynges daughter of the south shal come to the kyng of the north, for to make fredshipe, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shall she be able to endure thorow his might: but she, & such as brought her (yee & he y begat her, & comforted her for his tyme) shalbe deluyered vp. B Out of y braunches of hir rote, there shal one stonde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges londe of the north, & handle him accordinge to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces, with their costly

Iewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captuyes in to Egipte, and he shal preuayle agaynst the kyng of the north certayne yeaes. And when he is come in to y kynges realme of y south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherfore his sonnes shalbe displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greate hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterfloude: then shal he returne, and go forth with defeygence and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

Thē the kyng of y south shalbe angrie, and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kyng of the north: Yee he shall bringe a greate multitude of people together, and a greate heape shalbe geuē in to his honde: these shal he cary awaye with greate pryde, for so moch as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shall not preuayle. For y kyng of y north shal gather (of the new) a greater heape of people then afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeaes) with a mightie hoost & exceddinge greate good.

At the same tyme there shall many stonde ^C vp agaynst the kyng of the south, so that y wicked children of thy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kyng of the north shall come to laye sege, and to take the stroge fensed cities: And the power of thē of y south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shall not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he commeth, he shall handle him as he list, & no man shalbe so hardly as to stonde agaynst him. He shal stōde in the pleasaunt countre, which thorow him shalbe destroyed. He shal set his face with all his power to optayne his kingdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the daughters amōge women, to destroye him. But he shal fayle, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shall he set his face vnto the Iles, & take many of thē. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confucion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stomble, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stonde in his place, & haue a pleasaunt kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & that nether in wrath ner

¶ In batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holdē worthy of a kinges dignite: this shall come in craftely, & optayne the kingdome with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

So after ȳ he hath taken truce with him, he shal hadle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, & ouer come him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to ȳ fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or graūdfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, ȳ they had robbed & spoyled, yee & all their substance: ymagenyng thoughtes agaynst the strōge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shalbe sterred vp with a greate armye agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kinge of the south shalbe moued then vnto batell, with a greate & mightie hoost also. Neuerthelesse, he shal not be able to stonde, for they shall conspyre agaynst him. Yee they ȳ eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shalbe mynded to do myschefe, & talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme apoynted. Thē shall he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greate good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shalbe busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme apoynted he shal come agayne, & go towarde the south: So shall it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne: ȳ he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt.

¶ He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strēgh, to put downe the daylie offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flatre with fayre wordes. But ȳ people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. Those also that haue vnderstandinge amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shalbe persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captuynte & with the takynge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shalbe set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstondynge shal be persecuted also: ȳ they maye be tryed, purified & clesed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme apoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God. Yee he shall speake maruelous things agaynst the God of all goddes, wherin he shal prospere, so longe till the wrath be fulfilled, for the conclusion is deuyced alreedy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shall be vpon womē: Yee he shal not care for eny God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipe the mightie Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honour with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasaunt Iewels.

This shal he do, sekinge helpe and succoure at the mightie Idols and straunge goddes. Soch as wil receaue him, and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshippe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shall come agaynst him with charettes, horsmen & with a greate nauy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entre also in to the fayre pleasaunt londe. Many cities & countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab & the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, & the londe of Egipte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer & golde, & ouer all the precious Iewels of Egipte, Lybia and Ethiopia. Neuerthelesse the tydings out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye & curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shall he pytch betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary, for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

A THE tyme wil come also, that the greate prynce Michael,^a which stondesth on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble,^b soch as neuer was, sens there begāne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be deliuered, yee all those that be foude written in the boke. ^c Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to euerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame & reprof. ^d The wyse (soch as haue taught other) shal glister, as the shyninge of heauen: and those that haue instructe the multitude vnto godlynesse, shalbe as the starres, worlde without ende.

B And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, & seale the boke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and thē shal knowlege increase. So I Daniel loked, and beholde, there stode other two: one vpon this shore of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And one of thē sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lynnynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: How louge shall it be to the

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Beeri, in the dayes of Osias,^a Ioathan, Achas ⁊ Ezechias kinges of Iuda: and in the tyme of Ieroboam the sonne of Ioas kyng of Israel.

The first Chapter.

FIRST, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childrē by her: ^bfor the löde hath comitted greate whordome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer y daughter of Deblaim: which concealed, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: ^ccall his name Israel, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Israel vpon the house of Iehn, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Iesrael.

B She concealed yet agayne, and bare a daughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Loruhamā (that is, not opteyninge mercy)^a for I wil haue no pyte vpon the house of Israel, but forget them, and put them elene out of remembrance. ^b Neuerthelesse I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, and wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not deluyer them thorow eny bow, swearde, batel, horses or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Loruhamā, she concealed agayne, and bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Amī (that is to saye, not my people.) For why? ye are not my people, therefore will not I be yours. ^c And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place where it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be y^e childrē of the Iuyngē God. ^d Then shal the children of Iuda and the childrē of Israel be gathered together agayne, and chose them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greateshalbe the daye of Iesrael.

The ij. Chapter.

A TELL youre brethren, that they are my people: and youre susteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for youre mother, ye shal chydē with her, and reprove her: for she is not my wife,^e nether am I hir huszbōde: vnlesse she put awaye hir whordome out of my sight, and hir adouctry from hir brestes. Yf no, I shal strype her naked, and set her, euen as she came in to y^e worlde:^f Yee I shal laye hir waiste, and make her like a wilderness, and slaye her for thyrste. I shal haue no pite also vpon hir children,^g for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to cōfucion. ^h For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bred, my woll and my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not fynde hir fotestoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: she shal seke them, but not fynde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first huszbonde, for at y^e tyme was I better at ease, then now. ⁱ But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet gaue her corne, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

^k Wherefore now will I go take my corne and wyne agayne in their season, and fet agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. ^l And now will I dyscouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir louers, and no man shal deluyer her out of my hondes. Morouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrth,^m hir holy dayes, hir new moones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I wil destroye hir vynyardes and fyge trees, though she saith: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wyldē beestes shall eate it vp: I wil punysh her also for the dayes of Baal,ⁿ wherin she censed him, deckyngē him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saith the LORDE.

Wherefore beholde, I wil call her againe, bringe her in to a wildernes, and speake frendly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyardes agayne,^o yee and the valley of Achor also, to shewe hir hope and comfote. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, and like as in the daye ^p when she came out of the londe of Egipte. Then (saith the LORDE) ^q she shal saye vnto me: O my houszbande, and shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names eny more. ^r Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wyldē beastes, with the foules of the ayre, and with enery thinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

^s As for bowe, swerde and batel, I wil destroye soch out of the londe, and wil make them to slepe safely. ^t Thus wil I marye the vnto myne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I marye the, in rightuousnesse, in equitye, in louyngē kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also will I marye the vnto my self, and thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto

 ſ̄ heauens, ſaieth the LORDE: ⁊ the heauens ſhal helpe the earth, and the earth ſhal helpe
 the corne, wyne and oyle, and they ſhal helpe Iesrael. I wil ſowe them vpō earth, for a ſede to myne owne ſelf, ⁊ wil haue mercy vpon her, ſ̄ was without mercy. And to thē which were not my people,^a I wil ſaye: thou art my

The iij. Chapter

THEN ſayde ſ̄ LORDE to me: ^aGo yet thy waye ⁊ woue an aduouterous womā, whō thy neighbour loueth, as ſ̄ LORDE doth the childrē of Iſrael: how be it they haue reſpecte to ſtraunge goddes,^b and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. ſyluer-linges, and for an Homer and an half of barley, ⁊ ſayde vnto her: Thou ſhalt byde with me a longe ſeaſon, but ſe that thou playeſt not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, ⁊ then wil I kepe my ſelf for the.

B Thus the childrē of Iſrael ſhal ſyt a greate whyle without kinge and pryncē,^c without offerynge and aulter, without preſt and reuelacion.
 But after warde ſhal the children of Iſrael conuert, and ſeke the LORDE their God, and ^dDauid their kinge: and in ſ̄ latter dayes they ſhal worſhippe the LORDE, and his louynge kyndneſſe.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE ſ̄ worde of the LORDE, o ye children of Iſrael: For the LORDE muſt punyſh thē, ſ̄ dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faithfulneſſe, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lōde: but ſwearinge, lyēge, māſlaughter, theft and adoutry haue gotten the ouerhande, ⁊ one bloudgiltyneſſe foloweth another. Therefore ſhal the londe be in a miſerable caſe, and all they that dwell therein, ſhal mourne. The beaſtes in the felde, the foules in ſ̄ ayre, and the fiſhes in the ſee ſhall dye. Yet is there none, that wil chaſtē nor reprove another.
 The preſtes which ſhulde reforme other mē,
 are become like the people.

B Therefore ſtombleſt thou in ſ̄ daye tyme, ⁊
 the prophet with the in the night. I wil bringe thy mother to ſylence, ⁊ why? ^emy people perish, becauſe they haue no knowlege. Seinge then that thou haſt reſuſed vnderſtondinge, therefore wil I reſuſe ſ̄ alſo: ſo that thou ſhalt nomore be my preſt. And for ſo much as thou haſt forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil alſo forget thy childrē. The more they increaſed in multitude, the more they ſynned agaynſt me, therefore wil I change their honour in to ſhame. ^fThey eate vp the ſynnes of my people, ⁊ corage them in their wickedneſſe. ^gThus the preſt is become like the people. ^hWherefore I wil punyſh them for their wicked wayes, ⁊ rewarde them accordinge to their owne ymaginacions. They ſhal eate, ⁊ not haue ynough: They haue vſed whordome, therfore ſhall they not proſpere: ⁊ why? they haue forſaken the LORDE, ⁊ not regarded him.

Whordome, wyne and dronckenneſſe take the herte awaye. ⁱMy people axe counſel at their ſtockes, their ſtaffe muſt tell them. For an whoriſh mynde hath diſceaued them, ſo ſ̄
 they cōmitte fornicacion agaynſt their God.
^jThey make ſacrifice vpon the hie moun-taynes, ⁊ burne their incenſe vpon the hilles, yee amonge the okes, groues ⁊ buſzſhes, for there are good ſhadowes. Therefore youre daughters are become harlottes, and youre ſpouſes haue brokē their wedlocke I wil not puniſh youre daughters for beinge defyled, ⁊ youre brydes that became whores: ^kſeinge the fathers them ſelues haue medled with har-lottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderſtonde, muſt be punyſhed.

Though thou Iſrael art diſpoſed to playe ſ̄
 harlot, yet ſhuldeſt not thou haue offended, o Iuda: ^lthou ſhuldeſt not haue runne to Galgala, ner haue gone vp to Bethauē, ner haue ſworne: the LORDE lyueth. For Iſrael is gone backe, like a wāton cowe. The LORDE therfore ſhal make hir fede, as ſ̄ lābe ſ̄ goeth aſtraye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. Their dronckēneſſe hath put thē backe, ⁊ brought them to whordome. Their rulers loue rewardes, brynge (ſaye they,) to their owne ſhame. A wynde ſhall take holde of their fethers, ⁊ they ſhal be cōfounded in their offeringes.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Israel: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punyshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spred net vnto the mount of Thabor: They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therwith: ^atherfore wil I punysh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, τ Israel is not hyd fro me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Israel is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so \ddot{y} they can not knowe the LORDE.

^b But the pryde of Israel wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Israel and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Iuda with them also. ^c They shall come with their shepe τ bullockes to seke \ddot{y} LORDE, ^d but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastard children: a moneth therfore shall deuoure them with their porcions.

^e Blowe with the shawmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethauen vpon the yonside of Ben Iamin. In the tyme of \ddot{y} plage shal Ephraim be layed waist, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Israel. ^f Yet are the prynces of Iuda become like them, that renouue the londemarckes, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why? they folowe \ddot{y} doctrynes of men. Therfore will I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, τ to the house of Iuda as a caterpillar.

^g When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Iuda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Assur, and sent vnto kinge Iareb: yet coude not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a lyons whelpes to the house of Iuda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, τ go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescue them. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe faynt, and seke me.

IN their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: ^h for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: He hath wounded vs, τ he shal bynde vs vp agayne: after two dayes shal he quycken vs, in the thirde daye he shal rase vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, τ endeuoure oure selues to knowe the LORDE. He shal go forth as the sprynge of the daye, ⁱ and come vnto vs as the euenynge and mornynge rayne vpon the earth.

O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Iuda, how shal I intreate the? seynge youre loue is like a mornynge cloude, τ like a dew \ddot{y} goeth early awaye. ^j Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, τ letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punyshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in lounynge kyndnesse, and not in offeringe: ^k Yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. ^l But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murderers τ bloudthurstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. ^m Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Israel, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Israel is defyled: but Iuda shall haue an haruest for himself, when I reurne the captiuyte of my people.

The viij. Chapter.

WHEN I vndertake to make Israel whole, then the vngraciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robbynge. They cosidre not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute with their owne ynuenciõs, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the prynces, to haue pleasure in their wickednes τ lyes. All these burne in aduouty, as it were an ouen \ddot{y} the baker heateth, whõ he hath leste kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode droncken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as disceauẽ thẽ. They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are fallē: yet is there none of thē y calleth vpon me. Therefore must Ephraim be mixte amonge y Heithen. Ⓒ Ephraim is like a doue, that is begyled, and hath no herte. ^a Now call they vpon the Egipcians, now go they to the Assirians: but whyle they be goinge here and there, I shall sprede my net ouer them, ⁊ drawe them downe as y foules of the ayre: and accordinge as they haue bene warned, so will I punysh them. ^b Wo be vnto them, for they haue forsakē me. They must be destroyed, for they haue set me at naught. ^c I am he that haue redeemed them, and yet they dyssemble with me. They call not vpon me with their hartes, but lye youlginge vpon their beddes. Where as they come together, it is but for meate ⁊ drincke, and me will they not obeye. I haue taught them, and defended their arme, yet do they ymagin myschefe agaynst me. They turne them selues, but not a right, ⁊ are become as a broken bowe. Ⓐ SET the horne to thy mouth, and blowe: ^a get the swiftly (as an Aegle) vnto the house of the LORDE: for they haue broken my couenaunt, and transgressed my lawe. Israel can saye vnto me: thou art my God, we knowe the: but he hath refused the thinge that is good, therefore shall the enemye folowe vpon him. ^b They haue ordened kinges, but not thorow me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it. ^c Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to destruccion.

^a Thy calfe (O Samaria) shalbe taken awaye, for my wrothfull indignacion is gone forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be censed? For the calfe came from Israel, the worke man made it, therefore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal y calfe of Samaria be turned. They haue sowne wynde, therefore shal they reepe a storme.

Their sede shal beare no corne, there shal no meel be made of their increase: though fyre be, yet shall straungers deuoure it vp. Israel shall perish, the Gentiles shall entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wyld asse in the deserte.

^a Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, therefore are they scatred amonge the Heithē, there wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges ⁊ prynces. Ephraim hath made many alters to do wickednes, therefore shal the aulters turne to his syme. Though I shewe thē my lawe neuer so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Whereas they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therein: but will remembre their wickednes, and punysh their synnes. ^b Israel turneth agayne in to Egipte, they haue forgotten him that made them, they buylde churches, and Iuda maketh many stronge cities: ^c therefore wil I sende a fyre in to their cities, and it shal consume their places.

The ix. Chapter.

Ⓐ DO not thou triumphe (O Israel) make no boostinge more then the Heithen, for thou hast comitted adoutry agaynst thy God: straunge rewardes hast thou loued, more thē all corne floores. ^a Therefore shall they nomore enioye the cornefloores and wynepresses, and their swete wyne shal fayle thē. They wil not dwel in the LORDES londe, ^b but Ephraim turneth agayne in to Egipte, ⁊ eateth vncleane thinges amonge the Assirians. They poure out no wyne for a drinkofferinge vnto the LORDE, nether geue they him their slayne offerings: but they be vnto them as mourners meates, wherin all they that ate them, are defyled. haue soch lust vnto, shal not come in the house of the LORDE. What wil ye do then in the solempe dayes, and in the feast of the LORDE? lo, they shall get them awaye for the destruccion, Egypte shal receaue them, ⁊ Noph shal bury them.

B The nettles shall ouergrowe their pleasant goodes, and burres shalbe in their tabernacles. Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompencing are at honde. As for the prophet, ye holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the sprete, for a mad man: so greate is youre wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath made himself a watchman of my God, a prophet \hat{y} is become a suare to do hurte in euery strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. ^aThey be gone to farre, ⁊ haue destroyed the selues, like as they dyd afore tyme at Gabaa. Therefore their wickednes shal be remōbred, and their synnes punyshed.

I fande Israel like grapes in the wildernes, ⁊ sawe their fathers as the first fyges in \hat{y} toppes of \hat{y} fyge tre. But they are gone to Baal Peor, ^b ⁊ runne awaie fro me to \hat{y} shamefull Idoll, ⁊ are become as abhominable as their louers Ephraim flieth like a byrde, so shal their glory also: In so moch, \hat{y} they shal nether begette, cōceauē ner beare children.

C And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yee wo shall come to them, when I departe from them. ^cEphraim (as me thinke) is planted in welthinesse, like as Tyrus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the manslayer.

O LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shalt thou geue them? geue them an vnfrutefull woube and drye brestes. ^dAll their wickednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhorre them. For the vngraciousnes of their owne inueneions, I wil dryue them out of my house. I will loue them nomore, for all their prynces are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dried vp, so \hat{y} they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best beloued frute of their body. My God shall cast them awaye, for they haue not bene obediēt vnto him, therefore shal they go astraye amonge the Heithen.

The r. Chapter.

I SRAEL was a goodly vyne, but he hath ^a brought forth vnprofitable frute: yee the more frute he had, the mo altuers he made: \hat{y} more good I dyd to their londe, the more frendshipe shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is deuyced, therefore wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shall breake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their altuers. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comon together, and sweare vayne ooties: they be cōfederate together, therefore groweth their punyshment, as the wedes in the forowes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue worshipped the calfe of Bethauē: therefore shall the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welthynesse reioysed with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assirian, for a present vnto kinge Iareb. Ephraim shal receaue full punishment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginacions, Samaria with his kinge shall vanish awaye, as the scomme vpon the water. The hye places of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be cast downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their altuers. Then shal they saye to \hat{y} mountaynes: ^b couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gabaa dyd afore tyme, where they remayned: ^c shulde not the batel then come vpon the wicked children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites? I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne desyre, the people shal be gathered together ouer them, whē I punysh them for their greate wickednesse. Ephraim was vnto me, as a cow that is used to go to plowe, therefore I loued him, and fell vpon his fayre neck. I droue Ephraim, ^d Iuda plowed, ⁊ Iacob played the husbōde man: that they might sowe vnto rightuousnes, and reape the frutes of weldoyng: \hat{y} they might plowe vp their fresh londe, and seke the LORDE, till he came, and lerned them rightuousnes.

But now they haue plowed them wickednesse, therefore shal they reepe synne, and eate the frute of lyes. Seinge thou putttest thy of Egipte. But ſ more they were called, the more they wente backe: offerynge vnto Idols, and ceuſynge ymagēs. ^c I lerned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of friendſhippe, ⁊ with bondes of loue. I was euen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. ^d I gaue

 eaſe them not of their burthen.

What greate thinges haue I geuen the, o Ephraim? how faithfully haue I defended the, o Iſrael? haue I dealt with the as with Adama? ^f or haue I intreated the like Se-boim? No, my hert is otherwiſe mynded.
 Yee my mercy is to feruent: therefore haue I not turned me to deſtroye Ephraim in my wrathful displeaſure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddeſt of the, though I came not within the cite.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they that they maye be afrayed, like the children goeth aboute me with lies, and the houſe of Iſrael dyſſembleth. Only Iuda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thinges.

The xij. Chapter.

EPHRAIM kepeth the ayre, and foloweth
^a After the eaſt wynde: he is euer increaſinge lyes ⁊ deſtruction. They be confederate with the Aſſirians, their oyle is caried in to Egipte. ^b The LORDE hath a courte to holde with Iuda, and wil punyſh Iacob: After their owne waies and accordinge to their owne inuencions, ſhal he recompence them. He toke his brother by the hele, ^c when he was yet in his mothers wombe: and in his ſtrength he wreſtled with God. He ſtroue with the Angel, and gat the victory: ſo that he prayde and deſyred him. He fande him at Bethel, ⁊ there he talked with vs.

Yee the LORDE God of hoostes, euen ſ LORDE him ſelf remembered him: Then turne to thy God, kepe mercy and equitye, and hope ſtill in thy God. But the mar-chaunt hath a false weight in his honde, he hath a pleaſure to occuſe extortion. ^d Ephraim thinketh thus: Tuſh, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes ſhal not one faute be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, eue as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and ſet the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feaſt dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and ſhewed dyuerſe viſions, and declared my ſelf by the miniſtracion of ſ prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue ſlayne oxen:

 made. Iacob fled in to the londe of Siria,

THE abominacion of Ephraim is come also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therefore must he dye. ^a And now they synne more and more: of their syluer, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the Heithen, and yett all is nothing but the worke of the craftesman. Notwithstodinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calves, offreth to men. Therefore they shalbe as the mornynge cloude, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that y wynde taketh awaye from the floore, and as smoke that goeth out of y chymney.

^b I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the londe of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, ⁊ that thou shuldest haue no Sauoure but only me. ^c I toke diligent hede of the in the wilderness that drye londe. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they waxed proude, and forgat me. ^d Therefore will I be vnto them as a lyon, and as a leopard in y waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a she beer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubburne herte of theirs. There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yee the wylde beastes shal teare them.

^e O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self, In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy kinges now, that shulde helpe the in all thy cities? Yee and thy iudges, of whom thou saydest: geue me a kinge and prynces? ^f well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure will I take him from the agayne. The wickednesse of Ephraim is bounde together, ⁊ his synne lieth hyd. Therefore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that trauaeth. An vndiscrete sonne is he: for he considereth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the graue, and deluyered him from death.

^g O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy styng. Yet can I se no comforth, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderness, and drye vp his condytes, and drynke vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasaunt vessels.

^h As for Samaria, they shalbe made waist, ⁊ why? they are disobedient vnto their God. They shal perish with the swearde, their children shalbe slayne, and their women bygg with childe shalbe rypte vp.

The xiiij. Chapter.

TURNE the now (o Israel) vnto y LORDE thy God, for thou hast taken a great fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, ⁊ saye vnto him: O forgene vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, ⁊ then wil we offre y bullockes of oure lyppes vnto the. ⁱ Assur shalbe no more oure helper, nether wil we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure hondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O (yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I loue them: so y my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as y lylie, ⁊ his rote shulde breake out as Libanus. His branches shulde sprede out abrode, ⁊ be as fayre as the olyue tre, ⁊ snel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, ⁊ growe vp as the corne, ⁊ flourish as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with Idols eny more? I wil graciously heare him, ⁊ lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene Fyrre tre, vpon me shalt thou fynde thy frute. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstode this: ⁊ he y is right instructe, wil regarde it. Chap. III.

How the people are brought agayne, and their enemies punished

The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Joel the sonne of Phatuel: Heare o ye elders: pōdre this wel, all ye that dwell in the lōde: yf euer there happened such a thinge in youre dayes, or in ſ̄ dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. ^aLoke what the caterpillar hath lefte, ſ̄ hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper lefte, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath lefte, that hath the blastinge consumed. Wake vp ye dronckardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a mightie & an innumerable people shall come vp in to my londe: these haue teth like the teth of Lyons, ^b& chafstones like the lyonesses. They shal make my vinyarde waist, they shal pyl of the barckes of my ſygetrees, strype them bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte.

Make thy mone as a virgin doth, ſ̄ gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde grome. For the meate & drynkofferynge shalbe taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes & LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shalbe waisted, the londe shalbe in a miserable case: for the corne shalbe destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confucion, & the oyle vtterly desolate. The huszbōde men & the wyne gardeners shal lōke piteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the haruest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grapegatherers shal make greate mone, when the vynyarde & ſygetrees be so vtterly waisted. Yee all the pomgranettes, palmtrees, apletrees & the other trees of the felde shall wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men, shal come to confucion.

Gyrde you, & make youre mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the aluter: go youre waye in, & slepe in sackcloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meat & drynkofferynge shal be taken awaye from the house of youre God. Proclame a fastyng, call the cōgregacion, ^cgather the elders & all the inhabitants of the londe together in to the house of the LORDE youre God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why? the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the Allmightie. Shal not ſ̄ meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the myrth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perish in the grounde, the garners shall lye waist, the floores shalbe broken downe, for the corne shalbe destroyed. ^dO what a sighinge make the cattell? the bullockes are very euel likyng, because they haue no pasture: and the shepe are fameszhed awaye.

^c Joel 2. c. ^d 3 Re. 18. a.

O LORDE, to the will I crie : for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wyldernesse, and the flame hath breint vp all the trees of the felde. Yee the wyld beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dried vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wyldernesse.

The ij. Chapter.

BLOWE out \hat{y} trompet in Sion, τ crie vp \circ my holy hill, \hat{y} all such as dwell in the londe, maye treble at it: for \hat{y} daie of the LORDE commeth, τ is harde at honde: a dareke daye, a gloomyng daye, a cloudy daye, yee τ a stormy daye, like as the mornynge spredeth out vp \circ the hilles: Namely, a great τ mightie people: such as haue not bene sens \hat{y} begynnyng, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consumyng fyre, τ behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behynde him shal it be a very waist wildernesse, τ there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to loke vpon like bayrdd horses, τ runne like horse men. They skyppe vp vpon \hat{y} hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes: as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

BThe folke shalbe afrayed of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal rüne like giantes, τ leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Euery mā in his goinge shal kepe his araiie, τ not go out of his Path. There shal not one dryue another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, τ not be hurte: They shal come in to the cite, τ runne vpon the walles: They shal clymme vp vpon the houses, τ slyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shalbe moued: \hat{a} the Sonne τ Moone shal be darckened, and the starres shal withdrawe their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greate, stronge τ mightie to fulfill his commaundement. This is \hat{y} greate and maruelous fearfull daye of the LORDE: And who is able to abyde it?

C Now therefore saith the LORDE: \hat{c} Turne you vnto me with all youre hertes, with fastynge, wepyng and mournynge: rente youre hertes, τ not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God, \hat{a} for he is gracious τ mercifull, longe sufferyng τ of greate compassion: τ redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal thurne, τ forgeue: τ after his chastenyng, he shal let you increase remayne, for meat τ drynck offerynges vnto the LORDE youre God? \hat{c} Blowe out with the tröpet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion, τ gather the people together: warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bringe the children τ sudlynges together. Let \hat{y} brydegrome go forth of his chäbre, τ the bryde out of her closet. Let the prestes serue the LORDE betwixte the porch τ \hat{y} aulter, wepyng τ sayenge: be fauourable (o LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people: let not thine heretage be brought to such confucion, lest the Heithen be lordes therof. Wherefore shulde they saye amonge the Heithen: \hat{c} where is now their God?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe, τ spare his people: yee \hat{y} LORDE shal answeere, τ saye vnto his people: Beholde, I wil sende you corne, wyne τ oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them: τ I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprove amonge the Heithen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you: τ shute him out in to a drye and waist londe, his face towarde the east see, and his hynder partes towarde the vttest see. The stynke of him shall go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath dealte so proudly. Feare not (o londe) but be glad and reioyce, for the LORDE wil do greate thynges. Be not ye afrayed nether (o ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute: the fygetrees τ vinyardes shal geue their increase.

B Be glad then (o ye children of Sion) and reioyce in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of rightuousnes: \hat{c} τ he it is \hat{y} shal sende you downe shuwers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth: so that \hat{y} garners shal be full of corne, and the presses plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeares that \hat{y} greszhopper, locuste, blasstinge τ caterpillar (my greate hoost, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne: so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied: and

And my people shall neuer be confounded eny more: Ye shall well knowe, that I am in the myddest of Israel, and that I am youre God: yee and that there is none other, and my people shall nomore be brought to confucion.

f After this, will I poure out my sprete vpon all flesh: ^a ⁊ youre sonnes ⁊ youre daughters shal prophete: youre olde mē shal dreame dreames ⁊ youre yonge men shal se visions: ^b Yee in those dayes I will poure out my sprete vpon seruauntes and maydens. The Sonne shalbe turned in to dareknesse, ⁊ ȳ Moone in to bloude: before ȳ greate ⁊ notable daye off the LORDE come.

And the tyme shal come: ȳ who so euer calleth on the name of the LORDE, shalbe saued. For vpon the mount Sion ⁊ at Ierusalem, there shalbe a saluacion, like as the LORDE hath promised: yee ⁊ amonge the other remnaunt, whom the LORDE shall call.

a FOR take hede: In those dayes ⁊ at ȳ same tyme, when I turne agayne the captiuite of Iuda ⁊ Ierusalē: I shal gather all people together, ⁊ brynge thē in to the valley of Iosaphat: and there wil I reason with thē, because of my people ⁊ heretage of Israel: whō they haue scatred aboute in the nacions, ⁊ parted my lōde: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge mē haue they set in the brodel house, ⁊ solde the Damsels for wyne, ȳ they might haue to drike. "Thou Tirus and Sidō and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye defye me? well: yf ye will nedes defye me, I shall recōpence you, euen vpon youre heade, ⁊ ȳ right shortly: for ye haue takē away my syluer ⁊ golde, my fayre ⁊ goodly Iewels, ⁊ brought them in to youre gods houses. The children also of Iuda and Ierusalem haue ye solde vnto the Grekes, that ye might brynge thē farre frō ȳ borders of their owne countrees.

Your sonnes ⁊ youre daughters will I sell thorow the bondes of the childrē of Iuda, ⁊ so they shal geue them forth to sell, vnto thē of Saba, a people of a farre coūtre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these things amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giauntes, let them drawe nye, let thē come vp all the lusty waryours of thē. Make you sweardes of youre plowshares, and speares of youre syckles ⁊ sythes. ⁱ Let ȳ weake man saye: I am stronge. The first Chapter.

THESSE are the sermons, that were shewed vnto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes at Thecua) vpon Israel, in the tyme of Osias kynge of Iuda, ^a and in the tyme of Ieroboā ^b sonne of Ioas kynge of Israel, two yere before ^c \hat{y} earthquake. And he sayde: ^d The LORDE shal roare out off Sion, and shewe his voyce fro Ierusalē: so that ^e \hat{y} pastures of the shepherdes shal be in a miserable case, and ^f \hat{y} toppes of Charnel dried vp.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: ^g For thre and foure wickednesses of Damascus, I wil not spare her: because they haue throsheed Galaad with yro flaes: But I wil sende a fyre in to ^h \hat{y} house of Hazael, the same shal consume the palaces of Benadab. Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, and rote out the inhabiter fro the felde of Auen, and him ⁱ \hat{y} holdeth the scepter, out of ^j \hat{y} pleasunt house: so ^k \hat{y} the people shalbe dryuen out of fayre Siria, sayeth the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Gaza, I wil not spare her: ^l because they make the prisoners yet more captiue, and haue dryuen thē in to the lode of Edom. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to ^m \hat{y} walles of Gaza, which shal deuoure hir houses. I wil rote out thē ⁿ \hat{y} dwell at Asdod and him ^o \hat{y} holdeth the scepter off Ascalon, and stretch out myne honde ouer Accaron, that the remnaunt of the Philistines shal perish, saieyth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off the cite off Tyre, I wil not spare her: ^p because they haue increased ^q \hat{y}

captiuyte of the Edomites, and haue not remembred the brotherly couenaut. "Therefore will I sende a fyre in to the walles off Tyre, that shal consume hir pallaces. Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Edom I wil not spare him,^a because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion allwaye by him. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Themā, which shal deuoure the pallaces of Bosra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: 'For thre ād foure wickednesses of the children off Ammon, I wil not spare them: because they ryp̄te vp the womē greate with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder. Therefore I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shal consume hir palaces: with a greate crie, in the daye of batel, in tempest and in the daye off storme: so that their kyngs shal go in to captiuyte, he and his prices together, sayeth the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off Moab,^d I wil not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kyngs of Edom to ashes. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal cōsume ŷ pallaces of Carioth: so ŷ Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawne. I will rote out the iudge from amōge them, and slaye all his prynces with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: 'for thre ād foure wickednesses of Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kepte his commandementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceaued with the lyes, that their forefathers folowed. Therefore will I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shal consume the palaces of Ierusalem.

THUS sayeth the LORDE: For thre ⁊ foure wickednesses of Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath solde the righteous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, ⁊ croke the wayes off the meke. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my holy name: they lye besyde euery aulter vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyne of the oppressed. 'Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, that was as hie as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the okes: notwithstandinge I destroyed his frute frō aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egipte,^e and led you xl. yeares thorow the wyldernesse, that ye might haue the Amoriters londe in possession. I rased vp prophetes amonge youre children, and abstayners amonge youre yōge men. Is it not so, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE? But ye gaue the abstayners wyne to drynke,^f yee ye cōmaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crasseh you in sonder, like as a wayne crasseth, ŷ is full of sheaues: so that ŷ swifte shall not escape, nether the stronge be able to do eny thynge: no, the giaunte shal not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swifte off fote shall not escape. The horsmā shal not saue his life, ⁊ he that is as māly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to runne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children of Israel) namely, vnto all ŷ trybes, whō I brought out of Egipte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therefore will I vsyet you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together excepte they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelp out of his denne, 'excepte he haue gotten somthīge? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpo ŷ earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vp from the grounde, afore he catche somewhat? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afrayed? Cometh there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secrete before vnto his seruantes ŷ prophetes. LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophesy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egipte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greate murthur and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regard not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vp robbery in their houses.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shalbe troubled and beseged roude aboute, thy strength shalbe plucte from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdeman taketh two legges or a peece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children of Israel (that dwell in Samaria, hauynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Danascus) shalbe plucte awaye. Heare, and beare recorde in the house of Iacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes) that when I begynne to vyset the wickednesse of Israel, I will vyset f altuers at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the altuer shalbe broken of, t fall to the groude.

As for the wynter house and sommer house, I will snyte them downe: and the houses of yuery, yee and many other houses shal perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The iiii. Chapter.

HEARE this worde, o ye fat kyne, that be vpon the hill of Samaria: ye that do poore mc wronge, and oppresse the nedy: ye that saye to youre lordes: bryngye hyther, let vs drynke. Therefore the LORDE hath sworne by his holynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shalbe lift vp vp o speares, and youre posterite caried awaye in fyssher pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappes one after another, and in Armon shal ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

B Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngraciousnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. ^a Ye brought youre sacrifices in the mornynge, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a th a nkofferinge off leuen, ye promised frewillofferings, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therefore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities, t scarcenesse off bred in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

Wh e there were but thre monethes vnto f haruest, I withelde the rayne from you: yee I rayned vp o one cite, and not vp o another one peece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherefore two (yee thre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth f LORDE.

I haue smyten you with drouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: f catirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent am o ge you, ^a as I dyd in Egipte: youre yonge men haue I slayen with f swerde, and caused youre horses be taken captiue: I made the stynckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrels: Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. ^c Some off you haue I ouerthrown: as I ouerthrewe Sodome t Gomorre: so that ye were as a brande plucte out of the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therefore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornynge and the darknesse, he treadeth vp o the hye places off the earth: f LORDE God of hoostes is his name.

The v. Chapter.

HEARE this worde (o ye house of Israel) ^a and why? I must make this mone for you: The vyrgin Israel shall fall, t neuer ryse vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shal helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth f LORDE God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shalbe left scarce an C. therin: and where f re dwelt an C. there shal scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORDE vnto f house of Israel: Seke after me, a d ye shal lyue, but seke not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and goe not to Bersaba: for Galgal shall be caried awaye captyue, and Bethel shal come to naught. Seke the LORDE, ^ŷ ye maye lyue: lest the house of Ioseph be brent with fyre and cōsumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

B Ye turne the lawe to wormwood, and cast downe rightuousnes vnto the grounde. The LORDE maketh the vij. starres and the Oryons, ^a he turneth the night in to daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth ^ŷ waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: ^b the LORDE is his name. He rayseth destruction vpon the mightie people, ^τ bryngeth downe the stronge holde: but they owe him euell will, ^ŷ reproneth them openly: and who so telleth thē the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch thē as ye oppresse ^ŷ poore, ^c and robbe him of his best sustenance: therefore, where as ye haue buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruelōs pleasaunt vynyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of thē shal ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesses and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. ^d Enemies are ye off the rightuous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therefore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tūge, so wicked a tyme is it.

C Seke after the thinge that is good, ^τ not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORDE God off hoostes shal be with you, accordinge to youre owne desyre. ^e Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: ^τ (no doute) the LORDE God of hoostes shal be mercifull vnto the remnaunt of Ioseph. Yff no (sayeth the LORDE God, the God of hoostes) there shal be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shal saye ī euery stret: alas, alas. They shall call the housbonde man to lamentaciō, and such as can mourne, to mournynge. In all vynyardes there shal be heuynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORDE. Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off ^ŷ LORDE: Wherefore wolde ye haue it? As for that daye of the LORDE, it shalbe darcke and not cleare: Yee like as when a mā rūneth frō a lyon, and a Beer meteth with him: or, whē he commeth in to the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. ^f Shall not the daye off the LORDE be darcke, and not cleare? shal it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

D ^g I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, and where as ye cense me when ye come together I will not accepte it. And though ye offre me brentofferings and meatofferings, yet haue I no pleasure therein: As for youre fat thankofferynges, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and rightuousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, ^h gaue ye me offerings and sacrifices those xl. yeares longe in the wyldernesse? Yet haue ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymagines of youre Idols, ⁱ Yee and the starre of youre god Rempha, figures which ye made to worshipe them. Therefore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORDE, whose name is the God off hoostes.

The vi. Chapter.

WO be to the proude welthy in Siō, ^k to soch as thinke thē so sure vpon ^ŷ mount of Samaria? which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and rule the house of Israel, euē as they list. Go vnto Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greate cite, and so go downe to Gath of the Philistines: be they better at ease then these kyngdomes, or the border of their londe wyder then yours? Ye are taken out for the euell daye, euen ye that syt in the stole of wyfulnessse: Ye that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre couches: ye that eate the best lames of ^ŷ flocke, and the fattest calues off the droaue: ^l ye that synge to the lute, and in playenge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto David: ye that drynke wyne out of goblettes, ^τ anoynte youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Ioseps hurte. The viij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me such a vision: beholde, there stode one that made greszshoppers, euen when the corne was shutyng forth, after the kyng had clipte his shepe. Now when they vndertoke to eate vp all the grene thynges in y lode, I sayde: O LORDE God, be mercifull, I beseke the: who shulde els helpe vp Iacob, that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was gracious therin, and the LORDE sayde: well, it shall not be. Agayne, y LORDE shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE God called the fyre to punysh withall, and it deuoured the greate depe: yee it consumed a parte alledredy. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, holde thyn honde: for who shulde els helpe vp Iacob that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was mercifull therin, and the LORDE God sayde: well, it shal not be.

Morouer, he shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE stode vpon a plastered wall, and a masons trowell in his hode. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a masons trowell. Then sayde the LORDE: beholde, I will laye the trowell amoge my people of Israel, and will nomore ouersee them: but the hye hylchapels off Isaac must be layed waist, and

For Amos sayeth: Ieroboam shall dye with the swerde, and Israel shall be led awaye captiue out of their owne londe. And Amasias sayde vnto Amos: Get the hence (thou that cast se so well) and fle in to the londe of Iuda: get the there thy luyng, and prophecy there: ^d and prophecy nomore at Bethel, for it is the kynges chapel, and the kynges courte.

Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As for me, ^c I am nether prophet, ner prophetes some: but a keper of catell. Now as I was breakyng downe molberies, and goyng after the catell, the LORDE toke me, and sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vnto my people of Israel. And therefore, heare thou now the worde off the LORDE: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothinge agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherefore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thy wife shalbe defyled in y cite, thy sonnes and daughters shalbe slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shalbe measured out with the lyne: Thou thy self shalt dye in an vnclene londe, and Israel shalbe dryuen out off his owne cowntre.

The viij. Chapter.

THE LORDE God shewed me this vision: and beholde, there was a maide with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a maide with sommer frute. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: the ende cometh vpon my people of Israel, I wil nomore ouersee them. In that daye shall the songes off the temple be turned in to sorow, sayeth the LORDE God. Many deed bodies shal lye in euery place, and be cast forth secretly. Heare this, O ye y oppresse the poore, and destroye the nedey in y londe, sayenge: Whan will the new moneth be gone, that we maye sell vytale, and y Sabbath, that we maye haue scarcenesse of corne: to make the buszshel lesse, and the Sytle greater? We shall set vp false waigtes, y we maye get the poore vnder vs with their money, and the nedey also for shues: yee let vs sell the chaffe for corne.

At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE God) ^bI shall cause ^cſōne to go downe at noone, and the londe to be darcke in the cleare daye. ^dYoure hye feastes wil I turne to sorow, and youre songes to mournynge: I will brynge sackcloth vpon all backes, & baldnes vpon euery heade: ^eyee soch a mournynge wil I sende them, as is made vpon an only begotten sonne, and they shall haue a miserabe ende.

Beholde, the tyme commeth (sayeth the LORDE God) ^fI shall sende an hūger in to ^gēarth: not the hunger of bred, ner the thyrst of water: but an hunger to heare the worde off the LORDE: so that they shal go from the one see to the other, yee from ^hnorth vnto ⁱeast, runnyng aboute to seke the worde of ^jLORDE, and shal not fynde it. These shal fall, and neuer ryse vp agayne.

The ii. Chapter.

I SAWE the LORDE stondinge vpon the aulter, and he sayde: smyte the dore cheke, that the postes maye shake withall. For their couetousnesse shal fall vpon all their heades, and their posterite shalbe slayne with the swerde. They shall not fle awaye, there shall not one off them escape, ner be delyuered. Though they were buried in the hell, my honde shal fetch them from thence: ^kthough they clymme vp to heauen, yet shal I cast them downe: though they hyde them selues vpon the toppes of Carmel, yet shal I seke them out, and bryng them from thence: Though they crepe downe fro my sight in to the depe of the see, I shal cōmaide the serpente, euen there to byte them. Yff they go awaye before their enemies I to captuyte, then shall I commaunde the swerde, there to slaye them.

Thus wil I set myne eyes vpon them, for their harme and not for their wealth. For when the LORDE God of hoostes toucheth a londe, it cōsumeth awaye, and all they that dwell therein, must nedes mourne: And why? ^ltheir destruccion shal aryse as euery streame and runne ouer them, as the floude in Egipte. He that hath his dwellinge in heauen, and groundeth his tabernacle in the earth: ^mHe that calleth the waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: his name is the LORDE. O ye children off Israel, are ye not vnto me, euen as the Morians, sayeth the LORDE? haue not I brought Israel out off the londe off Egipte, the Philistynes from Capthor, ⁿand the Sirians fro Cyr? Beholde, the eyes of the LORDE are vpon the realme that synneth, to rote it clene out of the earth: Neuertheles, I will not vterly destroye the house of Iacob, saieith the LORDE.

For lo, this I promyse: though I sifte ^ohouse of Israel amonge all nacions (like as they vse to sifte in a syue) yet shall not ^psmallest grauel stone fall vpon the earth: But all the wicked doers of my people, that saye: Tush, the plage is not so nye, to come so hastily vpon vs: those shal perish with the swerde. ^qAt that tyme wil I buylde agayne the tabernacle off Dauid, that is fallen downe, and hedge vp his gappes: and loke what is brokē, I shal repayre it: Yee I shal buylde it agayne, as it was afore tyme, ^rthey maye possesse the remnaunt of Edom, yee and all soch people as call vpon my name with thē, saieith the LORDE, which doth these things.

Beholde, the tyme commeth (saieith the LORDE) that the plowman shal ouertake ^smower, and ^ttreader off grapes, him that soweth sede. ^uThe mountaynes shall droppe swete wyne, and the hilles shall be frutefull, and I wil turne the captuyte of my people of Israel: they shal repayre the waist cities, and haue thē in possessiō: they shal plante vineyardes, and drynke the wyne therof: they shal make gardens, and enioye the frutes off thē. And I wil plāte them vpon their owne groude, so that I will neuer rote them out agayne from their londe, wch I haue geuen thē saieith the LORDE thy God.

Chap. I.

He prophecyeth agaynst the proude stomackes of the Edomites, that vexed the Israelites in their aduersite. He sheweth, what plagues shal come vpon them

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the vision that was shewed vnto Abdy: Thus hath \hat{y} LORDE God spokē vpō Edō: "We haue herde of the LORDE \hat{y} there is an embassage sent amonge the Heithen: Vp, let vs aryse, and fight agaynst them. Beholde, I will make \hat{y} small amōge the Heithen, so that thou shalt be vtterly despised. ^b The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in \hat{y} strōge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thine herte: who shal cast me downe to the ground? But ^c though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboute amonge the starres: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thēce. ^d Yf \hat{y} theues & robbers came to \hat{y} by-night, thou takinge thy rest: shulde they not steale, till they had ynough? yf the grape gatherers came vpon the, wolde they not leaue the some grapes? But how shall they rype Esau, and seke out his treasures?

B Yee the men that were sworne vnto the, shal dryue the out off the borders off thine owne londe. They that be now at one with the, shal disceauē the, and ouercome \hat{y} : Euē they that eatē thy bred, shall betraye the, or ener thou perceauē it. ^e Shal not I at the same tyme destroye the wyse men of Edom, ād those that haue vnderstandinge, from the mount of Esau? Thy giauntes (o Theman)

shalbe afrayed, for thorow the slaughter they shalbe all ouer throwne vpon the moūt of Esau. Shame shal come vpon the, for \hat{y} malice that thou shewedest to thy brother Jacob: ' yee for euermore shalt thou perish, & that because of the tyme, when thou didest set thyself agaynst him, euen when the enemies caried away his hoost, and when the aleauntes came in at his portes, and cast lottes vpon Ierusalem, and thou thyself wast as one of them.

C Thou shalt nomore se the daye of thy brother, thou shalt nomore beholde the tyme of his captiuyte: thou shalt nomore reioyse ouer the children of Iuda, in the daye of their destructione, thou shalt tryumphe nomore in the tyme of their trouble. Thou shalt nomore come in at the gates off my people, in the tyme of their decaye: thou shalt not se their mysery in the daye of their fall.

Thou shalt sende out no man agaynst their hoost, in the daye of their aduersite: nether shalt thou stōde waytinge enymore at \hat{y} corners of the stretes, to murthur such as are fled, or to take them presoners, that remayne in the daye of their trouble. For the daye off the LORDE is harde by vpon all Heithen. ^f Like as thou hast done, so shalt thou be dealte withall, yee thou shalt be rewarded euen vpon thine heade. For like wyse as ye haue droncken vpon myne holy hill, so shal all heithen dryncke continually: yee dryncke shall they, and swalowe vp, so that ye shall be, as though ye had neuer bene.

D But vpon the mount Sion, there shall a remnaunt escape: ^g these shalbe heny, and the house of Iacob shal possesse euen those, that

The Prophet Ionas.

What Ionas conteyneth.

Chap. I.

God sendeth Ionas vnto Ninieue, he fleyth, and is cast in to the see.

Chap. II.

A fysh swaloweth vp Ionas, which crieth vnto God, and prayseth hym, and the fysh casteth him out agayne vpon the londe.

Chap. III.

God sendeth him agayne to Ninieue, to shewe them the punyishment for to come, yf they wil not repent: they amende, and God is mercifull to them.

Chap. IIII.

Ionas is angrie, and complayneth of God, which refourmeth him.

The first Chapter.

THE worde of the LORDE came vnto ^aIonas the sonne of Amithai, sayenge: Aryse, and get the to Ninieue that greate cite: and preach vnto them, ^bhow ^ytheir wickednesse is come vp before me. And Ionas made him ready to fle vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE, and gat him downe to Ioppa: where he founde a shippe ready for to go vnto Tharsis. So he payde his fare, and wente aborde, that he might go with them vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE.

^a 4 Re. 14. c. Ioue 3. a. Gen. 10. b.

But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see, and there was a mightie tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in ioperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were afrayde, and cried euery man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast in to the see, to lighten it off them. But Ionas gat him vnder ^yhatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

So the master of the shippe came to him ³³ and sayde vnto him: why slomberest thou? Vp, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we peryshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled.^c And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Ionas.

The sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for whose cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence comest thou? what countre man art thou, and of what nacion? He answered them: I am an Ebrue, and I feare the LORDE God of heauen, which made both the see and drie londe. Then were y^e men exceedingly afrayed, and sayde vnto him: why didest thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde morouer vnto him: What shall we do vnto thee, that the see maye cease from troubling vs? (for the see wrought and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wote, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

Neuerthesse, the men assayed with rowinge, to brynge the shippe to lode: but it wolde not be, because the see wrought so, and was so troublous agaynst them. Wherefore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, let vs not perish for this mans death, nether laye thou innocent bloude vnto oure charge: for thou (o LORDE) hast done, euen as thy pleasure was.

So they toke Ionas, and cast him in to the see, and the see lefte ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceedingly, doyng sacrifices and makynge vowes vnto the LORDE.

The ij. Chapter.

BUT the LORDE prepared a greate fyshe, to swallow vp Ionas. So was Ionas in the bely of the fysh, thre dayes and thre nights. And Ionas prayed vnto the LORDE his God, out of the fysshes bely, and sayed: In my trouble I called vnto y^e LORDE, and he herde me: out off the bely off hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce. Thou haddest cast me downe depe in y^e midst off the see, and the floude compassed me aboute: yee all thy wawes and rowles of water went ouer me, I thought that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I wil yet agayne loke towarde thy holy temple.

The waters compassed me, euen to the very soule: the depe laye aboute me, and the wedes were wrapte aboute myne heade. I wente downe to the botome of the hilles, and was barred in with earth for euer. But thou (o LORDE my God) hast brought vp my lyfe agayne out of corrupcion. When my soule faynted within me, I thought vpon the LORDE: and my prayer came in vnto thee, euen in to thy holy temple. They that holde of vayne vanyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I wil do the sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgeuyng, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why? saluacion commeth of the LORDE. And y^e LORDE spake vnto y^e fysh, and it cast out Ionas agayne vpon the drie londe.

The iij. Chapter.

THEN came the worde of the LORDE vnto Ionas agayne, sayenge: vp, and get the to Ninieue that greate cite, and preach vnto them the preaching, which I bade thee. So Ionas arose, and wente to Ninieue at the LORDES commaundement. Ninieue was a greate cite vnto God, namely, off thre dayes iourney.

And Ionas wente to, and entred in to y^e cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, sayenge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Ninieue be ouerthrowen. And the people of Ninieue beleued God, and proclaimed fastinge, and arayed them selues in sack cloth, as well the greate as the small of them. And the tydings came vnto y^e kinge of Ninieue, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his apparell off, and put on sack cloth, and sate him downe in ashes.

And it was cried and commaunded in Ninieue, by the auctorite of the kige and his lordes, sayenge: se that nether man or beest, ox or shepe taist ought at all: and that they nether fede ner drinke water: but put on sack cloth both man and beest, and crye mightely vnto God: yee se that euery man turne fro his euell waye, and from the wickednesse, y^e he hath in honde.

Who can tell? God maye turne, and repete, and cease from his fierce wrath, that we perish not. And when God sawe their workes, how they turned from their wicked wayes: he repented on the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The iiii. Chapter.

¶ WHERFORE Ionas was sore discontent, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre? therfore I haisted rather to fle vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lōge sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shuldest take punyshment. ¶ And now o LORDE, take my life fro me (I beseke the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? and Ionas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on y east syde therof: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

And the LORDE God prepared a wyld vyne, which sprange vp ouer Ionas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to de-lyuer him out of his payne. And Ionas was exceadinge glad of the wyld vyne. But vpō the nexte morow agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordened a worme, which smote the wyld vyne, so that it wethered awaye. And when the Sōne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Sonne bete ouer the heade of Ionas, that he faynted agayne, and wyszshed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better for me to dye, thē to lyue. And God sayd vnto Ionas: Art thou so angrie for the wyld vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the death. And the LORDE sayde: thou hast compassion vpon a wyld vyne, wherō thou bestowdest no laboure, ner maydest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another: And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Niniue that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thōsand per-sonnes, y knowe not their right hōde frō the lefte, besydes moch cattell?

Chap. VII.

The summe off the thinges before sayde. The litle flocke of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

A THIS is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Micheas ^a the Morastite, in the dayes of Ioathan, Achas and Ezechias kiges of Iuda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Ierusalem.

^b Hearre all ye people, marcke this well o earth, and all that therein is: Yee the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen ^c \hat{y} LORDE from his holy temple. For why? beholde, the LORDE shal go out of his place, τ come downe, and treade vpon the hie thinges of the earth. The moūtaynes shall consume vnder him, ^d τ the valleyes shal cleue asunder: like as wax cōsumeth at the fyre, τ as ^e \hat{y} waters runne downward. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Iacob, and the synnes of the house of Israel

B But what is the wickednesse of Iacob? Is not Samaria? ^f Which are the hie places of Iuda? Is not Ierusalē? Therefore I shall make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast in to the valley, τ discouer hir foudaciōs. All hir ymages shalbe brokē downe τ all hir wynnynge shal be brent in the fyre: yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an whore, ^g τ in to an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherefore I wil mourne τ make lamentacion, bare τ naked will I go: I must mourne like ^h \hat{y} dragōs, τ take sorow as ⁱ \hat{y} Estriches: for their woide is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Iuda, τ hath touched ^j \hat{y} porte of my people at Ierusalē allredy. Wepe not, ^k lest they at Geth perceaue it.

C Thou at Betaphra, welter thy self in the dust and ashes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get the hence with shame. The proude shal boast nomore for very sorowe: τ why? hir neighbour shall take from her what she hath. The rebellious cite hopeth, that it shal not be so euell: but for all that, the plage shal come from the LORDE, euen in to the porte of Ierusalem. ^l The greate noyse off the charettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of ^m \hat{y} synne of ⁿ \hat{y} doughter of Sion, for in the came vp the wickednesses of Israel. Yee she sent hir coursers in to the londe of Geth.

The houses of lies will disceau the kynges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Morassa) I shal brynge a possessioner vpon the, τ the plage of Israel shal reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and shaue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shalbe caried awaye captiue from the.

The ij. Chapter.

W O vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, ^o and deuyse vngaciousnesse vpon their beddes, to perfourne it in ^p \hat{y} cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue londe, they take it by violence, ^q they robbe men off their houses.

Thus they oppresse a mā for his house, τ euery man for his heretage. Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: ^r Beholde, agaynst this housholde haue I deuyced a plage, wherout ye shal not plucke youre neckes: Ye shal nomore go so proudly, for it will be a perlous tyme. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mourninge shal be made ouer you on this maner: We be vtterly desolate, the porcion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the londe, that he hath taken from vs?

Neuertheless there shalbe no man to deuide the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. ^s Tush, holde youre tunge (saye they) It shal not fall vpon this people, we shal not come so to confucion, sayeth the house off Iacob. Is the sprete off the LORDE so clene awaye? or is he so mynded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therefore must I take parte agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot out frō their good houses, and taken awaye my excellent giftes from their children. ^t Vp, get you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are corrupte, and shall miserably perish. Yff I were a fleshy felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they might syt bebbinge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I will gather the in dede (o Iacob) and dryue the remnaunt off Israel all together. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the catell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted of other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go before them, and the LORDE shall be vpon the heade of them.

The iij. Chapter.

HEARE, o ye heades of the house of Iacob, and ye leders of the house of Israel: "Shulde not ye knowe, what were lauffull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euell: ye plucke of mens skynnes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eate the flesh of my people, and flay of their skynne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peces as it were in to a cauldron, and as flesh in to a pot. ^b Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: because that thorow their owne ymaginaciōs, they haue dealte so wickedly.

And as concernyng the prophetes that disceave my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: "When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shalbe well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

Therefore youre vision shalbe turned to night, and youre prophecye to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer those prophetes, and the daye shalbe darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, and yf saythayers confounded: yee they shalbe fayne (all the packe of thē) to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods worde. "As for me, I am full of strength, and of yf sprete of yf LORDE, full of iudgment and boldnesse: to shewe the house of Iacob their wickednesse, and the house of Israel their synne.

O heare this ye rulers of the house of Iacob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lauffull, and wraist asyde the thinge that is straight: ^j Ye that buylde vp Zion with bloude, and Ierusalem with doynge wronge. Yet wil they be takē as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORDE amonge vs? ^s Tush, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therefore shal Zion (for youre sakes) be plowed like a felde: Ierusalē shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of y temple shal be turned to an hye wodde.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT in the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that ^t the hill off the LORDES house shalbe set vp hyer thē eny mountaynes or hilles: Yee the people shall preesse vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shal haist them thither, sayēge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of the God of Iacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

For the lawe shall come out off Zion, and the worde of God from Ierusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the Heithen, and reforme the people off farre cōtreēs: so that of their swerdes they shal make plowshares, and sythes off their speares.

One people shall not lift vp a swerde agaynst another, ^u yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but euery man shal syt vnder his viuyarde and vnder his fyge tre, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off y LORDE of hoostes hath spoken it. Therefore, where as all people haue walked euery man in y name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for euer and euer. ^v At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE) will I gather vp the lame and the outcastes, and such as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of y outcastes a greate people: ^w and the LORDE himself shal be their kynge vpon the mount Zion, frō this tyme forth for euermore. ^x And vnto the (O thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the daughter Zion) vnto the shal it come: euē the first lordshipe and kyngdome of the daughter Ierusalē. Now also are there many people gathered together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Sion is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, ^cart litle amonge the thousandes off Iuda. Out off the shal come one vnto me, which shall be ^dgouernoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnyng, and from euerlastinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne: then shall the remnaunt off his brethren be conuerted vnto ^e children off Israel. He shal stonde fast, and geue fode in the strength off the LORDE, ^fand in the victory off the name off ^gLORDE his God: and when they be conuerted, he shall be magnified vnto the farthest partes off the worlde.

33 Then shal there be peace, so that the Assirian maye come in to oure londe, and trade in oure houses. We shall bryng vp seuen shepherdes and viij. prynces vpō them: these shal subdue the londe off Assur with the swerde, and the londe off Nymrod with their naked weapens. ^hThus shal he deluyer vs from the Assiria, when he commeth within oure lande, and setteth his fote within oure borders. And the remnaunt off Iacob shal be amonge the multitude off people, as the dew off the LORDE, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for no man, and waiteth off no body. ⁱYee the residue off Iacob shalbe amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the bestes off ^jwyddes, and as the lyons whelpe amonge a flocke off shepe: which (when he goeth thorow) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thyne honde shalbe lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

The tyme shal come also (sayeth the C LORDE) that I wil take thine horses from the, ^kand destroye thy charettes. I wil breake downe the cities off thy londe, and ouerthrowe all thy stronge holdes. ^lAll witchcraftes will I rote out off thine hande, there shall no soyshtsayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thine ymages will I destroye out off ^m so that thou shalt nomore bowe thy self vnto the workes off thine owne bondes. Thy groues wil I plucke vp by the rotes, ⁿand breake downe thy cities. Thus will I be anged also, vpon all Heithen that will not heare.

The vi. Chapter.

HERKEN now what the LORDE sayeth: 34 ^oVp, reprove the mountaynes, ^pand let the hilles heare thy voyce. O Heare the punyishment off the LORDE, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundacios off ^q the earth: for the LORDE wil reprove his people, ^rand reason with Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the? or wherein haue I hurte the? geue me answer. ^sBecause I brought the fro the londe off Egipte, and dehuyered the out off the house off bondage? Because I made Moses, Aaron and Miriam to lede the? ^tRemember (o my people) what Balach the kyng off Moab had ymaged agaynst the, ^uand what answer that Balaam the sonne off Beor gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: ^vye maye knowe the loungye kyndnesses off ^w the LORDE.

35 What acceptable thyngye shal I offre vnto the LORDE? shall I bowe my kne to the hye God? Shal I come before him with brent offeringes, and with calues off a yeare olde? Hath the LORDE a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames off oyle? Or shal I geue my firstborne for myne offences, and the frute off my body for the synne off my soule? I wil shewe the (O mā) what is good, and what the LORDE requyareth off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in loungye kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: ^xthat thou mayest be called a cite off the LORDE, ^yand that thy name maye be rightuousnesse. Heare (o ye trybes) who wolde els geue you such warnynge? ^aShulde I not be displeased, for the vnrightuous good in the houses of the wicked, and because the measure is minished? Or shulde I iustifie the false balauces and the bagge of disceatfull weightes, amonge those that be full off riches vnrightuously gotten: where the citiesyns deale with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceatfull tunges in their mouthes?

C Therefore I will take in honde to punysh the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, τ not haue ynough: yee thou shalt bringe thy self downe. ^bThou shalt fle, but not escape: \AA d those \hat{y} thou woldest saue, wil I deluyuer to the swerde. Thou shalt sowe, but not reape: ^cthou shalt presse out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, and to anyoynete thy self withall: thou shalt treade out swete must, but shalt drynke no wyne. ^dYe kepe the ordinaunces of Amri, τ all the customes of the house of Achab: ye folowe their pleasures, therefore wil I make the waist, τ cause thy inhabitors to be abhorred, O my people: τ thus shalt thou beare thine owne shame.

The viij. Chapter.

WO is me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleenynge in the haruest. There are no mo grapes to eate, yet wolde I fayne (with all my herte) haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpo earth, ^ethere is not one rightuous amoge mē. They laboure all to shed bloude, τ euery mā hunteth his brother to death: yet they saye they do well, when they do euell. As the prince wil, so sayeth the iudge: \hat{y} he maye do him a pleasure agayne. The greate inā speaketh what his herte desyret, τ \hat{y} hearers alowe him. The best off thē is but as a thistle, and the most rightuous of them is but as a brere in the hedge. But when the daye of thy preachers commeth, \hat{y} thou shalt be vysited: thē shal they be waisted awaye. ^fLet no man beleue his frende, ner put his confidēce in a prince. Kepe the porte of thy mouth, from her \hat{y} lieth in thy bosome: ^gfor \hat{y} sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the daughter shal ryse agaynst her mother, \hat{y} daughter in lawe agaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans foes shalbe euen they of his owne housholde.

Neuertheless I wil loke vp vnto \hat{y} LORDE, 33 I wil patiently abyde God my sauioure: my God shal heare me. O thou enemye of myne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shal get vp agayne: ^hand though I syt in darcknesse, yet \hat{y} LORDE is my light. I wil beare the punishment of the LORDE (for why, I haue offended him) till he syt in iudgment vpon my cause, and se that I haue right. He wil bringe me forth to the light, and I shal se his rightuousnesse.

She that is myne enemy shal loke vpon it, τ be confounded, which now saiet: ⁱWhere is thy LORDE God? Myne eyes shal beholde her, when she shalbe troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. ^kThe tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lawe shal goe abrode: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the strōge cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

Notwithstandinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therein, and for the frutes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charnel, Basan τ Galaad as afore tyme. Maruelous things will I shewe them, ^llike as when they came out of Egipte. This shal the Heithen se, and be aszshamed for all their power: ^mso that they shal laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. ⁿThey shal licke the dust like a serpent, τ as the wormes of the earth, \hat{y} tremble in their holes. They shalbe afrayed of the LORDE oure God, τ they shal feare \hat{y} .

Where is there such a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forgeuest the offences of the remnaunt of thine heretage? He kepeth not his wrath for euer. And why? his delyte is to haue compassion: ^ohe shal turne agayne, τ be mercifull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednesses, τ cast all oure synnes in to the botome of the see. Thou shalt kepe thy trust with Iacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast sworne vnto oure fathers longe agoo.

Chap. II

Chap. III.

He reponeth the abhominacions of the malicious cite, and sheweth them of their punyshment.

THIS is the heuy burthen of Niniue, which Naum of Elchos dyd wryte, as he sawe it

The first Chapter.

THE LORDE is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeance: yee a taker of vengeaunce is y^e LORDE, and wrothfull. ^aThe LORDE taketh vengeance of his enemies, and reseruech displeasure for his aduersaries. ^bThe LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leaueth no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. Whē he reponeth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charmel and the pleasure of Libanus waisteth awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh: yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therin. ^cWho maye endure before his wrath? Or who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? His anger taketh on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

Ful gracious is the LORDE, and a stronge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth thē that put their trust in him: when the floude renneth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies. What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this maner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come nomore trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dronckardes be consumed together, euen when they be full. There come out of y^e soch as ymagin myschefe, and geue vngracious counsell agaynst the LORDE.

Therefore thus saieth the LORDE: Let thē be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil vex the, but not vtterly destroie the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORDE hath geuen a commaundement cōcernynge the, that there shall come nomore sede of thy name. ^dThe carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

BEHOULDE, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, ^a that bryngeth good tydings, & preacheth peace. O Iuda, kepe thy holy dayes, perfourme thy promyses: for Belial shal come nomore in the, he is vtterly roted out.

The scatterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Iacob, like as ^g glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken them downe, & marred the wyne braunches. The shyld of his giauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forward, his archers are wel deckte & trimmed. The charettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cresettes of fyre, and go swyftly, as the lightenynge.

B When he doth but warne his giauntes, they fall in their araye, & haistely they clymme vp the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shall fall. The queene hir self shal be led awaye captiue, and hir gentilwomen shal mourne as the doves, & grone within their hertes. ^b Niniue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stōde, (shal they crie) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shalbe a multitude of all maner costly ornaments. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & cleue striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees trēble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyōs, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes? where the lyon and the lyoness wente with the whelpes, and no man frayed them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyoness: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauyszshed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieyth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charettes, that they shal smoke withall, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoylinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaugers shall nomore be herde.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, ^c & wil not leaue of from rauyszshinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, ruszshinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the horses, & the rollinge of the charettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisterynge speares: There lyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of deed bodies: There is no ende of deed coarces, yee men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beutifull harlot: which is a mastresse of wychcraft, yee and selleth the people thorow hir whordome, and the nacions thorow hir wichcraft.

^d Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieyth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy heade: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the Heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyrte vpon ^e, to make the be abhorred, and a gasyng stocke: Yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Niniue is destroyed.

Who wil haue pyte vpō the? where shal I seke one to conforte the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexāndria? that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see? Ethiopia and Egyp̄te were hir strēth, & that exceedinge greate aboute measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir helpers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuyte: hir yonge children were smytten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be droncken, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees with rype fyges: which whē a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

C Beholde, thy people with in the are but women: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure thy barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy strōge holdes, go in to the claye, tempr the morter, make

The first Chapter.

THIS is the heuy burthē, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. ^a O LORDE, how longe shal I erie, ⁊ thou wilt not heare? ^b How longe shal I complayne vnto the, suffrynge wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why lettest thou me se weerynesse and labour? Tyrāny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is torne in peeces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the rightuous: this is the cause, ſ wronge iudgment procedeth. ^c Beholde amonge the Heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abaszshed: for I wil do a thinge in youre tyme, which though it be tolde you, ye shal not beleue.

For lo, ^d I wil rase vp ſ Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwellinge places, that be not their owne. A grymme ⁊ boysteous people is it, these shal syt in iudgment ⁊ punyshe. Their horses are swifter then the cattes of the mountayne, ⁊ byte sorer then ſ wolues in ſ euenynge. ^e Their horsemen come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastily to deuoure as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them commeth an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captuyes, like as the sonde. They shall mocke the kinges, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh corage vnto them, to go forth τ to do more euell, $^{\alpha}$ τ so ascrybe that power vnto their God.

C But thou o LORDE my God, my holy one, thou art from the begynnyng, therefore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordened them for a punyshmet, and set them to reprove the nightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde \hat{y} thinge that is wicked. $^{\beta}$ Wherefore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the creping beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, τ gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therefore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so plēteous. Wherefore they cast out their net agayne, τ neuer cease to slaye the people.

The ij. Chapter.

A I STODE vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke τ se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answere I shulde geue him \hat{y} reproueth me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so commeth by, maye rede it: for \hat{y} visiō is yet farre of for a tyme, $^{\gamma}$ but at \hat{y} last it shal come to passe, τ not fayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, $^{\delta}$ for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not prospere: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. $^{\epsilon}$ Like as the wyne disceaueth the dronckarde, euen so the proude shal fayle τ not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, τ is as vnsaciack as death. $^{\zeta}$ All Heithen gathereth he to him, τ heapeth vnto him all people.

B But shall not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vp other mens goodes? How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, \hat{y} shal byte the, τ awake, that shal teare \hat{y} in peces? yee thou shalt be their pray. $^{\eta}$ Seinge thou hast spoyled many Heithen, therefore shall the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, τ for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite τ vnto all them that dwel therin.

$^{\theta}$ Wo vnto him, that couetously gathereth euell gotten goodes in to his house: that he maye set his nest an hye, to escape from the power of mysfortune. $^{\iota}$ Thou hast deuysed \hat{y} shame of thine owne house, for thou hast slayne to moch people, and hast wilfully offended: $^{\kappa}$ so that the very stones of the wall shal crie out of it, and the tymbre that lieth betwixe the ioyntes of the buyldinge shall answere. $^{\lambda}$ Wo vnto him, \hat{y} buyldeth the towne with bloude, and maynteneth \hat{y} cite with vnrightuousnes. Shal not the LORDE of hoostes bringe this to passe, that the laboures of the people shal be brent with a greate fyre, and that the thinge wher vpon the people haue weered them selues, shall be lost? $^{\mu}$ For the earth shalbe full of knowlege of the LORDES honoure, like as the waters that couer the see.

C Wo vnto him that geueth his neghboure dryncke, to get him wrothfull displeasure for his dronckennesse: $^{\nu}$ that he maye se his preytees. Therefore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Dryncke thou also, till thou slombre withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hōde shall compasse the aboute, and shamefull spewinge in steade of thy worshipe. For the wrōge that thou hast done in Libanus, shal ouerwhelme the, $^{\xi}$ and the wilde beastes shal make the afrayed: because of mens bloude, and for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite, and vnto all soch as dwel therin.

syluer, ⁊ there is no breth in it. ^a But the LORDE in his holy tēple is he, whom all the worlde shulde feare.

The iij. Chapter.

A prayer of the prophet Abacuc for the ignoraunt.

A LORDE, when I herde speake of ſ, I was afrayed. The worke ſ thou hast taken in honde, shalt thou perfourme in his tyme, O LORDE: and when thy tyme cometh, thou shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God cometh from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory couereth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shyne is as ſonne, ⁊ beames of light go out of his hondes, there is his power hid. Destructiō goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondesth, ⁊ measureth the earth: He loketh, ⁊ the people consume away, the moūtaynes of ſ worlde fall downe to powlder, and the hilles are fayne to bowe them selues, for his goinges are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the pauillions of the Morians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were vexed for weerynesse. Wast thou not angrie (o LORDE) in the waters? was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see? yes, whē thou sattet vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory. Thou shewdest thy bowe opely, like as thou ^b haddest promised with an ooth vnto the trybes. Sela.

B Thou didest deuyde the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes saw the, they were afrayed, ſ water streame wēte away: the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vp of thine honde. ^c The Sonne and Mone remainyd still in their habitacion. Thine arowes wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as the shyne of the lightenyng. ^d Thou trodest downe the londe in thine anger, and didest throsse the Heithen in thy displeasure. Thou camest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe thine anoynted. Thou smotest downe the heade in the house of the vngodly, ⁊ discourdest his foundacions, euē vnto ſ necke of him. Sela.

Thou cursest his septers, the captayne of his men of warre: which come as a stormy wynde to scatre me abrode, ⁊ are glad when they maye eat vp ſ poore secretly. Thou makest a waye for thine horses in the see, euen in the mudde of greate waters. Whē I heare this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at ſ voyce therof, my bones corruppe, I am afrayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might go vp vnto oure people, which are already prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, ⁊ the vynes shal beare no frute. The labour of ſ olyue shalbe but lost, and the londe shall bringe no corne: the shepe shalbe taken out of ſ folde, and there shalbe no catell in ſ stalles. But as for me, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Sautioure. ^e The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: ⁊ he which geueth ſ victory, shal bringe me to my hye places, synginge vpon my psalmes.

The Prophet Sophony.

What Sophony conteyneth.

Chap. I.

He prophecieth of plages for to come vpon Iuda.

Chap. II.

He exorteth them to amēde, that they maye escape the wrath of God: and sheweth the Gentiles their punyishment.

Chap. III.

Punyishment because of the wickednesse of the Iewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the Heithen.

The first Chapter.

THIS is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedolias, the sonne of Amarias & sonne of Hezechias: in the tyme of Iosias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda. ^a I will gather vp all thinges in the londe (saieth the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beast: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see (to the greate decaye of the wicked) & wil vtterly destroye the men out of the londe, saieth the LORDE. I wil stretch out myne honde vpon Iuda, and vpon all such as dwel at Ierusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnaunt of Baal from this place, and the names of the Kemuryus and prestes: yee & such as vpon their house toppes worshipe & bowe them selues vnto the hoost of heauen: which sweare by the LORDE,^b and by their Malchom also: which starte a backe from y^e LORDE, and nether seke after the LORDE, ner regarde him.

B ^c Be still at y^e presence of the LORDE God, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offeringe, and called his gestes therto. And thus shall it happen in the daye of the LORDES a slaynofferinge: ^d I will vyset the prynces, the kinges children, & all such as weere straunge clothinge. In the same daye also wil I vyset all those, that treade ouer the thresholde so proudly, which fyll their lordes house with robbery and falscede. At y^e same tyme (saieth the LORDE) there shall be herde a greate crie from the fyshporte, and an howlinge from y^e other porte, and a greate murthur from the hilles. Howle ye that dwel in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are rote out.

^e At the same tyme wil I seke thorow Ierusalem with lanternes, and vyset them that contynue in their dregges, and saye in their hertes: Tush, the LORDE wil do nether good ner euell. Their goodes shalbe spoyled, and their houses layed waist. ^f They shall buylde houses, and not dwel in them: they shal plante vynyardes, but not drynke the wyne therof. ^g For the greate daye of the LORDE is at honde, it is harde by, & cometh on a pace. Horrible is y^e tydinges of the LORDES daye, then shall the giaunte crie out: for that daye is a daye of wrath, a daye of trouble & heuynesse, a daye of vtter destruction & mysery, a dareke & glomyng daye, a cloudy & stormy daye, a daye of the noyse of trompettes and shawmes, agaynst the stronge cities and hie towres. I wil bringe y^e people in to soch vexacion, that they shal go aboute like blinde mē, because they haue synned agaynst the LORDE. Their bloude shalbe shed as the dust, & their bodies as the myre. ^aNether their syluer ner their golde shalbe able to deluyer thē in that wrothfull daye of the LORDE, ^bbut the whole londe shalbe consumed thorow the fyre of his gelousy: for he shall soone make cleue ryddaunce of all them that dwell in the londe.

The ij. Chapter.

COME together and gather you, O ye frauwerde people: or y^e thinge go forth that is concluded, & or the tyme be passed awaye as the dust: or the fearfull wrath of the LORDE come vpon you, yee or the daye of the LORDES sore displeasure come vpon you. ^cSeke the LORDE all yee meke harted vpon earth, ye that worke after his iudgmēt: seke rightuousnesse, seke lowlynesse: that ye maye be defended in the wrothfull daye of y^e LORDE. ^dFor Gaza shal be destroyed, & Ascalon shall be layed waist: They shal cast out Aszdod at the noone daye, and Accaron shal be pluckte vp by the rotes.

Wo vnto you y^e dwell vpon the see coast, ye murthurous people: the worde of y^e LORDE shal come vpon you. O Canaan thou londe of the Philistynes, I wil destroye the, so that there shal no man dwell in the eny more: & as for the see coast, it shal be hyrdmens cotages & shepe foldes: yee it shalbe a porcion for such as remaine of the house of Iuda, to fede ther vpon. In y^e houses of Ascalon shal they rest towarde night: for the LORDE their God shal vsset thē, & turne awaye their captiuite. I haue herde the despite of Moab, & the ^eblasphemies of the children of Ammon: how they haue shamefully intreated my people, and magnified them selues within the borders of their londe. Therefore as truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel) Moab shalbe as Sodome, & Ammon as Gomorra: euen drie thorne hedges, salt pittes and a perpetuall wyldernes. The residue of my folke shall spoyle them, the remnaunt of my people shall haue them in possession. This shal happen vnto them for their pryde, ^fbecause they haue deale so shamefully with the LORDE of hostes people, and magnified them selues aboute them. The LORDE shall be grymme vpon them, and ^gdestroye all the goddes in the londe. And all the Iles of the Heithen shal worshipe him, euery man in his place.

Ye Morias also shal perish with my swerde: ^hYee he shall stretch out his honde ouer the north, and destroye Assur. As for Ninieue, he shal make it desolate, drye and waist. The flockes and all the beastes of the people shal lye in the myddest of it, pellicanes and storckes shall abyde in the vpper postes of it, foules shal synge in the wyndowes, and rauens shal syt vpon the balekes, for the bordes of Cedre shalbe ryue downe. ⁱThis is the proude and carelesse cite, that sayde in hir herte: I am, and there is els none. O how is she made so waist, y^e the beestes lye therein? Who so goeth by, mocketh her, and poynteth at her with his fynger.

The iij. Chapter.

WO to the abhominable, fylthie and ^kcruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the LORDE, nether wil she holde her to hir God. ^lHir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons: hir iudges are as wolues in the euenyng, which leaue nothinge behynde them till the morow. Hir prophetes are light personnes and vnfaithfull men: hir prestes vnhalowe the Sanctuaty, and do wronge vnder the pretence of the lawe. But the iust LORDE that doth no vnright, was amonge them, euery mornyng shewinge them his lawe clearly, and ceased not. But the vngodly wil not lerne to be aszshamed. Therefore wil I rote out this people, and destroye their towres: yee and make their stretes so voyde, that no man shall go therin. Their cities shall be brokē downe, so that no body shal be left, ner dwell there eny more.

I sayde vnto them: O feare me, and be ^mcōtent to be reformed. That their dwellinge shulde not be destroyed, and that there shulde happen vnto them none of these things, wherwith I shal vyset the. But neuertheles they stonde vp early, to folowe the filthyynes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore ye shal waite vpon me (saieth the LORDE) vntil the tyme that I stonde vp: for I am determed, to gather the people and to bringe the kingdomes together, that I maye poure out myne anger, yee all my wrathfull displeasure vpon them. ^aFor all the worlde shalbe consumed with the fyre of my gelousy. And then wil I clyense the lippes of the people, that they maye euerychone call vpon the name of the LORDE, and serue him with one shulder. Such as I haue subdued, and my children also whom I haue scatred abrode, shal brynge me presentes beyonde the waters of Ethiopia.

^cIn that tyme shalt thou nomore be confounded, because of all thy ymaginacions, wher thorow thou baddest offended me: ^bfor I wil take awaye the proude boosters of thine honoure from the, so that thou shalt nomore tryumphe because of my holy hill. In the also wil I leaue a smal poore symple people, which shal trust in the name of the LORDE. The remnaunt of Israel shal do no wickednes, ner speake lyes: nether shal there eny deceitful tunge be founde in their mouthes. For they shal be fed, and take their rest, and no man shal make them afrayed. Geue thankes o daughter Siō, be ioyful o Israel: reioyce & be glad from thy whole herte, o daughter Ierusalem, for the LORDE hath taken awaye thy punyshment, and turned backe thine enemies. The kinge of Israel, euen the LORDE himself is with the: so that thou nedest nomore to feare eny mysfortune.

In that tyme it shall be sayed to Ierusalem: feare not, and to Sion: let not thine hondes be slacke, for the LORDE thy God is with the, it is he that hath power to saue: he hath a special pleasure in the, and a maruelous loue towards the: yee he reioyseth ouer the with gladnesse. Such as haue bene in heuynesse, wil I gather together, and take out of thy congregacion: as for the shame and reprofe that hath bene layed vpon the, it shal be farre from the. And lo, in ^y tyme wil I destroye all those that vexed the: ^eI wil helpe the lame, and gather vp the cast awaye: yee I wil get them honoure and prayse in all lōdes, where they haue bene put to shame. At ^y same tyme wil I bringe you in, and at the same tyme wil I gather you. I wil get you a name and a good reporte, amonge all people of the earth, when I turne backe youre captiuyte before youre eyes, saieth the LORDE.

The Prophet Aggeus.

What Aggeus conteyneth.

Chap. I.

He exorteth the people to buyde vp the tēple, and reproueth their lōge tariēge.

Chap. II.

He geueth the rulers a corage. Of the ornāmetes and glory of the seconde temple, wherby is vnderstode the church of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

IN the seconde yere of kynge Darius, ^ain the vj. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) ^bvnto Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel ^cȳ prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LORDE of hoostes, and saieth: This people doth saye: The tyme is not yet come to buyde vp the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus ^dȳ sayed: ^eYe youre selues can fynde tyme to dwell in syled houses, and shal this house lye waist? Considre now youre owne wayes in youre hertes (saieth ^fȳ LORDE of hoostes) ye sowe moch, but ye bringe litle in: ^gYe eate, but ye haue not ynough: ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye deeke youre selues, but ye are not warme: ^hȳ he ⁱȳ earneth eny wage, putteth it in a broken purse.

33 Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Cōsidre youre owne wayes in youre hertes, get you vp to the mountayne, fetch wod, ^kȳ buyde vp the house: ^lȳ that it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honour, saieth the LORDE. Ye loked for moch, and lo it is come to litle: ^mȳ though ye brynge it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why so, saieth the LORDE of hoostes? ⁿEuē because that my house lyeth so waist, ^oand ye renne euery man vnto his owne house. Wherfore the heauen is forbyddē to geue you eny dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you encrease. ^pI haue called for a drouth, both vpō the londe ^qȳ vpon the mountaynes, vpon corne, vpon wyne ^rȳ vpon oyle, vpon euery thinge that the grounde bryngeth forth, vpon men and vpon catell, yee and vpon all handy laboure.

Now when Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, ^sȳ Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest with the remnaunt of the people, herde the voyce of the LORDE their God, ^tȳ the wordes of the prophet Aggeus (like as the LORDE their God had sent him) the people dyd feare the LORDE. Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: ^uI am with you, saieth the LORDE. So the LORDE waked vp the sprete of Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and the sprete of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hye prest, and the sprete of the remnaunt of all the people: ^vȳ they came ^wȳ laboured, in the house of the LORDE of hoostes their God.

The ij. Chapter.

AVPON the xxiiij. daye of the sixte moneth, in the secōde yere of kinge Darius, the xxi. daye of the seuenth moneth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Iosedec the hie prest, and to the residue of ŷ people, ⁊ saye: ^a Who is left amōge you, that sawe this house in hir first beuty? But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, euē as though it were nothinge? Neuerthelesse he of good chere, o Zorobabel (saieih the LORDE) ^b be of good conforte, o Iesua thou sonne of Iosedec, hie prest: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saieih the LORDE of hoostes, and do aordinge to the worde (for I am with you, ^c saieih the LORDE of hoostes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: ⁊ my sprete shalbe amonge you, feare ye not.

B For thus saieih the LORDE of hoostes: ^d Yet once more will I shake heauē and earth, the see and the drye lōde: Yee I will moue all Heithen, ⁊ the comforte of all Heithen shall come, ⁊ so wil I fyll this house with honoure, saieih the LORDE of hoostes. The syluer is myne, ^e ⁊ the golde is myne, saieih the LORDE of hoostes. Thus ŷ glory of the last house shalbe greater thē the first, saieih the LORDE of hoostes: ⁊ in this place wil I geue peace, saieih the LORDE of hoostes.

The xxiiij. daye of the ix moneth in the secōde yere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saieih ŷ LORDE God of hoostes: Axe the prestes concernyng the lawe, ⁊ saye: ^f Yf one beare holy flesh in his cote lappe, ⁊ with his lappe do touch the bred, potage, wyne, oyle or eny other meate: shall he be holy also? The prestes answered, ⁊ saide: No. Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beyng defyled with a deed carcase, touch eny of these: shall it also be vnclene? The prestes gaue answeere ⁊ sayed: yee, it shall be vnclene. ^g Thē Aggeus answered, and sayde: Euen so is this people ⁊ this nacion before me, saieih ŷ LORDE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vnclene.

And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpō another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. bushshels, there were scarce ten: ^h and that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. pottes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blastinge ⁊ hale stones in all the labours of youre hondes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saieih the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of the ix. moneth, vnto the daye that the fundacion of the LORDES temple was layed: ⁱ Marek it well, Is not the sede yet in the barme? haue not the ynes, the ŷyge trees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet vnfrutefull? but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospere.

Morouer the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee ⁊ destroye the mightie kingdome of the Heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, euery man thorow his neghbours swerde. And as for the, o Zorobabel (saieih the LORDE of hoostes) thou sonne of Salathiel, my seruauant: I wil take the (saieih the LORDE) at the same tyme, and make the as a seale: for I haue chosen the, saieih the LORDE of hoostes

IN the eight moneth of the secōde yeare of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, say-enge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. ^aTurne you vnto me (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saith the LORDE of hoostes. ^cBe not he sayde vnto me: what seist thou? I answered: I se a flyenge boke of xx. cubites longe & x. cubites brode. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, ȳ goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theues shalbe iudged after this boke, & all swearers shalbe iudged accordinge to the same. I wil bringe it forth (saith the LORDE of hoostes) ^aso ȳ it shal come to the house of the thefe, & to the house of him, that falsely sweareth by my name: & shal remaine in his house, & cōsume it, with the tymbre & stones therof. Thē the angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes & se, what this is ȳ goeth forth. And I sayde: what is it? He answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde morouer: Euen thus are they (ȳ dwell vpon the whole earth) to loke vpon. 3 And beholde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & threwe ȳ lompe of leade vp in to an hole.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a Storke) & they lift vp the measure betwixte the earth & the heauen. Then spake I to the angel, ȳ talked with me: whyther wil these beare the measure? And he sayde vnto me: ^bin to the londe of Synear, to buylde them an house: which when it is prepared, the measure shall be set there in his place.

The vi. Chapter.

3 MOROUER I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came iiij. charettes out frō betwixte two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: ^cIn the first charet were reade horse, In the secōde charet were blacke horse, In ȳ thirde charet were whyte horse, In ȳ fourth charet were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lorde, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: ^dThese are the iiij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stōde before the ruler of all ȳ earth. That with the blacke horse wente in to the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed thē, and the sprekled horses wente forth towarde the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their journey ouer the whole earth. And he sayde: get you hence, and go thorow the worlde. So they wēte thorow out the worlde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go towarde ȳ north, shal still my wrath in the north cōntre.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto 3 me, sayenge: Take of the prisoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Heldai, Tobias and Idaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Iosias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heade of Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, the hie prest, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, the man whose name is the braunch: ^e& he that shall springe vp after him, shal buylde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shall buylde vp the temple of the LORDE. ^fHe shal beare the prayse, he shall syt vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

^gA prest shall he be also vpon his trone, & a peaceable counsell shalbe betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembrance vnto Helem, Tobias, Idaia and Hen the sonne of Sophony. And such as be farre of, shal come and buylde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil herken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God.

The viij. Chapter.

3 IT happened also in the fourth yeare of the kyng Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Casleu: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before ȳ LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the prestes, which were in the house of the LORDE of hoostes, and to the prophetes: ^hShulde I wepe in the fyfte moneth, and absteyne, as I haue done now certayne yeares? of the LORDE of hoostes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the prestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned ^a in the v̄ r̄ vij. moneth (now this lxx. yeares) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues? Are not these the wordes, which the LORDE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Ierusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt mē, both towarde the south and in the playne countrees?

B And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary, sayenge: Thus saith ^ȳ LORDE of hoostes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and louyng kyndnesse, ^e euery man to his brother: Do the wyddowe, the fatherlesse, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ynagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. ^c Neuertheles they wolde not take hede, but turned their backes, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare, yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe ^{r̄} wordes, ^d which the LORDE of hoostes sent in his holy sprete by the prophetes afore tyme.

Wherfore the LORDE of hoostes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, ^e that like as he spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but scatered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knewe not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, ^ȳ there trauald no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasaunt londe was vtterly layed waist.

The viij. Chapter.

A SO the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the myddest of Ierusalem: ^f so that Ierusalem shalbe called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hoostes, yee an holy hill.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes:

There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Ierusalem: yee and soch as go with staues in their hondes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shalbe full of yonge boyes and damselles, playunge vpon the stretes.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: yf the residue of this people thynke it to be vnpossible in these dayes, shulde it therefore be vnpossible in my sight, ^g sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil deluyr my people from the londe of the east and west, and wil brynge them agayne: that they maye dwel at Ierusalem. ^h They shalbe my people, and I will be their God, in treuth and rightuousnesse. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: let youre hondes be stronge, ye that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundation is layed vpon the LORDE of hoostes house, that the temple maye be buylded. ⁱ For why? before these dayes nether men ner catel coude wyne eny thinge, nether might eny man coue in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let euery man go agaynst his neyghboure.

Neuerthelesse I wil now intreate the residue of this people nomore, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but they shalbe a sede of peace. ^k The vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the gronde shal geue hir increase, and the heauens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnaunt of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the Heithen (O ye house of Iuda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I deluyr you, that ye shalbe a blesyng: feare not, but let youre hōdes be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: like as I deuyed to puynsh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wrath (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Iuda and Ierusalem, therefore feare ye not. Now the things that ye shal do, are these: ^l Speake euery man the treuth vnto his neyghboure, execute iudgment truly and peaceably within youre portes, none of you ymagyn euell in his hert agaynst his neyghboure, and loue no false oother: for all these are the thinges that I hate, sayeth the LORDE. And the worde of the LORDE of hoostes came vnto me, sayenge: thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: D The fast of the fourth moneth, the fast of the fifth, the fast of the seuenth, and the fast of the tenth, shal be ioye and gladnesse, and prosperous hie feastes vnto the house of Iuda: Only, loue the treuth and peace.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: There shall yet come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: ^a Vp, let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, let vs seke the LORDE of hoostes, I wil go with you. Yee moch people and mightie Heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hoostes at Ierusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: In that tyme shal ten men (out of all maner of languages of the Gentiles) take one Iewe by the hemme of his garment, and saye: we wil go with you, for we haue herde, that God is amonge you.

The ii. Chapter.

A THE worde of the LORDE shalbe receaued at Adrach, and Damascus shal be his offeringe: for the eyes of all mē and of the trybes of Israel shall loke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hemath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also and Sidon, for they are very wise. ^b Tyrus shal make herself stronge, heape vp syluer as the sonde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power in to the see, and she shalbe consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be afrayed. Gaza shalbe very sory, so shal Accaron also, ^c because hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shall perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwel.

Straungers shall dwel at Aszdod, and as for ^d pryde of ^e Philistynes, I shal rote it out. Their bloude will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominaciōs from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for oure God, yee they shalbe as a prynce in Iuda, and Accaron like as Iebusi. And so will I compase my house rounde aboute with my men of warre, goinge to and fro: that no oppresseure come vpon them eny more. For that haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o daughter Sion: be glad, o daughter Ierusalem. ^f For lo, thy kinge cometh vnto the, euen the righteous and Sauioyre: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpon the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charettes fro Ephraim, and the horse from Ierusalem, the batel bowes shal be destroyed. He shall geue the doctryne of peace vnto the Heithen, and his dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, and from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thorow the bloude of thy couenaunt: ^g shalt let thy presoners out of the pytte, wherin is no water. Turne you now to the stronge holde, ^h ye that be in preson, and longe sore to be delyuered: And this daye I bringe the worde, that I wil rewarde the dubble agayne. For Iuda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Siō) wil I raise vp agaynst the Grekes, and make the as a giantes swearde: the LORDE God shalbe sene aboute thē, and his dartes shall go forth as the lightenynge. The LORDE God shall blowe the trompet, and shal come forth as a storme out of the south.

ⁱ The LORDE of hoostes shall defende thē, they shall consume and deuoure, and subdue them with slynge stones. They shal drynke and rage, as it were thorow wyne. They shalbe fylled like ^j basens, and as ^k hornes of ^l y alter. The LORDE their God shal delyuer thē in ^m daye, as the flock off his people: for the stones off his Sanctuary shalbe set vp in his lide. O how prosperous and goodly a thyng shall that be? The corne shall make the yonge men chearefull, and the new wyne the maydens.

The i. Chapter.

sayers se lyes, and tell but vayne dreames: the comforth that they geue, is nothyng worth. Therefore go they astraye like a flocke of shepe, and are troubled, because they haue no shepherde. ^a My wrothfull displeasure is moued at the shepherdes, and I will vyset the goates. For the LORDE of hoostes wil graciously vyset his flocke (the house of Iuda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horse in the batell. ^b Out of Iuda shal come the helmet, the nale, the batelbowe, and all the princes together. They shalbe as the giauntes, which in the batell treade downe the myre vpon y stretes. They shal fight, for y LORDE shalbe with them, so that the horsmen shalbe confounded.

³³ I wil coforte the house of Iuda, and pre-serue the house of Ioseph. I wil turne them also, for I pytie them: and they shal be like as they were, when I had not cast them of. For I the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim shalbe as a giaunt, and their herte shalbe cherefull as thorow wyne: Yee their children shal se it, and be glad, and their herte shal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them and gather them together, for I wil redeme them. They shall increase, as they increased afore. I wil sowe thē amonge the people, y they maye thinke vpo me in farre countrees: they shal lyue with their childre, and turne agayne. I wil bringe them agayne also from the londe of Egyp̄te, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them in to y londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal wante nothyng. He shall go vpon the see of trouble, and smyte the see waves: so y all the depe floudes shalbe dried vp. The proude boostinge of Assur shalbe cast downe, and the scepter off Egyp̄te shall be taken awaye. I wil comferte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saieith the LORDE.

The xi. Chapter.

^a OPEN thy dores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye Fyrre trees, for the Cedre is fallē, yee all y proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye oke trees of Baasan) for y mightie stronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Mē maye heare the lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Iordane is waisted awaye.

Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: Fede the shepe of y slaughter, which shalbe slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no synne, but they y sell thē, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: Yee their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I nomore spare those that dwell in the londe (sayeth the LORDE) but lo, I wil deluye the people, euery man in to his neighbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kyng: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their hondes wil not I deluye them.

I myself fedde y slaughter shepe (a poore flocke verely) and toke vnto me two stanes: the one I called louyng mekenesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. The shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye with them, nether had they eny delyte in me. Then sayde I: I will fede you nomore, the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil perishe, let it perishe, and let the rēnaunt eate, euery one the flesh of his neighbour. I toke also my louyng meke staff, and brake it, that I might disanull the conuenaunt, which I made with all people, And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yf ye thinke it good, brynge hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. syluer pens, y value that I was pryced at. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. syluer pens, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I might lowse the brotherheade betwixte Iuda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I will raise vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for such as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shal not norish the thinge that is whole: but he shall eate the flesh off such as be fat, and teare their clawes in peces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaueth the flocke. The swerde shal come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shalbe clenē dried vp, and his right eye shalbe sore blynded.

The xij. Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE hath deuysed for Israel.

A THUS saith the LORDE, which spred the beaucs abrode, ^alayde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man \hat{y} breath of life: Beholde, I will make Ierusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people \hat{y} are rounde aboute her: ^bYee Iuda himself also shalbe in the sege agaynst Ierusalem. At the same tyme will I make Ierusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all such as lift it vp, shalbe toarne and r \hat{e} te, and all the people of the earth shalbe gathered together agaynst it.

B In that daye (sayeth \hat{y} LORDE) I will make all horses abashed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, \hat{a} nd smyte all the horses of the people with blyndnesse. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabiters off Ierusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORDE off hoostes their God. ^cIn that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hote burnynge ouen with wodd, and like a cresshet off fyre amonge the strawe: so that they shal c \hat{o} sume all the people r \hat{o} nde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Ierusal \hat{e} also shalbe inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Ierusalem stondeth.

The LORDE shall preserue the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Daud and the glory of the c \hat{y} tesyns of Ierusalem, shalbe but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORDE defende the c \hat{y} tesyns of Ierusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shalbe as Daud: ^dand the house of Daud shalbe like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORDE before them.

C At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all such people as con \hat{e} agaynst Ierusalem. ^eMorouer, vpon the house off Daud and vpon the c \hat{y} tesyns off Ierusalem, will I poure out the sprete of grace and prayer: ^fso that they shal l \hat{o} ke vpon me, whom they haue pearced: and they shall bewepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne: Yee and be sorry for him, as men are sorry for their first childe.

^gThen shall there be a greate mournynge at Ierusalem, like as the lamentacion at Adremnon in the felde off Maggadon. ^hAnd the londe shall bewaile, euery kynred by th \hat{e} selues: The kynred off the house of Daud them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: ⁱThe kynred off the house of Nathan them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of Leui th \hat{e} selues alone, and their w \hat{y} ues by them selues: The kynred of the house of Semei them selues alone, and their w \hat{y} ues by them selues: In like maner, all the other generaci \hat{o} s, euerychone by them selues alone, and their w \hat{y} ues by them selues.

The xij. Chapter.

IN that tyme shall the house off Daud and the c \hat{y} tesyns off Ierusalem haue an open well, ^kto wash of synne and vnclennesse. And then (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) I will destroye the names of Idols out off the londe: ^lso that they shal nomore be put in remembraunce.

^mAs for the false prophetes also and the vn clene sprete, I shall take them out of the londe: So that yf eny off them prophecy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: ⁿThou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORDE: Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophecyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his vision when he prophecieth: nether shall they were sack clothes eny more, to diseaue m \hat{e} with all. ^oBut he shall be fayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my youth vp. ^pAnd yf it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? He shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

^qArise (o thou swearde) vpon my shepherde, and vpon the prynce of my people, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Smyte the shepherde and the shepe shalbe scatred abrode, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shal saye: LORDE, my God.

The iiiiij. Chapter.

BEHOULDE, the daye of the LORDE cometh, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the Heithen, to fight agaynst Ierusalem: so that the cite shalbe wounne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shal go awaye in to captiuyte, and the residue of the people shal not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORDE go forth to fight agaynst those Heithen, as men vse to fight in the daye of batell. The shall his fete stode vpon the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the east syde of Ierusalē. And y mount oliuete shal cleue in two, eastwarde, and westwarde so y there shal be a greate valley: and the halff mount shal remoue towarde the north, and the other half towarde the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hylles shal reach vnto Asal. Yee fle shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off Osias kynge of Iuda. And the LORDE my God shal come, and all sanctes with him. In that daye shal it not be light, but colde and frost. This shalbe that speecyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the euenynge tyme it shal be light. In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Ierusalem: the half parte of them towarde the east see, and the other half towarde the vtmost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. And the LORDE himself shalbe kynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shal there be one LORDE only, and his name shalbe but one. Men shal go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibeat to Remmon, and from y south to Ierusalem. She shalbe set vp, and inhabited in hir place: From Ben Iamitis porte, vnto the place of the first porte, and vnto y corner porte: and from the tower of Hanael, vnto the kynges wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shal be nomore cursinge, but Ierusalem shalbe safely inhabited.

This shalbe the plage, wherwith y LORDE wil smyte all people, that haue fought agaynst Ierusalem: Namely, their flesh shall consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their fete: their eyes shall corruppe in their holes, and their tunge shal consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORDE make a greate sedicion amonge them, so that one man shal take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neghboure. Iuda shal fight also agaynst Ierusalem, and the goodes of all the Heithen shalbe gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greate multitude off clothes. And so shal this plage go ouer horses, mules, camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooste, like as yonder plage was.

Euery one that remaineth then of all y people, which came agaynst Ierusalem, shal go vp yearly, to worshippe the kynge (euery y LORDE of hoostes) and to kepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Ierusalem, for to worshippe the kynge (euery the LORDE of hoostes) vpon the same shal come no rayne. Yf the kynred of Egipte go not vp and come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shalbe the plage wherwith y LORDE wil smyte all Heithen, that come not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles: Yee this shalbe the synneplage of Egipte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles.

At that tyme shal the rydinge geer of y horses be holy vnto the LORDE, and the kettels in the LORDES house shal be like the basens before the aluter: yee all the kettels in Ierusalem and Iuda, shalbe holy vnto the LORDE of hoostes: and all they that slaye offeringes, shall come and take of them, and dight them therein. And at that tyme there shal be no mo Cananites in the house of the LORDE.

The Prophet Malachy.

What Malachy conteyneth.

Chap. I.

The benefites of God, shewed specially vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punyishment of the vnthanfulnessse, vnfaithfulnessse and covetousnesse of the prestes and the people.

Chap. II.

He threatneth punyishment and confucion vnto

the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III.

Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Off the abrogacion of the olde leuiticall prestheade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearful daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

I HAUE loued you, sayeth \hat{y} LORDE: \hat{a} d yet ye saye: wherin hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Jacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE? yet haue I loued Iacob, and hated Esau: "Yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wyldernesse for dragōs. And though Edom sayde: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth \hat{y} LORDE of hoostes) what they buylded, that brake I downe: \hat{b} so that it was called a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie withall.

Your eyes haue sene it, \hat{a} d ye youre selues must confesse, that \hat{y} LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shulde not a sonne honoure his father, and a seruaūt his master? Yf I be now a father, where is myne honoure? \hat{c} yf I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Now to you prestes, that despise my name. 3 And yf ye saye: wherin haue we despised thy name? In this, that ye offre vnclene bred vpō myne aulter. And yf ye wil saye: wherin haue we offred eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the aulter of the LORDE is not to be regarded. Yf ye offre \hat{y} blynde, is not \hat{y} euell? "And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy prynce, shal he be cōtent with the, or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes?

And now make youre prayer before God, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for soch thinges haue ye done. Shal he regarde youre personnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes? Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so moch as to shut \hat{y} dores, or to kyndle \hat{y} fyre vpō myne aulter for naught? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes: and as for the meatofferinge, \hat{d} I wil not accepte it at youre honde. \hat{e} For from the rysinge vp of \hat{y} sonne vnto \hat{y} goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the C

Gentiles: Yee in euery place shal there sacrifice be done, and a cleue meatofferynge offred vp vnto my name: for my name is greate amonge the Heithē, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye saye, the altuer of ꝑ LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thinge that is set therevpon, not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but labour and traunyle, and thus haue ye thought scorne at it, (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) offerynge robbery, yee the lame and the sicke. Ye haue brought me in a meatofferynge, shulde I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LORDE? Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kyng (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearfull amonge the Heithen.

The ij. Chapter.

AND now (o ye prestes) this commaundement toucheth you: yf ye will not heare it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) ^a I wil sende a curse vpon you, and wil curse youre blessinges: yee curse them will I yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal corruppe youre sede, and cast donge in youre faces: euen the donge of youre solempne feastes, and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shall knowe, that I haue sent this commaundement vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Leui, might stonde, sayeth ꝑ LORDE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace with him: this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me, and had my name in reuerence. The lawe of treuth was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace and equyte, ^b and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that men maye seke the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messaunger of the LORDE of hoostes. ^c But as for you, ye are gone cleue out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be offended at the lawe: ^c ye haue broken the couenaunt of Leui, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputation amonge all ꝑ people: because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

^d Haue we not all one father? Hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despise his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Iuda offended: yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Ierusalē, for Iuda hath defyled the Sāctuary of the LORDE, which he loued, and hath kepte the daughter of a straunge God. But the LORDE shal destroye the mā that doth this (yee both the master and the scolar) out off the tabernacle of Iacob, with him that offreth vp meatofferynge vnto the LORDE off hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the altuer of the LORDE is couered with teares, wepyng and mournyng: so that I will no more regarde the meatofferynge, nether wil I receaue or accepte any thinge at youre hōdes.

And yet ye saye: wherfore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte ꝑ and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despised her: Yet is she thyne owne cōpanyon and married wife.

So dyd not ^e the one, and yet had he an excellent sprete. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therefore loke well to youre sprete, and let no man despise ꝑ wife of his youth. Yf thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel, and geue her a clothinge for the scorne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Loke well then to youre sprete, and despise her not. Ye greue the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye saye: wherwithal haue we greued him? In this, that ye saye: All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and soch please him. Or els where is the God that punysheth?

BEHOLDE, ^f I wil sende my messaunger, which shal prepare the waye before me: and the LORDE whom ye wolde haue, shal soone come to his temple, yee euen the messaunger of the couenaunt whom ye longe for.

of hoostes. But who maye abyde the daye of his commynge? Who shalbe able to endure, when he appeareth? For he is like a goldsmithes fyre, and like wasshers sope. He shall syt him downe to trye and to clyse ¶ syluer, he shal poure the children of Leui, and purifie them like as golde and syluer: that they maye brynge meatofferings vnto the LORDE in rightuouses. Then shall the offeringe of Iuda and Ierusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge ¶ in the yeaeres afore tyme. I will come ¶ punysh you, ¶ I my self wil be a swift wytnes agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduouterers, agaynst false swearers: yee and agaynst those, that wrogeously kepe backe the hyrelinges dewty: which vexe the wyddowes ¶ the fatherlesse, ¶ oppresse the straunger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. For I am the LORDE ¶ I chaunge not, ¶ ye (o children of Iacob) wil not leaue of: ye are gone awaye fro myne ordinauces, ¶ sens ¶ tyme of youre forefathers haue ye not kepte them.

^b Turne you now vnto me, and I wil turne me vnto you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherin vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offerynge. Therefore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you.

Brynge euery Tythe in to my barne, ¶ there maye be meat in myne house: and proue me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessing with plenteousnesse. Yee I shal reprove the consumer for youre sakes, so that he shall not eate vp the frute of youre grounde, nether shal ¶ vnyuarde be baren in the felde, sayeth ¶ LORDE of hoostes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shall be a pleasaunt lode, sayeth the LORDE off hoostes.

Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sayeth the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sayed: It is but lost labour, to serue God: What profit haue we for keypyng his commaundementes, and for walkinge humbly before the LORDE off hoostes? Therefore maye we saye, that the proude are happie, and that they which deale with vngodlynesse, are set vp: for they tempte God, and yet escape.

But they that feare God, saye thus one to another: The LORDE cōsidreth and heareth it. Yee it is before him a memoriall boke written for such as eare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I wil make (saith ¶ LORDE of hoostes) they shalbe myne owne possession: and I wil fauoure them, like as a man fauoureth his owne sonne, that cloth him seruyce. Turne you therfore, and conside what difference is betwixte the rightuous and vngodly: betwixte him that serueth God, and him that serueth him not.

For marck, the daye cometh that shall burne as an oue: and all the proude, yee and all such as do wickednesse, shalbe straw: and the daye that is for to come, shall burne the vp (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) so that it shal leaue them nether rote ner braunch. But vnto you that feare my name, shall the Sone of rightuousnesse aryse, ¶ health shal be vnder his winges. Ye shal go forth, ¶ multiplye as ¶ fat calves. Ye shal treade downe ¶ vngodly: for they shalbe like the ashes vnder the soles of your fete, in the daye ¶ I shal make, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Remember the lawe of Moses my seruaunt, which I committed vnto him in Oreb^e for all Israel, with the statutes and ordinauces. Beholde, ^h I will sende you Elias ¶ prophet: before the cōmyng off the daye of the great and fearfull LORDE. He shall turne the hertes of the fathers to their children, and the hertes of the children to their fathers, that I come not, and smyte the earth with cursynge.

THESE bokes (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayest perceaue by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the chefe cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manyfest trueth in the other bokes of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: Yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circunstaunce in all things considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntruly & peruersly aledged. Treuth it is: A mā's face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether cā it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These & many other darck places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myxte with blynde and cuvetous opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of ȳ symple, that as longe as they be not cōferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as cuvetousnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readeest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, comnytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the sprete of God (which is the author therof) shal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findest not herin) ȳ prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readeest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodotios translacion. Neuertheles, both because of those ȳ be weake and scrupulous, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thanksgeuinge: I haue not left them out: to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also might haue the more occasion to gue thanks vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

The first Chapter.

AND Iosias helde the feast of Easter in Ierusalem vnto the LORDE,^a and slewe y^e Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth. He set y^e prestes also in ordre (acordige to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmētcs in the temple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Levites the holy ministers of Israel, that they shulde halowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arke of the LORDE, in the house that kynge Salomō the sonne of Dauid had buylded and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon youre shulders. Now serue youre LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre vylлагies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Israel hath ordered, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke y^e all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordringe and distribution of the princycall mē which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childrē of Israel. ^a Kyll \dot{y} Passeouer, τ prepare offeringes for youre brethren, and do accordinge to the commaundemēt of \dot{y} LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto \dot{y} people \dot{y} was foude, Iosias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, τ thre thousande oxē. These the kyng (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, accordinge as he had promysed: τ to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe τ an hundreth oxē. Morouer Iechonias τ Semeias and Nathanael brethren, τ Hasabias, Iehiel and Iosabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundreth bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Leuites stode goodly in their ordre, and had the vnuenced bred thorow out \dot{y} trybes. And after the ordninge of the princypall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses, ^b τ so they rosted the Easterlambe as accordinge was. As for the thāk offeringes τ the other, they dight thē in kettels τ pottes, τ sett them before the people with good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fat, vntyll the tyme was expyred, but the Leuites prepared for them selues τ for their brethren the childrē of Aaron. The syngers also \dot{y} children of Asaph stode in their ordre, accordinge as Dauid had denyed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary τ Iedithū, which were appoynted by the kyng. Morouer the porters τ dorekeepers stode by the dores τ \dot{y} diligently, so \dot{y} none wente out of his standinge τ seruyce: for their brethren (the Leuites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offryng of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passeouer, τ offred thank offeringes besyde \dot{y} sacrifice of \dot{y} LORDE, accordinge to \dot{y} commaundement of kyng Iosias.

ϵ So the children of Israel which were thē present helde an honorable Passeouer, τ the feast of swete bred vij: dayes lōge. Yee such a Passeouer was not kepte in Israel, from \dot{y} tyme of the prophet Samuel. And all the kynges of Israel helde not such an Easter, as this which kyng Iosias helde, τ \dot{y} prestes, \dot{y}

Leuites, \dot{y} Iewes τ all Israel, of all thē \dot{y} were at Ierusalē. In \dot{y} xviiij: yeare of \dot{y} raigne of Iosias was this Passeouer kepte. And with a perfecte hert dyd kyng Iosias ordre all his workes (before \dot{y} LORDE) τ \dot{y} things \dot{y} were wryttē of hī in tymes past, cōcernynge those \dot{y} synned τ were vngodly agaynst \dot{y} LORDE before all people, τ \dot{y} sought not the worde of \dot{y} LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of kyng Iosias, Pharao \dot{y} kyng of Egipte wētē vp, τ came towarde ^c Carcamis by Euphrates, τ Iosias wētē to mete hī. Then sent the kyng of Egipte vnto Iosias, sayenge: what haue I to do with \dot{y} , o kyng of Iuda? I am not sent of \dot{y} LORDE to fight agaynst \dot{y} , for my warre is upō Euphrates, go thou \dot{y} waye home agayne in all \dot{y} haist. And Iosias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vndertoke to fight agaynst him, τ herkened not vnto \dot{y} worde of \dot{y} prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in \dot{y} felde of Mageddo. And the prynces pressed to kyng Iosias. Then sayde the kyng vnto his seruautes: ^d Cary me awaye out of the battaill, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruautes toke him awaye out of the front of the battaill. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charett, came to Ierusalē, dyed, τ was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Iewry they mourned for Iosias, yee the rulers also with their wyues made lamētacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

These thinges are written in the boke of the stories of \dot{y} kynges of Iuda: namely, all the actes τ workes of kyng Iosias, his kyngly power τ maesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, τ what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wryttē in the boke of the kynges of Israel τ Iuda. ^e And \dot{y} people toke Iechonias the sonne of Iosias, τ made him kyng in \dot{y} steade of Iosias his father, whan he was xxxij. yeare olde. And he raigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kyng of Egipte put him downe, \dot{y} he shulde not raigne in Ierusalē, τ raysed vp a taxinge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer τ one talēt of golde. The kyng of Egipte also made Ioachim his brother kyng of Iuda τ Ierusalē. As for thē of the kynges counsell with the kyng himself and Zaraceles his brother, he toke thē, τ carried thē awaye presoners into Egipte. Fyue τ twentie yeare olde was Ioachim, whan he was made kyng in the londe of Iuda and Ierusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. ^a After this, Nabuchodonosor ꝑ kyng of Babylō came vp, bounde him with bandes of yron, τ caried him vnto Babilō. Nabuchodonosor also toke all ꝑ vessell ꝑ were halowed in the tēple of the LORDE, τ all ꝑ Iewels, τ caried thē vnto Babilon, τ brought thē in to his owne tēple at Babilon. Of his vncleennes τ vngodlynes, it is writtē in ꝑ boke of the actes of ꝑ kynges. And Ioachim his sonne raigned in his steade: He was made kyng beinge xviii. yeare olde, τ raigned but thre monethes τ x. dayes in Ierusalē, τ dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yeare, Nabuchodonosor sent ꝑ caused him be brought vnto Babilon with ꝑ holy vessels of ꝑ LORDE, τ made Sedechias his brother kyng of Iuda and Ierusalē, whan he was xxj. yeare olde: and he raigned xj. yeare.

And he dyd euell also in ꝑ sight of ꝑ LORDE, τ cared not for ꝑ wordes ꝑ were spokē vnto hi by ꝑ prophet Ieremy at ꝑ mouth of the LORDE. ^b And where as he had made on oath vnto kyng Nabuchodonosor, he manswore himself, τ fell frō him hauyng a stiff neck τ hert, τ trāsgressed all ꝑ statutes τ ordinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also τ heades of ꝑ people of the LORDE dyd moch euell, τ became vngodly, more thē the Heithen, beyng defyled in all maner of abhominaciōs: Yee τ defyled ꝑ holy tēple of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And the God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto thē, to turne them backe τ to call thē agayne frō their synnes: for he wolde fayne haue spared thē for his holy tabernacles sake. Neuertheles, they had his messaungers in derision: τ loke what God spake vnto thē by his prophetes, they made but a sporte of it. This drew on so longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth with his people for their vngodlynes, τ tyll he caused the kinges of ꝑ Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men with the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy tēple, τ spared no body, nether yonge ner olde, nether mayden ner yonge man: but they were all deluyered in to the power of the kynges of ꝑ Caldees, τ all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, τ caried them vnto Babilon. ^c As for the house of the LORDE, they brēt it, τ brake downe the walles of Ierusalē, set fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they caried vnto Babilon.

Thus became they ꝑ presoners τ bōde mē of ꝑ kyng of Babilon, tyll they were deluyered τ raynged for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest: ^d namely, all the time ꝑ it laye wayest, had it rest τ quyettes lxxvij. yeares.

The ii. Chapter.

NOW whā kyng Cyrus raigned ouer the Persians, ^e τ whā the LORDE wolde perfourme the worde ꝑ he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Ieremy: the LORDE raysed vp the sprete of Cyrus, the kyng of the Persiās, so ꝑ he caused this wrytinge to be proclaimed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kyng of ꝑ Persians: The LORDE of Israel that hve LORDE hath made me kyng of the lōde, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Ierusalem in Iewry. Yf there be eny now of youre people, ꝑ LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Ierusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute ꝑ place, shal helpe thē, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought with a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē.

Then the pryncipall mē out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben Iamin stode vp: so dyd the prestes also τ the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalē. And they that were aboute them, helped them with all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberrall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vp therto. Kyng Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornaments, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon had caried away from Ierusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and deluyered them to Mithridatus his treasurer, and by him they were deliuered to Salmanasar ſ̄ debyte in Iewry. And this was the nôbre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusalē out of the captiuyte of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kyng Artaxerses the kyng of Persia, these men: Balemus and Mithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius ſ̄ scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria ⁊ in other places vnder ſ̄ dominion therof. Wrote a letter vnto kyng Artaxerses, wherin they complayned vnto the kyng of them in Iewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

C Syr, thy seruantes Rathimus the story wryter, Sabellius the Scribe, ⁊ other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to our lorde the kyng, that the Iewes which are come vp frō you vnto vs in to the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the tēple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be sett vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vtterly against the kyng. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scorne of it, but to shewe it vnto our lorde the kyng, ⁊ to certifie him therof: to the intent ſ̄ yf it please the kinge, he maye cause it be sought in the boke of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch warnynge wrytten, and shalt vnderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Iewes which dwell therein, haue euer bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaithfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherefore now we certifie oure lorde the kyng, that yf this cite be buylded and occupied agayne, ⁊ the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kyng to Rathimus the story wryter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius ſ̄ scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are dishobedient, and haue caused moch warre, ⁊ that mightie kynges haue rained in Ierusalem, which also haue rased vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherefore, I haue commauded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathimus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kyng Artaxerses, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moch people of fote, and forbad them to buylde. And so they left of from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the seconde yeare of kyng Darius.

The iij. Chapter.

KYNGE Darius made a greate feast vnto all his seruantes, vnto all his courte, ⁊ to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes ⁊ rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundreth ⁊ xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kyng wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepthe the kynges personne, and watched his body, commoned amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let every one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kinge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and coverings: he shall make him a costly charett ⁊ a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde ⁊ pryncipall nexte vnto kyng Darius, ⁊ that because of his wysdoine, and shalbe called ſ̄ kynges kynsman.

So euery one wrote his meaninge, sealed it and layed it vnder the kynges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kyng aryseth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whose worde the kyng and his chefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secōde wrote: The kyng is strōger. The thirde wrote: wemen haue yet more strength, but aboue all thinges ȳ trueth beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kyng was rysen vp, they toke their wrytinges and deluyered them vnto him, and so he red them. Then sent he forth to call all his chefe lordes, all the debetes and rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the councell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for ȳ yonge mē, ȳ they might declare their meanynges thē selues by mouth. So whan they were sent for, and came in, ȳ kyng sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) and sayde: O ye men, wyne is maruelous strōge,^a and ouercōmeth them ȳ drynke it: it disceaueth the mynde, and bryngeth both the poore man and ȳ kyng to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also with the bondman and with the fre, with the poore and rich: it taketh awaye their understandinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that ȳ thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kyng, nor ȳ he is in auctorite, and ȳ he ought not to do soch thinges. Morouer, whan men are drynkinge, they forgett all friendshipes, all brotherly faithfulness and loue: but as soone as they are dronckē, they drawe out the swerde and wil fight: and whā they are layed downe frō the wyne, and so rysen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Iudge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tongue.

The iiii. Chapter.

A THEN the secōde (which had sayde, ȳ the kyng was stronger) beganne to speake, sayge: O ye men, are not they the strongest and most excellent, ȳ cōquere the lōde and the see, and all ȳ is in ȳ see and in the earth? Now is the kyng lord of all these thinges, and hath dominion of thē all: and loke what he cōmaūdeth, it is done. Yf he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles and towres. They are slayne, and slaye (other men) them selues, and ouer passe not ȳ kynges worde. Yf they get the victory, they brynge the kyng all the spoyle. Likewyse, the other ȳ medle not with warres and fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge trybute vnto ȳ kyng. And yf ȳ kyng alone do not cōmaūde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaūde to forgeue, they forgeue: yf he cōmaūde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he commaūde to buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaūde to plante, they plāte. The comon people and ȳ rulers are obedient vnto him. And ȳ kyng in the meane season syteth hī downe, eateth and drynketh, and taketh his rest: thē kepe they watch rōūde aboute ȳ kyng, and not one of thē darre gett him out of ȳ waye, to do his owne busynes, but must be obediēt vnto ȳ kyng at a worde. Iudge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tonge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of wemen and of ȳ trueth) begāne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not ȳ greate kyng, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine ȳ excelleth: Who is it thē, ȳ hath ȳ lordshipe ouer thē? Haue not wemen borne the kyng, and all ȳ people ȳ rule these thinges? Haue not wemen borne thē, and brought thē vp, ȳ plante the vynes, wherout ȳ wyne cōmeth? They make garmetes for all mē, they geue honour vnto all men, and with out wemen can not men lyue. Yf they gather golde and syluer and all precious thinges, and se a fayre and wel fauoured womā, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes onely vnto the woman, and gape vpon her, and haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer and golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueth his father^b ȳ brought him vp, he leueth his owne naturall cōūtre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner countre. By this then ye must nedes knowe, ȳ women haue ȳ domynion ouer you.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde ⁊ goeth his waye to steale, to kyl, to murther, to sayle vpon the see, ⁊ seyth a lyou, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaured ⁊ robbed, he bringeth it vnto his loue. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes ⁊ become bondmen for their wyues sakes: many one also haue perished, ⁊ haue bene slayne, ⁊ haue synned because of women.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, ⁊ all lōdes stode in awe of him, ⁊ no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se, ȳ Apame (ȳ daughter of the greate kynge Bartacus) the kynges cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpō the right hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Morouer, the kynge loked vpō her with open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, ⁊ to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not women then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do these thinges. Then the kynge ⁊ the prynces loked one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the trueth: O ye men, are not wemē stronger? Greate is the earth, hie is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compaseth the heauen rounde aboute, ⁊ fetcheth his course agaiue to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trueth, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth vpon the trueth, the heauen prayseth it, all workes shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, wemen are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their workes are vnrighteous, and there is no trueth in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. ^aAs for ȳ trueth, it endureth, and is allwaye stronge: it lyneth, and cōquereth for euermore worlde without ende.

D The trueth accepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte rych or poore, betwixte ȳ mightie or symple, but doth right vnto euery mā, whether they be euel or good, ⁊ all men are louingly dealt withall in the workes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but strength, kingdome ⁊ power and maiesty for euermore. Blessed be the God of trueth.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all ȳ people cried ⁊ sayde: Greate is the trueth, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Axe what thou wilt, more then is appointed in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companyons: thou shalt sytt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remember thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye when thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Ierusalem, and to sende againe all the vessels and Iewels, that were taken awaye out of Ierusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne: And thy minde was to buylde vp the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Ierusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is ȳ maiesty, which, I desyre ⁊ axe of the: that thou performe the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

E Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kyssed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all ȳ lordes and nobles, ȳ they shulde conuey him forth, ⁊ all them ȳ wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all ȳ shreues ȳ were in Celosyria ⁊ Phenices, ⁊ vnto Libanus, ȳ they shulde harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Ierusalem, to buylde ȳ cite withall. Morouer he wrote vnto all ȳ Iewes that were gone out of his realme in to Iewry because of the freedom, ȳ no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes shulde geue ouer the cities and villages of the Iewes, which they had taken in: yee ⁊ that they shulde yearly geue xx. talētes to ȳ buyldinge of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge of the brent offeringes (as it is commaunded) ten talentes yearly also: And y^e all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they ⁊ their children, and all the prestes.

f He wrote the greatnesse also, ⁊ commaunded that the holy garment shulde be geuen thē, wherein they ministred: and wrote that commaundementes shulde be geuen to the Leuites, vntill the daye, that the house were fynished and Ierusalem buylded vp: and commaunded that all they that watched the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell y^e Cyrus had separated from Babilon: ⁊ all y^e Cyrus had geuē in cōmaundement, y^e same charged be also, y^e it shulde be done, ⁊ sent vnto Ierusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Ierusalē, ⁊ prayed y^e kyng of heauē, ⁊ sayde: Of y^e cōmeth victory, of the cōmeth wyszdome ⁊ clearnesse, ⁊ I am thy seruauant. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wyszdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of oure fathers.

And so he toke the letters, ⁊ wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethrē y^e were at Babilō, ⁊ they prayed y^e God of their fathers, y^e he had geuē them refreszshinge ⁊ lyberte to go vp, ⁊ to buylde Ierusalē ⁊ the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes ⁊ gladnesse, seuen dayes longe.

Chc v. Chapter.

a A FTER this, were the princyall mē of all y^e vyllages chosen in the trybes ⁊ kynreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wyues and children, with their seruauantes and maydens, with all their cattell ⁊ substance. And Darius the kyng sent with them a thousande horsmen, to conueye them safely vnto Ierusalem: and their brethrē were glad, playenge vpon instrumētcs, and synginge.

And these are the names of the mē, which wente vp out of the vyllages accordinge to the trybes. Of the prestes, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Aaron: Iesus the sonne of Iosedec, Ioachim the sonne of Zorobabel^b the sonne of Salathiel (of the kynred of Dauid, out of the kynred of Phares, of the trybe of Iuda) which spake wonderfull thinges vnder Darius the kyng of Persia, in y^e seconde yeare of his raigne in the first moneth of Nisan.

These also are they of Iewry, which came vp and turned Agayne vnto Ierusalem, out of the captiuyte that Nabuchodonosor y^e kyng of Babilon had brought vnto Babilon. And euery man sought his porcion agayne in Iewry, his cite, they that came with Zorobabel, and with Iesus, Nehemias, Saraias, Raclaias, Elimeus, Emmanius, Mardocheus, Beelserus, Mechpsa, Rochor, Oliorus, Emonias, one of their prynces.

And the nobre of thē, accordinge to their kynreddes ⁊ rulers, was. The childrē of Phares, two thousande, an hundredth ⁊ lxxij. The children of Ares, iij. M. an C. and lvij. sonnes of Euther: The sonnes of El Isab, iij. C. and lxxij. The sonnes of Emerus, ij. C. and liij. The sonnes of Fasurius, iij. C. and lvij. The sonnes of Carea, ij. C. and xxvij. The Leuites: The sonnes of Iesus in Caduhel and Banus, and Serebias, and Edeas, seuentie and foure.

C The whole nombre of these from xij. yeares, was iij. M. iij. C. and lxij. Of the sonnes, daughters and wyues, the whole summe was iij. M. ij. C. and xliij. The sonnes of the prestes that prayed God in the temple: The sonnes of Asaph, of whom there were an C. and xxvij. But the dore keepers were: The children of Esmenus: The children of Aser: The children of Amon: The children of Acuba. Topa: The children of Tobi: an C. and xxxix. in all.

The prestes that serued in the temple: The sonnes of Sel, the sonnes of Gaspha, the sonnes of Tobloch, the sonnes of Caria, the sonnes of Sub, the sonnes of Heliu, the sonnes of Labana, \hat{y} sonnes of Armacha, \hat{y} sonnes of Acub, the sonnes of Vtha, the sonnes of Cetha, the sonnes of Aggab, the sonnes of Obay, the sonnes of Anani, the sonnes of Cana, \hat{y} sonnes of Geddu, \hat{y} sonnes of An, \hat{y} sonnes of Radin, \hat{y} sonnes of Desanon, the sonnes of Nechoba, the sonnes of Caseba, the sonnes of Goza, the sonnes of Ozul, the sonnes of Sinona, the sonnes of Atra, \hat{y} sonnes of Hastem, \hat{y} sonnes of Asiana, \hat{y} sonnes of Manei, \hat{y} sonnes of Nasisin, \hat{y} sonnes of Accufa, \hat{y} sonnes of Agista, \hat{y} sonnes of Azui, \hat{y} sonnes of Fauon, the sonnes of Phasalon, the sonnes of Meeda, the sonnes of Susa, the sonnes of Cared, \hat{y} sonnes of Barcus, the sonnes of Sarea, \hat{y} sonnes of Coesi, \hat{y} sonnes of Nasit, \hat{y} sonnes of Agista, the sonnes of Pedon: Salomon his sonnes, the sonnes of Asophot, the sonnes of Phazida, the sonnes of Celi, \hat{y} sonnes of Dedon, the sonnes of Gaddahel, the sonnes of Zapheus, \hat{y} sonnes of Aggia, the sonnes of Sacharet, \hat{y} sonnes of Sabathē, the sonnes of Saroneth, \hat{y} sonnes of Malsit, \hat{y} sonnes of Ania, \hat{y} sonnes of Sasus, \hat{y} sonnes of Addus, \hat{y} sonnes of Suba, \hat{y} sonnes of Eura, \hat{y} sonnes of Rahotis, the sonnes of Phasphat, \hat{y} sonnes of Malmon. All these mynistred in the Sanctuary, and were seruauntes of Salomon: euen iij. C. and lxxxij.

D These folowinge are they, \hat{y} were vp fro

Chelmellat Thelarsa (whose prynces were Carnelā and Careth) and might not shewe forth their cities and kynreddes, how they were of Israel: The sonnes of Dalarus, \hat{y} sonnes of Tubē, \hat{y} sonnes of Nechodaicus. Of \hat{y} prestes \hat{y} executed \hat{y} office of \hat{y} presthode, and were not founde: The sonnes of Obia, \hat{y} sonnes of Achisos, the sonnes of Addin, which married one of \hat{y} daughters of Phargeleu, and were named, after him. The writtinge of \hat{y} same kynred was sought in \hat{y} register of their generacion, but it was not founde: and therefore were they forbyddē to execute \hat{y} office of \hat{y} presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Astharas, \hat{y} they shulde haue no porcion in \hat{y} Sanctuary, tyll there rose vp an hie prest, \hat{y} were well instructe in the playne clearnes and trueth. Of all Israel (besyde seruauntes and maydens) there were xliij. M. iij. C. and xl. Now were there of seruauntes and maydens, vij. M. iij. C. and xxxvj. Of synginge mē and synginge wemen there were ij. C. and lxv. Foure hundred and xxxv. Camels. Seuen thousande and xxxvj. horses. Two hundred thousande and xlv. Mooles. Fyue thousande and xxxv. Asses.

Their heades also and the rulers in the trybes, when they came to Ierusalem, and wolde buylde and sett vp \hat{y} tēple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylyte) vnto the tēple, to \hat{y} treasure and to \hat{y} seruyce of the Sactuary, xij. M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer, and an hundred prestes garmentes. And so dwelt the prestes and the Leuites, and the people \hat{y} wente out to Ierusalē and in the countre there aboute, the syngers also and the porters, euery one of Israel in his owne lande.

E So whan the seuenth moneth came, and whan the childrē of Israel were euery man^e at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the court, which was before \hat{y} east dore. And there stode Iesua the sonne of Iosedec and his brethren \hat{y} prestes, and Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethren, settinge vp an alter, to offre brent sacrifices vpon it, as it is written in \hat{y} lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other countrees, and the Heithen out of all londes set vp the alter in his place, and offered sacrifices and brent offerynges vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe.^d ^b Leui. 23. f.

And daylie offered they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offerings also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. ^aAnd all they that vowed offeringes vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of \dot{y} seuth moneth to offre vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylde. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpeters, money, meate τ drynke with chearfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue cartes, \dot{y} they shulde eary Cedre trees from Libanus to be ieastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the haucn of Ioppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kyng of the Persians.

And in the seconde yeare they came in to the temple of God at Ierusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel^b the sonne of Salathiel, and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec, and their brethren the prestes and Leuites, and all they that were come vnto Ierusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, τ layed the foundaacion of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yeare \dot{y} they were come in to Iewry and Ierusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were aboue xx. yeare olde) vnto the seruce of the LORDE: so Iesua and his sonnes and his brethren all the Leuites stode together, and performed the lawe τ ordinance in the house of the LORDE.

And the prestes stode and had their garments τ trompettes, τ the Leuites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng thanks, and prayes vnto the LORDE, acordinge as Dauid the kyng of Israel had ordeyned.^c And the songe that they dyd syng vnto the LORDE, was after this maner: O syng vnto the LORDE,^d for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for euer. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and sunge with loude voyce, praysyng the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORDE. There came also from amonge the prestes and Leuites the rulers and elders, acordinge to the trybes and kynreds (soch as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many also with trompettes and greate ioye: In so moch, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpō the trompettes.

Then came the enemies of the trybes of Iuda and Ben Iamin,^e to knowe what that trōpettyng and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued \dot{y} it was they which were come agayne out of captiuyte, τ wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORDE God of Israel. So they wente to Zorobabel and Iesua and to the rulers of the vyllages, τ sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde with you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORDE, τ we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Aszbazareth the kinge of Assiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Iesua and the rulers of the villages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of oure God with vs: we oure selues alone wil buylde vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus^f the kyng of the Persians hath commaunded vs.

But the Heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Iewry, helde vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpō them preuely, stopped soch as brought eny thinge to them, forbad them to buylde, τ hyndered those that made thē passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be fynished: τ this contynued so longe as kyng Cyrus lyued: τ so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yeare, vntill \dot{y} raigne of kyng Darius.

The vi. Chapter.

NOT with standinge, in the seconde yeare of the raigne of Darius,^g Aggeus τ Zachary the sonne of Addo prophecied vpon them in Iewry and Ierusalem, in the name of the God of Israel. Then Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and Iesua the sonne of Iosedec stode vp,^h and beganne to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE helped them.

At the same tyme came Sysesnes the vuder shreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companions, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden τ commaunded you to buylde the house? to make the rofe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the workemen, that buylde them? Neuer-theles the elders of the Iewes had soch grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked therto) but buylded on still, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answer receaued from him. The letter that these men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

B Sysennus the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, and the land lordes with their cōpaniōs, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutaciou vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Iewry, ⁊ wente to Ierusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greate house of God and the tēple, with greate costly fre stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greate haist with the worke, ⁊ helpe one another, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greate diligence ⁊ worshipe is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had cōmaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to § intēt that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those § were § rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this answer: we are the seruauntes of the LORDE, which made heauen and earth: ⁊ as for this house,^a it hath bene buylded and set vp afore tyme by the greate and mightie kynge of Israel. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, ⁊ synned agaynst the God of Israel, ^b he gaue thē ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe § house and brēt it, and caried away the people presoners vnto Babilon.

C Neuertheless, in the first year that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon,^c Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde vp this house agayne: and all the ornaments that Nabuchodonosor caried away from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and deluyered them to Zorobabel ⁊ to Salmanasar the vnder shreue, commaundynge them, § they shulde bryng those same ornauntes agayne to Ierusalē in to § tēple, ⁊ to begynne from § tyme forth, to buylde the tēple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundation of § LORDES house at Ierusalem, and euer sence haue they buylded, ⁊ yet is it not ended. And therefore (O kynge) yf thou thinkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries ⁊ rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde thē, that it is done with the counsell and cōsent of kynge Cyrus, and yf oure lorde § kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

D Then cōmaunded kynge Darius, to seke in the Lybraries:^d and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first year of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus cōmaunded, § the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem shulde be buylded agayne (⁊ odoures to be made there contynually vnto the LORDE) whose heyth shalbe ten cubites, § bredth lx. cubites ⁊ iij. square with thre hewen stones, with a lofte of tymbre of the same countre, yee with a new loft, ⁊ the expenses therof to be geuen of § house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornauntes of golde ⁊ syluer, § Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Ierusalē, where they were afore. Sysennus also the vnder shreue in Syria and Phenices, § prynces and their companions, and the other § be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

E I Cyrus haue cōmaunded also, that they shal buylde the house of the LORDE whole vp: ⁊ haue ordeyned them, to helpe those § be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: ⁊ out of the tribute and taxinge that is yearly rayسد vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the same to be deluyered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lambes, ⁊ corne, salt, wyne and oyle, and that contynually euery year: after the expences which the prestes that be at Ierusalem, shew to be made daylie:^e this shalbe geuen vnto them without delaye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hiest God, for the kynge and for his seruauntes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclaimed also on euery syde, that who so euer breaketh or despyseth this cōmaundement of § kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a galow (made of his owne good) ⁊ all his goodes shalbe seasoned vnto \hat{y} kynge. The LORDE therefore (whose name is there called vpon) rote out and destroye all \hat{y} kynges and people, that vndertake by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncourteously with the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. I Darius the kinge haue ordeyned, that these thynges shalbe done with all diligence.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN Sysennes \hat{y} vndershreue in Celysria and Phenices, and the other landlordes with their companions, obeyed the thynges that kynge Darius had ordened, were diligent in the holy workes, τ were felow helpers with the olde rulers of the Iewes. And so the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and prospered, whan Aggeus and Zachary propheced. And they performed all thynges thorow the commaundement of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerses kynges of Persia.

And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxij. daye of the moneth Addar in \hat{y} vj. yeare of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes τ the Leuites, τ the other that were come out of captiuyte, τ such as were ioyned vnto them, dyd accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedication of the temple they offred an hundredth oxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lambes, τ xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after \hat{y} nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also τ the Leuites stode arayed in the prestly garmetes, after \hat{y} trybes, ouer all \hat{y} workes of the LORDE God of Israel, accordinge to \hat{y} boke of Moses, and the porters by all the dores.

And the children of Israel (with those \hat{y} were come out of captiuyte) helde the Passouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Leuites were sanctified. They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Leuites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kylled the easter lambe, for their brethrē, for the prestes τ for them selues. And the childrē of Israel \hat{y} came out of captiuyte, τ escaped frō all \hat{y} abhominacions of the Heithē, sought the LORDE, and kepte the feast of vnlouended bred vij. daies longe, eatinge τ drynkyng τ were mery before the LORDE: \hat{y} the LORDE had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria, τ comforted their handes to the workes of \hat{y} LORDE God of Israel.

The viij. Chapter.

AND after him, whan Artaxerses the kynge of \hat{y} Persiās raigned,^a there wete vnto him Eszdras the sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia, \hat{y} sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoe, \hat{y} sonne of Eleazar, \hat{y} sonne of Aaron \hat{y} first prest. This Eszdras wete vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderstandinge in \hat{y} lawe of Moses, \hat{y} was geueñ of the LORDE God of Israel, to be taught τ done in dede.) And \hat{y} kinge fauoured him, τ dyd him greate worshipec and honoure, after all his desyres. There wente vp with him also certayne of \hat{y} children of Israel, of the prestes, of \hat{y} Leuites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of \hat{y} temple at Ierusalem.

In the vij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerses, in the v. moneth, \hat{y} is in the vij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, τ came the hye waye to Ierusalē after his commaundement, like as the LORDE had prospered their iourney. For in these Eszdras gat greate instruction, \hat{y} he shulde leaue none of \hat{y} thynges behynde, which were in \hat{y} lawe τ cōmaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes τ iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerses, τ delyuered \hat{y} wrytinges (\hat{y} were come frō Artaxerses the kynge) to Eszdras the prest τ reder of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is \hat{y} cōpye of \hat{y} letter: Kynge Artaxerses sendeth his gretinge vnto Eszdras the prest τ reder of the lawe of \hat{y} LORDE: Of frendshipe τ good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the Iewes, of \hat{y} prestes τ Leuites in my realme, which desyret τ is contēt to go with the vnto Ierusalē, \hat{y} he maye do it. Therefore yf eny be mynded to beare the cōpany, let thē come together, τ go with the (like as I am contēt τ my vij. frendes my cōuelcers): to se what they do at Ierusalē τ in Lewry, τ kepe \hat{y} thynges accord-

3 inge as thou hast in \hat{y} lawe of the LORDE: τ to bringe the giftes vnto God the LORDE of Israel, \hat{y} I τ my frendes haue promysed to Ierusalē, τ all the syluer τ golde \hat{y} is in \hat{y} countre of Babilon, vnto \hat{y} LORDE to Ierusalē, with the thinge \hat{y} is geuē for the people in the LORDES temple at Ierusalem: Yee that the same syluer τ golde maye be gathered, and oxen, rammes, shepe τ goates and other that belōge to these thinges: and that they maye offer sacrifices vnto the LORDE, vpon the autler of their LORDE, which is at Ierusalem.

And what so euer thou τ thy brethrē wyl do with the syluer τ golde, \hat{y} do after \hat{y} mynde, τ after the cōmaundement of the LORDE thy God: τ like wyse with all the holy vessels, \hat{y} are geuē the for the seruyce of the house of the LORDE thy God: τ other thinges what soeuer is necessary for the to the worke of the temple, \hat{y} shalbe geuē the of the kynges treasure: τ loke what thou with thy brethrē wilt do with the golde and syluer, that do after \hat{y} wil of the LORDE. And I kyng Artaxerses haue commaunded the keepers of \hat{y} treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what soeuer Eszdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it shalbe geuen him: tyll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lyke maner: Of corne also an C. measures, and tyll an hūdreth vessels of wyne, and other plenteous thinges without nombre. Let all thinges be done after the lawe of \hat{y} hyst God, that the wrath of God aryse not in the realme of the kyng and of his sonnes. I commaunde you also, that ye requyre no taxinge ner tribute of the prestes, Leuites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (O Eszdras) set thou iudges and arbiters in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wysdome of God: and lerne all such as are ignoraunt in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynst the lawe, be punyshed: whether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banysshed.

Then sayde Eszdras \hat{y} wryter: Blessed be \hat{y} God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so good a mynde and wyl in to the hert of the kyng, to magnifie his house \hat{y} is at Ieru-salem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of \hat{y} kyng, of his counsell, of his frēdes and of his nobles. And so I was stedfast in my mynde, acordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the heades^a (after their kynreds τ houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerses: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of \hat{y} sonnes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the sonnes of Dauid, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia.

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captayne of Moablon, Zaraei, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Iechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and lxx. with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Iob, Abdias Ieheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Salimoth the sonne of Iosaphia, and with him an C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij. men. Of the sonnes of Esead, Iohannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonicā those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam \hat{y} sonne of Gebel and Semeias, τ with him lxx. men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

^aAs for the sonnes of the prestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, τ Ececelom, and Masman, τ Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Ioribinnathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū (these were the leders and men of experie) τ I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddeus, which was by the place of the treasury, τ commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddens and to his brethren τ to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the prestes office in the house of the LORDE oure God. And with the mightie hāde of oure LORDE God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experie, from amōge the sonnes of Moolius, the sonne of Leui, \hat{y} sonne of Israel, Sebebeiam τ the sonnes τ his brethrē Aszbin ¶ Anim, of whom there were xvij. From amonge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, ¶ their sonnes were xx. men. And of them ¶ serued in the temple, whom Dauid had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministred for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wryttinge.

¶ Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto ¶ yonge men before the LORDE, ¶ I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney ¶ a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for our children and for the cattell, because of the layenges awayte: ¶ I durst not require of the kynge men of horse ¶ of fote, to conuey vs safely agaynst our enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that ¶ power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that seke him with their whole hert. And therefore we besought God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge ¶ rulers of the people, ¶ from ¶ prestes of ¶ temple xij. men, ¶ Sebeia ¶ Asania, ¶ ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied thē the golde ¶ the syluer ¶ all the prestly ornāmētes of the house of oure God, which the kynge ¶ his counsell, ¶ his prynces ¶ whole Israel had geuē. And when I had weyed it, I gauē thē an Cl. talētes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, ¶ of goldē vessell seue tynes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, ¶ saide vnto thē: ye also are holy vnto the LORDE, ¶ the vessels are holy, ¶ the golde ¶ the syluer is promised vnto the LORDE the God of oure fathers. Be diligent now ¶ kepe it, vntill the tyme ¶ ye deluyer it to the rulers of the people, to ¶ prestes, to the Leuites ¶ to ¶ pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Ierusalem, ¶ in the chambre of the house of oure God.

¶ So ¶ prestes ¶ the Leuites which receaued of me the golde,^a the syluer ¶ the vessell, brought it to Ierusalē in to the tēple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Ierusalē. And when the thirde daye was past, the weyed golde ¶ syluer was deluyered in ¶ house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the some of Ior the prest, ¶ with him was Eleazar ¶ some of Phineas, and with thē were Iosabudus ¶ some of Iesnet, Medias ¶ the sonne of Bauus, ¶ certayne of the Leuites to the nombre ¶ to the waighte: ¶ the waight of them was writtē vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuyte, they offred sacrifice vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: euē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thank-offeringe, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And ¶ kings cōmission deluyered they vnto ¶ stewardes and debytes of the kynge, and to the vndershrecus in Celosyria and Phenices.

¶ Now when these thinges were done, the rulers came vnto me, and sayde: The generacion of Israel, the prynces, ¶ prestes and Leuites, the straunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vnclennesse, from the Cananites, Hethtites, Pheresites, from the Moabites, Egipcians ¶ Edomites. For both they and their sonnes haue mengled them selues with the daughters of them, ¶ the holy sece is mixte with the outlandish Heithen, ¶ sens the begynnyng of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As soone as I had herde these thinges, immediatly I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out ¶ hayre of my heade ¶ my beard, ¶ sat me downe sroufull ¶ heuy. So all they that were moued thorow the worde of the God of Israel, came vnto me: and I sat still full of heuines vntill the euenynge sacrifice. Then stode I vp frō fastinge, hauynge rente clothes ¶ the holy garnēt, kneled downe vpon my knees, helde out my hādes vnto ¶ LORDE, ¶ sayde: O LORDE, I am confounded ¶ ashamed before thy face, for our synnes are become many vpon oure heades, ¶ oure wickednesse are exalted vnto the heauē: for sens ¶ tyme of oure fathers we are in greate sinne vnto this daye. And for the synnes of vs ¶ oure fathers, we with oure brethren ¶ with oure prestes haue bene deluyered vnto the kynges of the earth, in to the swerde, ¶ in to captiuite, ¶ became a spoyle with confucion ¶ shame vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy ¶ we have gottē of the? in ¶ thou hast left vs a rote ¶ a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to discouer oure light in the house of f LORDE oure God, τ geuē vs meate at all tymes of our ministracion. And whan we were in captiuyte, we were not forsaken of the LORDE oure God: but he made the kynges of Persia gracious τ fauourable vnto vs, so y they gaue vs vytayles τ meate, yee τ leue to buylde vp the tēple of oure LORDE God agayne, to repayre the waisted places of Sion, and to dwell in Iewry τ Ierusalem. And now O LORDE, what shall we saye, hauynge all these thinges in possession? For we haue broken thy cōmaundementes, which thou gauest vnto vs by the handes of thy seruautes the prophetes, sayenge: The londe y ye go vnto, τ y is geuen you for an heretage to haue in possession, is defyled with the vnclennes τ fylthynges of the Heithen, τ with their abhominacion haue they poluted it altogether. Therefore shal ye not ioyne^a youre daughters vnto their sonnes, ner mary youre sonnes vnto their daughters: Morouer, ye shall neuer seke to make peace with them, y ye maye increase τ eate the best in the lande, τ y ye maye deuyde y inheritaunce of the lande vnto youre children for euermore. As for the thinge y now happeneth vnto vs, it commeth all for oure wicked workes and greate synnes. yet hast thou geuen vs soch a rote, y we are come agayne in to oure owne londe: and we are so wicked, y we haue brokē thy statutes τ cōmaundementes agayne, τ mengled oure selues with the vnclēnes of the outlandish Heithen. O LORDE, art thou angrie with vs? wilt thou rote vs cleane out? y oure rote τ name remayne nomore? O LORDE God of Israel, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet vnto this present daye. And beholde, now are we before y in oure synnes, now can we not stonde before the in them.

3 And whan Esdras with this prayer had knowleged the synne, wepinge,^b τ lyēge^c flāt vpon the grounde before the tēple, there gathered vnto him from Ierusalem a greate multitude of men τ wemen, of yonge men τ maydens, for there was a very greate wepinge and mourninge in the cōgregation. So whan Iechonias the sonne Ieheli one of the children of Israel cried, he sayde vnto Esdras: we haue synned agaynst the LORDE, because we haue married outlandish wemen of the Heithē. Now art thou ouer all Israel.

We wil swaere an ooth therfore vnto f LORDE, y we shal put awaye all oure wyues which we haue takē of the Heithē, with their childrē: like as it is appoynted the by oure fore elders. Stonde vp then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs acordlye to the lawe of f LORDE: for the matter belongeth vnto f , τ we wyll helpe the, quyte thy self manly. So Eszdras arose, and toke an ooth of the rulers of f prestes τ of f Leuites τ of all Israel, to do after these thinges, and they swaere.

The ii. Chapter.

THEN Eszdras stode vp from the courte A of the tēple without, τ wente in to the chāber of Ionathas the sonne of Nasabus, τ remayned there, τ ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was made a proclamacion in all Iewry τ at Ierusalem, for all soch as were gathered at Ierusalē out of captiuyte, y who so euer came not to Ierusalē within two or thre dayes (acordinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of counsell) his goodes shulde be taken from him, τ he excluded from the cōgregation of the captiuyte. And in thre dayes were all they of the trybe of Iuda τ Ben Iamin gathered together at Ierusalem, the xx. daye of y ix. moneth. And y whole multitude sat trēblinge in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Eszdras arose vp, τ sayde vnto them: ye haue done vnrighteously, in that ye haue taken outlandish wyues to mariage, τ so to increase the synnes of Israel. And now knowlege the same, τ geue prayse vnto the LORDE God of oure fathers, τ perfourme his wil, departinge from the Heithen of the londe, τ from the outlandish wyues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce, τ sayde: like as thou hast spokē, so wil we do: But for so moch as the people B are many, τ y wynter here, we maie not stōde without y house: agayne, this worke is not a thinge, y can be fynished in a daye or two, for we be many y haue synned in these thinges: Ordene therfore, y the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs, and as many as haue outlandish wyues, the prestes also and iudges of euery place, maye stonde in the tyme appoynted, tyll they lowse vp the wrath of the LORDE in this busynes.

Then Ionathas the sonne of Ezeli, ⁊ Ozias and Thecam receaued ſ charge of this matter, ⁊ Bozoramus, ⁊ Leius and Sabatheus helped thē therto. After this, all they stode vp ſ were come out of captiuyte. And Eszdras the prest chose vnto him the pryncipall men from amonge the fathers acordinge to their names, ⁊ in the new moone of the tenth moneth they sat together, to examen this matter. And so the matter was a determyng (concernyng the men ſ had outlandish wyues) vntill the new moone of the first moneth. And of the prestes ſ had mixte thē selues with outlandish wyues, there were founde:^a Of the sonnes of Iesu the sonne of Iosedec ⁊ his brethren, Mazeas, Eleazar, Ioribus ⁊ Ioadeus, which offred them selues to put awaye their wyues, ⁊ to offre a ranme for their ignorance. And of the sonnes of Gemmeri, Masseas, ⁊ Esses ⁊ Ieelech Azarias. Of ſ sonnes of Fosera, Limosias, Hismaen, Nathanea, Iussio, Ieddus, ⁊ Talsas. And of the Leuites, Iosabdu, Semeis and Colnis, Caletas, Facteas, Colnas and Elionas. Of the syngers of the Sāctuary, Eliarib, Zackarus. Of the porters, Sallumus ⁊ Tolbanes. And of Israel, of the children of Foro, Osi ⁊ Remias, ⁊ Geddias, ⁊ Melchias, Michelus, Eleazarus, Iēmebias ⁊ Bannas. And of the childrē of Iolaman, Chianas, Zachary, Ietzrelus, Ioddius, Erimoth ⁊ Elias. And of ſ sonnes of Iathoim, Eliadas, Liasamus, ⁊ Zochias, Larimoth, Sabdis ⁊ Tebedias. And of ſ sonnes of Zebes, Iohānes Amanias, Zabdiās, ⁊ Emeus. And of the sonnes of Bannus, Olammus, Maluchus, Ieddus, Iasub, Asabus ⁊ Ierimoth. And of ſ sonnes of Addin, Naatus ⁊ Moosias ⁊ Caleus ⁊ Raanas Maasuas, Mathathias, Besel, Bannus, and Manasses.

And of the sonnes of Naue, Nones, Afeas, Melchias, Sameas, Simō, Ben lamin, Malchus ⁊ Marras. And of the sonnes of Asom, Carianeus, Mathathias, Bannus, Eliphalach, Manasses, Semei. Of the sonnes of Bannus, Jeremy, Moodias, Abramas, Iohel, Baneas, Peliaas, Iona, Marimoth, Eliasib, Mathaneus, Eliasis, Orizas, Dielus, Semedius, Zambris ⁊ Ioseph. Of ſ sonnes of Nobeus, Idelus, Mathathias, Sabadus, Zecheda, Sedmi, Iesseus, ⁊ Baneas. All these had takē outlādish wemē to marriage, ⁊ they put thē awaye with their childrē.

The prestes ⁊ Leuites, ⁊ all they ſ were of Israel, dwelt at Ierusalem ⁊ thorow out all ſ londe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth, ⁊ the childrē of Israel were in their dwellynges. And ſ whole multitude came together vpon ſ floore at ſ east syde^b of the holy porte of ſ tēple. And they spake vnto Eszdras ſ hie prest ⁊ reder, ſ he wolde brvngē ſ lawe of Moses, which was geuē of ſ LORDE God of Israel. So Eszdras the hie prest brought the lawe vnto the whole multitude, to man and woman, ⁊ to all prestes, ſ they might heare the lawe, in the new moone of the seuenth moneth. And he red in ſ floore ſ is before ſ holy porte of ſ tēple, from the momynge early vntill the euenynge, before men ⁊ wemen. And they applied their mynde all vnto the lawe.

And Eszdras the prest ⁊ reder of ſ lawe stode vp vpon a scaffolde of wodd, which was made therefore: ⁊ vpon his right hande there stode by him Mathathias, Samus, Ananias, Azarias, Vrias, Ozechias, ⁊ Balsamus: Vpon his lefte hāde stode Faldeus, Misael, Malachias, Abuschas, Sabus, Nabadias, ⁊ Zachary. Then toke Eszdras ſ boke before the whole multitude, for he was ſ pryncipall and had in most honoure of thē all. And whā he had red out ſ lawe, they stode all straight vp vpon their fete. So Eszdras prayned the LORDE the most hye God, the Allmightie God of hoostes. And all ſ people answered, Amen: ⁊ helde vp their hādes, fell downe flat vpon the earth, ⁊ prayned ſ LORDE: Iesus, Beneas, Sarebias, Iaddimus, Accubus, Sabatheus, Calithes, Azarias, Ioradus, Ananias, ⁊ Philius the Leuites which taught the lawe of the LORDE, ⁊ red the lawe of the LORDE in the cōgregation, ⁊ euery man sett those before ſ vnderstode the lawe. Then spake Atharathes vnto Eszdras the hye prest ⁊ reder, ⁊ to the Leuites ſ taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: ⁊ all they ſ had herde the lawe, wepte. So Eszdras sayde:^c Departe your waye then, ⁊ eate the best, ⁊ drynke the swetest, ⁊ sende giftes vnto them ſ haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, ⁊ sent rewardes vnto thē y had nothinge, y they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thorow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Ierusalem to holde the feast, accordinge to the couenaunt of y LORDE God of Israel.

Chap. XVI.

Punyshment vpon the Heithen, and how the people of God shal behaue them selues therin.

The first Chapter.

A THE seconde boke of ꝑ prophet Esdras:^d
 (ꝑ sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, ꝑ sonne of Helchia, ꝑ sonne of Sallū, the sonne of Sadoe, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarahias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was prisoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerses kynge of Persia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: "Go thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesses, which they haue done against me, that they maye tell their childers childrē the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egipte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, & despyed my counceils. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe."

It is a people without lernynge & nourture. How longe shal I forbear them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sakes: Pharao with his seruauētes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne:^d All ꝑ nacions haue I destroyed and roted out before them, and in ꝑ east haue I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sydon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE:^e "I led you thorow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnyng. I gaue you Moses to be youre captayne, and Aaron to be the prest:^f I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greate wōders haue I done amōge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE."

Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I gaue you quales to eate, and tentes for youre scoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and ascribed not ꝑ victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yet this same daie do ye yet murmoure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? When ye were hongrie in the wildernes, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wildernes, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serued ꝑ Egipcians, then to dye in this wildernesse. The had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gaue you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not I hew ꝑ hardstone, & caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, I couered you with ꝑ leaues of the trees. A good pleasaunt fatt londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and Philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saith the LORDE?"

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE:^g "Whan ye were in the wildernes, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in to ꝑ water, and made the ryuer swete. What shall I do vnto the, O Iacob? Thou Iuda woldest not obeye me. I wil turne me to another people, & vnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsakē me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. Whan ye call vpō me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to commytt manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE."

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE:^h "haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a nourse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father?" I gathered you together, as an henne gathereth hir chekens vnder hir wynges. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. Whan ye offre vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for your solemne feast dayes, youre new moones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken. I sent vnto you my seruauentes the prophetes, f Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: youre house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde doth y^e strawe: youre children shal not be frutefull, for they haue despysed my commaundement, and done y^e thinge y^e is euell before me. Your houses wil I geue vnto a people y^e shal come, and they y^e neuer herde me, shal beleue in me: ⁊ they vnto whō I neuer shewed token, shal do the thinge y^e I cōmaunde thē. They haue sene no prophetes, yet shal they call their synnes to remembraunce, and knowlege thē. I reporte me vnto the grace, that I wil do for the people which is to come, whose children reioyse in gladnes: ⁊ though they haue not sene me with bodely eyes, yet in sprete they beleue the thinge that I saye. And now brother, beholde what greate ^hworshipe, and se y^e people that commeth from the east, vnto whom I wyll geue the dukedome of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, of Oseas, Amos, and Micheas, of Ioel, Abdy, Ionas, Naum and Abacuc, of Sophony, Aggeus, Zachary and Malachy, which is called also an angel (or messaūger) of the LORDE.

The ii. Chapter.

Q THUS sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue thē my cōmaundementes by my seruauūtes y^e prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despysed my coucels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow ⁊ forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE youre God, and done y^e thinge that is euell before him. But what shall I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsakē: go youre waye (o my children) and axe mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these childrē, which wolde not kepe my couenant: y^e thou bryngte them to cōfucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatted abroad amonge the Heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorne of my couenant.

Wo be vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto ^hSodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and aszshes. Euen so also wyl I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto Esdras: Tell my people, y^e I will geue them the kyngdome of Ierusalem, which I wolde haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euerlastyng tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oyntment: they shal nether labour ner be weery. Go ye youre waye, ⁊ ye shall receaue it. Praye for youre selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therin. Now is the kyngdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heauē and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lye sayeth y^e LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and bryngte them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

And those that be deed wyl I raise vp agayne from their places, and bryngte them out of y^e graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke thē from thy nombre, vexē not thy self.

For whan the daye of trouble and heuynes commeth, other shal wepe and be sorowfull, but thou shalt be mery and plenteous. The Heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothings agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childrē, for I wyll deluyer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childrē, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Enbrace thy childrē, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Eszdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But whan I came vnto thē, they set me at naught, and despyed the commaundement of ꝑ LORDE. And therefore I saye vnto you O ye Heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be ready to the rewarde of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shall shyne vpon you for euernore. Fle the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulnes of your glory. I testifie my sauioure openly: O receaue the gift ꝑ is geuen you, and be glad, geuynge thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heavenly kyngdome. Aryse vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmētes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shutt vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longest for, is fulfilled: beseke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnyng, maye be halowed.

I Eszdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greate people, whom I coude not nombre, ꝑ they all prayded the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuynge. And in the myddest of thē there was a younge mā of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of thyr heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marued at greatly. So I axed ꝑ angell, ꝑ sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortal, and haue testified ꝑ knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge personne is it, that crowneth them, ꝑ geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is ꝑ sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commende them, that stode so stify for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thinges and how greate wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene.

The iij. Chapter.

IN the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I I was at Babilon ꝑ laye troubled vpō my bed, ꝑ my thoughtes came vp ouer my hert: for I sawe ꝑ desolacion of Sion, ꝑ the plenteous wealth of them ꝑ dwelt at Babilon: ꝑ my sprete was sore moued, so that I begāne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hiest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnyng, whan thou plantēdst ꝑ earth, (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vnto ꝑ people, and a body vnto Adam, ^b which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradys, which gardē of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundemēt to loue ꝑ waye, which he transgressed, ꝑ immediatly thou appoyntēdest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people, ꝑ kynredes out of nombre. ^c And euery people walked after their owne wil, and did nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despyed them.

^d But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou leftest: namely, Noe with his housholde, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, when they ŷ dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greate people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now when they all lyued so wickedly before the, ^a thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an euerlastinge couenaunt with him, promisinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. ^b And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Jacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Jacob became a greate multitude.

And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egipte, thou broughtest thē vp to the mount Sion, ^c bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouyng the gronde, makyng the depthes to shake, and troublinge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Jacob, and diligence vnto the generaciō of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not away from thē that wicked hert, that thy lawe might bryng forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was ouercome, and so be all they ŷ are borne of him. ^d Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed away, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed away, and the yeares were brought to an ende. ^e Then didest thou raise the vp a seruaunt called Dauid, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offre vp incense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabitants of the cite forsok the, and in all things dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite ouer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, ŷ they shal therefore haue the domynion of Sion? For when I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greate wickednesse, that it coude not be nōbred: yee when my soule sawe so many euell doers (in ŷ xxx. yeare) my hert fayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and sparest ŷ wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, ^f this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceauē how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, ŷ knoweth the, sayng the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued ŷ couenautes, as Iacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their labour hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the Heithē, ^g I se, ŷ they be rych ^h wealthy, ⁱ theynke not vpon ŷ commaundementes. Weye thou therefore oure wickednesse now in ŷ balauce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be no where founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, ŷ hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and Heithen.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND the anngell that was sent vnto me (whose name was Vriel) gaue me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē to moch vpon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehend the waye of the Hyest. Then sayde I: yee my lordē. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desyrest to se, and I shal shewe the from whēce the wicked hert commeth. And I sayde: tell on my LORDE. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: Yf I shulde axe the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greate water springes are vpon \hat{y} firmamēt? Or how greate water sprynges are in the begynnyng of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peraduſture thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wente downe yet in to \hat{y} depe ner hell, nether dyd I euer clymme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thorow thou hast trauallyed, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answeere of them.

B He sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thynges, and such as are growne vp with \hat{y} , canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to cōprehende the waye of the Hyest, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstōde the corrupcion \hat{y} is eydent in my sight? Thē sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, thē that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wēte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deuyce and sayde: ^a Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddes.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuyce, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wodd, that we maye make our lond the wyder. The thought and deuyce of the wodd was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewyse to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stopped them.

C Yf thou were iudge now betwixte these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuyed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me τ sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: ^b euen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstōde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboute the heauens, maye onely vnderstōde the thynges, that are aboute the hea-uens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseke the (O LORDE) let me haue vnderstandinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thynges, but of soch as we daylie medle withall: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the Heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punyshed of vngodly nacōs: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenauntes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshoppers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouer vs? Of these thynges haue I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt maruel, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehend the thynges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, ^c for this worlde is full of vnrigh- teousnes and weaknes.

But as concernyng the thirges wherof thou axest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruccion therof is not yet come. Yf the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where \hat{y} euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come \hat{y} is sowne with \hat{y} good. For the corne of euell sede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnyng, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme? and how moch shal he yet bringe forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

E Pondre now by thyself, whā \hat{y} corne of euell sede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fyll? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thynges come to passe? Wherfore are oure yeares few τ euell? And he answered me, sayēge: Haist not thou to moch vpon the Hyest, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not \hat{y} soules also of the righteous axe question of these thynges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan commeth the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpō this Ieremiel the archangel gaue them answeere, and sayde: ^d Euē whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balauce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peraduenture it is not, that the barnes of the righteous shall not be fylled, because of the synnes of thē that dwell vpon earth.

f So he answered me, & sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and axe her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childesbed maye kepe y byrth enyloger within her. Thē sayde I: No LORDE, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secrete places of soules are like y preuy chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauallyeth, maketh haist, when the tyme & necessite of the byrth is at hande: Euē so doth she haist to deluyer it that is commytted vnto her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shalbe shewed the from the begynnyng. Then answered I and sayde: Yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therefore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come thē is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

e And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpō y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, & beholde, an whote burnyng ouē wente ouer before me: & it happened y whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this there wēte ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne with a storme: & whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remayned still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, euen so y measure of the things that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: May I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shall happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokes wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of thē in a parte: but as touchinge * y life, I may not shewe the, for I am not sent therefore.

* Some rede, my life.

The v. Chapter.

NEUERTHELESSE, as concernyng the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greate nombre, & the waye of the trueth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge agoo. And the londe that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after y thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moore thre tymes in the daye, & bloude shal droppe out of wodd, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe vnquyete: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the foules shal flyt, and the Sodomytish see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof.

B There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, & menstruous wemen shal beare monsters, and salt waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secrete places, & shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and voluptuousnes haue the vpperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal axe another, and saye: Is righteousnes gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge optayne: they shal labour, but their wayes shall not prosper.

To shewe the soch tokens I haue leue, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, & wepe as now, and fast seuen dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater things. Then I awaked, and a fearfulnes wente thorow all my body, & my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, helde me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

C And in the seconde night it happened, y Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene?

and why is thy countenance so heuy? Knowest thou not, y Israel is commyttyd vnto the, in the londes of their captyuyte? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde that leaueth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye fro me, and come not nye me: ¶ he herde it, and as I sayde, so wete he his waye fro me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Vriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that y thoughtes of my hert were very greuouse vnto me agayne, ¶ my soule receaued y sprete of vnderstandynge, ¶ I begane to talke with the most hiest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wod of y earth ¶ of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen y one onely vnyarde: and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the groude thou hast chosen the one lylic: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all y foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell y are made, thou hast prouyded y one shepe: ¶ amoge all y multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou louedest, thou gauest a lawe, y is proued of all.

¶ And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? ¶ vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatered y one onely people amonge many? which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde y promyses, ¶ neuer beleued y couenautes? And though thou werest enemye vnto y people, yet shuldest thou punysh the with thine owne handes. Now whā I had spokē these wordes, the angell y came to me y night afore, was set vnto me, ¶ sayde vnto me: Hearre me, ¶ herkē to y thinge y I saye, ¶ I shal tell y more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed ¶ troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou y people better, then him y made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grefe ¶ cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hiest, and to seke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not.

And I sayde: wherefore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childesbed then my graue? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Iacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

And he sayde vnto me: Nōbre me y things, y are not yet come: gather me together y droppes, that are scatred abroad: make me y floures grene agayne, y are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shutt vp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the thinge, that thou labourst to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who may knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellyng with mē? As for me, I am vn wise: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou axest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of these thinges y I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the loue that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde o LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyll lycken my iudgment vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered ¶ sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature may not haist aboue the maker, nether maye the worlde holde the at once, that shalbe created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruauit, that thou luyngē maker hast made the creature luyngē at once, ¶ the creature bare it? eūē so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Axe the childesbed of a womā, and saye vnto her: Yf thou bringest forth childrē, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therefore, to bryngē forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childesbed vnto the earth, for those that haue not tasted death by their byrth and the heart of the indwellers shalbe changed, and turned in to another meaninge. for euell shalbe put out, and discreete shalbe quenched. As for both, it shal flourish, corruption shalbe ouercome: and the truth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

¶ And it happened when he talked with me, that I looked demurely vpon him, be-cause who I stude, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe $\frac{1}{2}$ the tyme of $\frac{1}{2}$ night for to come.

¶ Yet thou wilt praye yet more, and hast seuen dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy praye is heard before the Highest: for why? the Mightie hath sent thy righteous deuyngs, he hath sent also thy chastite, which thou hast had ever since thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe thee all these thinges, and to syze vnto thee: Be of good comforte, and beare not, and hast not with $\frac{1}{2}$ tymes that are past to thyke vayne thinges, and make no hast of the latter tymes.

¶ And it happened after this, $\frac{1}{2}$ I slepte agayne, and fasted seuen dayes in like manner, that I might fulfill the three weekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my heart vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Highest: for my sperte was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distress, and I sayde: O LORD, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (even the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sperte, and the darknesses were yet in euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a layre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be seene.

¶ Vpon the seuernde daye thou saydest the sperte of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuision betwixe the waters, that the one parte might remaine above, and the other beneath. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, $\frac{1}{2}$ the waters were gathered in the seventh parte of the earth. Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intent $\frac{1}{2}$ men might seme and occupy husbandrie therein. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediately there was growen innumerable frute, & many diuerse pleasures & desyres of temptation, flowers of changinge colour and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

¶ Vpon the fourth daye thou commaundedst that the Sonne shoulde geue his shyne, and $\frac{1}{2}$ Moone his light: the starres didest thou sett in order, and gauest them a charge, to de- seruyce euen vnto man, that was for to be made. Vpon the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seventh parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shoulde bringe forth diuers beasts, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the diuine water and without soule, brought forth lymyng beasts at the commaundment of God, that all people might prayse thy wondrous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, $\frac{1}{2}$ one thou calledst Lamech and the other Lemathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seventh parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Lamech thou gauest one parte, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shoulde dwell in the same parte, wherein are a thousande hilles. But vnto Lemathan thou gauest the seventh parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoise what thou wilt, and when.

¶ Vpon the sixth daye thou gauest commaundment vnto the earth, that before the it shoulde bringe forth beasts, cattell and all $\frac{1}{2}$ creep, & theydes this: Adam also, whom thou saydest lord of all thy creature: Of him came he all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde vnto and spoken before the, that I might shewe thee how that the worlde is made for our sake. As for the other people which also came of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but to bee a spelle, and hast reckened the abundance of them into a droppe (that is to say) from the rube of the nose.

¶ And now O LORD, the Heathen which haue neuer bene repared as nothinge, haue begunne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuise vs: but as thy people (whom thou hast called $\frac{1}{2}$ first borne, thy only begotten, and thy first borne) are growen in to their handes and power. If the worlde now be made for our sake, why haue we not the inheritance in that be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue I ordered the worlde which I made.

¶ And I axed and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geuē me a waye, I wyl speake before ŷ: for oure mother of whō thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge. ⁊ now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me ⁊ sayde: Axe a woman that beareth children, ⁊ she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherefore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but less of stature? And she shal answer the: They ŷ be borne in the youth of strēgth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the child-eszbed fayleth) are other wyse. Cōsidre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruauant, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The vi. Chapter.

¶ AND he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer ŷ wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundacions of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were established, before ŷ innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer ŷ highnesses of ŷ ayre were lifted vp, afore ŷ measures of the firmament were named, or euer ŷ chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presentē yeares were sought out, and or euer the inuencions of them ŷ now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that now gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I cōsidre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shalbe the partyngē asunder of the tymes? Or whan shalbe the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Iacob ⁊ Esau were borne of him, Iacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Iacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Eszdras) axe thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseke the, shewe thy seruauant the ende of thy tokēs, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde vp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but ŷ place where thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therefore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundacion of ŷ earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quaketh, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce ŷ spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, ŷ dayes come, ŷ I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpō earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisition of them, what they be ŷ haue hurte equyte with wrighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfilled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

The bokes shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, ⁊ the children of a yeaere olde shal speake with their voyces: the womē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shall lyue, and be raysed vp: ⁊ sodely shal the sowne places appere as the visowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptie, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā euery man heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shall frendes fight^a one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so euer remayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not taisted death frō their byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned in to another meanyng: for euell shalbe put out, and disceate shalbe quenched. As for faith, it shal flourish, corrupcion shalbe ouercome: and the trueth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shalbe declared.

And it happened when he talked with me, that I loked demurely vpō him, before whō I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe ſ, the tyme of ſ night for to come.

Yf thou wilt praye yet more, and fast senē dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, ⁊ greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the Hiest: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealyng, he hath sene also thy chasite, which thou hast had euer sence thy youth: and therefore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haist not with ſ tymes that are past to thynke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tyues.

And it happened after this, ſ I wepte agayne, and fasted seven dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre wekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vexed within me agayne, and I begaune to speake before the Hiest: for my sprete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (euen the first daye) and saydest: Let^e heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the sprete, and the darkneses were yet on euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

Vpon the seconde daye thou maydest the sprete of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder ⁊ to make a deuysion betwixe the waters, that the one parte might remaine aboue, and the other beneath. Vpon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, ſ the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dryed vp, and kepte them, to the intēt ſ men might sowe and occupie huszbandrie therin. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greate innumerable frute, ⁊ many dyuerse pleasures ⁊ desyres of temptacion, floures of changeable colour and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Vpon the fourth daye thou cōmaundedst that the Sonne shulde gene his shyne, and ſ Moone hir light: the starres didest thou sett in ordre, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man,^b that was for to be made. Vpō the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the domme water and without soule, brought forth luyngge beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, ſ one thou caldest Enoch and the other Leuiathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dryed vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherin are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leuiathā thou gauest the seuenth parte, namely the moyst, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wilt, and whan.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest cōmaundement vnto the earth, that before the it shulde bryng forth beastes, catell and all ſ crepe, ⁊ (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest lorde of all thy creatures: Of him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this haue I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast likened the abudaunce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rofe of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the Heithē which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begōne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called ſ first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent louer) are geuen in to their handes and power. Yf the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritance in possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

The vii. Chapter.

AND it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vp Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake on LORDE my God. Thē sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, ŷ it might be depe and greate: but the intrauce is narrow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? Yf he wente not thorow the narrow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intrauce is narrow and sodane, like as yf there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwixte thē both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

Yf this cite now were geuen to an heyre, ⁊ he neuer wente thorow this parlous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritauce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: ⁊ whan Adam trāsgressed my statutes, then was ŷ thinge iudged that was done. Then were ŷ intrauces of the worlde made narrow, full of sorow and trauayle: They are but few ⁊ euell, full of paretls and laboure. For the intrauces of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.

B Yf they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehend these straye and vayne thinges, moch lesse maye they cōprehende and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seyng thou art but a corruptible mā? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Thē sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordened in thy lawe,^a that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perise. Neuer-theles the righteous shall suffre straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue lyued vngodly ⁊ suffred straye thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge aboute God, and none that hath vnderstandinge aboute the Hyest. For there be many ŷ perish, because they despyse ŷ lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commaundement to such as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Neuertheles they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymaged vayne thinges, ⁊ purposed to synne, and sayde morouer, that there was no God, ⁊ that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despysed, ⁊ denyed his promyses: in his statutes ⁊ ordinaunces haue they not bene faithfull ⁊ stedfast, and haue not performed his workes.

And therefore Esdras, vnto the full, plenty: C and to the empye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, ŷ these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, ⁊ the bryde shall appeare: ⁊ the earth ŷ now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: ⁊ who so euer is deliuered from ŷ foresayde euels, shal se my wōders. For my sonne Iesus shal be openly declared, with those ŷ be with him: and they ŷ remayne, shal be mery in foure hundreth yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Christ dye, and all men that haue life: and ŷ worlde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seuen dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shall remayne. And after seue dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe raysed vp, ⁊ shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in sylce, and the secrete places shal deliuer those that be committed vnto them. And ŷ most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, ⁊ all misery shal vanysh awaye, and lōge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shal contynue, ŷ trueth shal remayne, and faith shal waxe strōge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewarde shall be shewed, the righteousneses shall watch, and the vnrighteousneses shall beare no rule.

Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites, τ Moses for the fathers ŷ synned in the wyldernes, τ he ŷ came after him for Israel, in ŷ tyme of Achas and Samuel: and Daniid for ŷ destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, τ Helias for those that receaned rayne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for ŷ people in the tyme of Senacherib: τ dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Euē so now, seynge ŷ corrupte is growne vp. and wickednes increased, and the righteous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherfore shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not ŷ ende, there remaineth moch honoure in it, therefore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and ŷ begynnynge of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is loused, all myszbeleue taken awaye, righteousnes growne, and the verite spronge vp. Then shall no man be able to saue him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him ŷ hath gottē ŷ victory. I answered thē, τ sayde: This is my first τ last sayenge: ŷ it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geuē him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heynes, τ after death to loke for punyszment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou ŷ synned, thou art not fallē alone, but we all ŷ come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortal tyme, where as we medle with deadly workes? τ that there is promysed vs an euerlasting hope, where as we oure selues are euell and vayne? τ ŷ there are layed vp for vs dwelllynges of health τ fredome, where as we haue lyued euell? and that the worships of ŷ Hyest is keppe to defende them, which haue led a pacient life, where as we haue walked in ŷ most wicked wayes of all? and that there shalbe shewed a paradise, whose frute endureth for euer, wherin is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in? for we haue walked in vupleasaut places: And that the faces of them which haue absteyned, shal shyne aboute the starres, where as oure faces shalbe blacke and darcke? For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death?

Thē answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion τ thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shall suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shall recēue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life,⁶ that thou mayest lyue. Neuertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him, No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruccion, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred thē selues to be enfourmed in saluacion.

I answered then τ sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the Hyest is mercyfull, in ŷ he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe:⁶ and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberrall to geue where as it requyreth: and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesse towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mereries, the worlde shal not be made lyuynge, with those that dwell therein: He geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made lyuynge. And yf the iudge forgauē not those ŷ be healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye ŷ multitude that stryue, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The viij. Chapter.

AND he answered me, sayēge: The most hyest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a synmilitude, Eszdras: As whan thou axest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it ŷ golde cōmeth of.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created,^a but few shall be preserued. Then answered I ⁊ sayde: Then swaloue vp the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the vnderstandinge, for thou art agreed to herken and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophecie: for thou hast no longer space geuen the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruauent leue, ⁊ we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geue sedē vnto oure hert, and buylde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that euery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childesbed, and thou geuest the membres, and thy creature is preserued in fyre and water: ⁊ ix. monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserueth and it ⁊ is preserued, shal both be kepte together: ⁊ when tyme is, the childesbedd delyuereth ⁊ thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

B For thou hast commaunded the brestes to geue mylek vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou disposest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nurtuarest it in thy lawe, and reformuarest it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it luyunge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which with so greate labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserued.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritaunce, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Iacob, for whose sake I am greued: therefore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euen of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstode my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

^a Mat. 20. b. and 21. b.

This is the begynnynge of the wordes of Esdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euerlastyngnesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stole is exceeding hie, whose glory and maiesty maye not be comprehēded, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with tremblinge, whose kepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynaunce is fearfull, whose loke dryeth vp the depthes, whose wrath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, ⁊ whose trueth beareth wytnes: O heare ⁊ prayer of thy seruauent, and marck with thine eares the peticion of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lōge as I haue vnderstandinge, I will answer. O loke not vpō the synnes of thy people, which serue ⁊ in the trueth. Haue no respecte vnto the wicked studies of the Heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepe thy testimonies with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in ⁊ righteousnes and glory; for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

D For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for ⁊ righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towards him?

^b For of a trueth there is no man amonge them that be borne, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done anysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousnes ⁊ thy goodnes shalbe prayed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not rych in good workes.

^b 3 Re. 8. g. 2 Par. 6. f. 1 Ioh. 1. b.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some things hast thou spoken a right, and acordynge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destrucciō, but I wyll reioyse ouer the worke and thought of ȳ righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgrimage, the holymakynge and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the huszbād man soweth much sēde vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plāted is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

I answered then ⁊ sayde: Yf I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbāde mans sēde perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moch rayne vpon it: Euen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and likened him vnto the huszbande mans sēde. Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritauce: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for such as be to come. For thou wātest yet moch, seynge thou mayest loue my creature aboute me: I haue oft times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art maruelous before the Hyest, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, ȳ thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate wrechidnes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in ȳ worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstonde thou for thy self, and seke out glory for such as be like the: for vnto you is paradise opened, the tre of life is plāted, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wysdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and moth is hyd from you, ⁊ into hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulness. Sorowes are vanysht awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortalite. And therefore axe thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perishe. For they haue taken libertie, despyed the Hyest, thought scorne of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Morouer, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Euē so is thyrst and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vntthankfull vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therefore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to such as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORDE, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begyne to do at the last: but at what tyme and whan, thou hast not shewed me.

The ij. Chapter.

HE answered me then and saide: Measure thou the tyme diligently in it self, whan thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde ȳ before: so shalt thou vnderstonde, that it is the very same tyme, wheriu the Hyest wil begynne to vysit the worlde, which he made. And whā there shalbe sene earthquake and proure of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstonde, that the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tynes also of the Hyest haue playne begynnynge in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And euery one that shalbe sauēd, and shall be able to escape by his workes ⁊ by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserued from the saide pears, and shal se my sauioire in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse, which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytfully, shall dwell in paynes.

* Gen. 4. a.

B For such as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome. and when they had yet open rowme of amendenēt and conuersion, ⁊ vnderstode not, but despyed it: ŷ same must knowe it after death in payne. And therefore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, ⁊ how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: "I haue talked before ⁊ now I speake, and wyl speake also hereafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppes.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the sede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also ŷ worke: and as the huszband man is himself, so is his huszbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, wher in they shulde dwell, then was there no man that withstode me.

C Now whan euery one was, and the maker also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moueth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was parell, because of ŷ thoughtes that were come in to it. And I sawe, and spared thē greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish thē, which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape ⁊ wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greate labour haue I made it vp.

Neuertheles yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to ŷ felde of floures, where no house is buylde, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. Praye vnto the Hyst contynually, so will I come, and talke with the.

B So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge ŷ floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and ŷ meate of the same satisfied me. After senen dayes I sat vpon the grasse, ⁊ my hert was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the Hyst, and saide: O LORDE, thou ŷ shewest thy self vnto vs, ⁊ thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, whan they came out of Egipte, and thou spakest, sayge: Heare me O Israel, and marke my wordes thou sede of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, ⁊ ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, ⁊ the frute of ŷ lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why? it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, ⁊ because they kepte not ŷ thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the grounde receaueth Æ sede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe ⁊ are broken, which are sowne or putt therein. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we ŷ haue receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and oure hert also which receaued the lawe: notwithstandinge ⁊ the lawe perisheth not, but remaineth in his labour.

And whan I considered these things in my hert after this maner, I loked aboute me with myne eyes, ⁊ vpon the right syde I sawe a woman, which mourned sore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peeces, ⁊ she had aszshes vpon hir heade.

Æ Thē let I my thoughtes go, ŷ I was in, ⁊ turned me vnto her, ⁊ sayde: wherfore wepest thou? why art thou so sory ⁊ discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me bewaile my self ⁊ take yet more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, ⁊ brought very lowe. And I said vnto her: what ayleth ŷ? Or who hath done eny thinge to ŷ? tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and baren, and haue had an huszband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to ꝑ Hyest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handmayden, loked vpon my misery, considered my trouble, and gaue me a soune, and I was glad of him, so was my husbād also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greate honour vnto ꝑ Mightie. And I norished him with greate traauyle. So whan he grewe vp, ⁊ came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The r. Chaptr.

AND it happened that whan my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: thē ouerthrew we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to cōforte me. Thē toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: ⁊ whan they had all rested, ꝑ they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remayne here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditations and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not our heynes and mournyuge, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion oure mother is all wofull and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery? seinge we be all now in heynes, ⁊ make oure moue (for we be all soroufull.) As for the heynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnyuge all men are borne of her, ⁊ other shal come: and beholde, they walke almost all in to destruction, and many of them shalbe roted out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournyuge, then she, that hath lost so greate a multitude? and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournyuge is not like the mournyuge of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heynes: as for the earth, accordinge to the ordynauce of ꝑ earth onely, so that many are gone away in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with traauyle ⁊ sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnyuge geueth hir frute vnto man, for him ꝑ made her. And therefore witholde thy sorowe and heynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto ꝑ, beare it strōgly.^a For yf thou iudgest the marck ⁊ ende of God to be righteous and good, and receauest his counceill in tyme, thou shalt be commended theriu. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbāde.

And she sayde vnto me: that wyl I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I commoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be cōceeled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Ierusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure aluter broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankesgeuyuge put to sylence, oure myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candlestick is quenched, ꝑ Arke of the couenant is takē from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Leuites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues rauyshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure childrē destroyed, oure yonge men are brought in bōdage, and oure strōge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which seale is ꝑ greatest of all) is lowsed vp from hir worshippe: for she is deliuered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therefore shake of ꝑ greate heynes, and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vnto the, and that the Hyest maye geue the rest from ꝑ labour and traauyle. And it happened, that whan I was talkyng with her, hir face dyd shyne ⁊ glyster, so that I was afraied of her, and mused what it might be. And immediatly she cast out a greate voyce, very fearfull, so that ꝑ earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I loked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylde, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundaicion.

Then was I afraied, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Vriel the angell,^b which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many consideracions and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakynge these wordes, he came vnto me, and loked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge vexed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sory? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done acordynge vnto thy wordes, I wente in to the felde, and there haue I sene thinges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stöde vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake to me my LORDE, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. Or shall my vnderstondynge be disceaued, and my mynde? But now I beseke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauunt of this wöder. He answered me thē and sayde: heare me, and I shall enfourme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afrayed, for the Hyst hath opened many secrete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greate lamentacion for Sion: and therefore vnderstode the vision which thou sawest a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mournyng, and thou hast comforted her: Neuertheles now seist thou the licknes of the woman no more, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer: The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion: and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeaes vnfrutefull and baren, those are the xxx. yeaes, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeaes Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she uorished him with laboure, that was the dwellyng of Ierusalem. But where as the sonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Ierusalem. And thou sawest hir licknesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what els happened vnto her, I haue shewed ý.

* 4 Esd. 9. a.

And now God seyth, that thou art sory in thy mynde, and suffrest from ý hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir clearnesse, and the fayrnes of hir bewtye.

And therefore I bad the remaine in the felde, where no house is buylded. For I knew ý the Hyst wolde shew this vnto the, therefore I commaunded the to go in to the felde, where no foundation ner buyldinge is. For in the place where the Hyst wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therefore feare not, and let not thine hert be afrayed, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greate it is, and how greate thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehēde. For thou art blessed aboue many other, and art called with the Hyst, as ý few. But tomorrow at night thou shalt remaine here, and so shal the Hyst shewe the visions of hie thynges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in ý last dayes. So I slepte the same night like as he cōmaunded me.

The xi. Chapter.

THEN sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from ý see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Morouer I sawe, that the Aegle flew with his wynges, and rained vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe ý all thinges vnder heauen were subiecte vnto him, and no man spake against him, no not one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, & gaue a sounde with his fethers, & a voyce sayge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe euery mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, ý the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his cōtrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I loked, & beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, and raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, when it raigned, the ende of it came, and the place therof appeared no more. So the nexte folowinge stode vp, and raigned, and had a greate tyme: and it happened, when it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, and sayde: Heare thou, when thou hast kepte in the earth so longe, this I saye vnto thee, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after thee atteyne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, and raigned as the other afore, and appeared nomore also. So wete it with all the residue one after another, so that euery one raigned, and the thirde appeared nomore. The first looked, and beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers which folowed were set vp vpon the right syde, when they might rule also: and some of the ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of the thirde were set vp, but ruled not. After this I looked, and beholde, when xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: and there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, and sixe fethers. Then sawe I also, when the sixe fethers were parted in two, and remayned vnder the heade, when they were vpon the right syde, for the foure cōtynued in their place. So I looked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by the selues to raigne: and when they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them which were by him, and ate vp the two vnder wynges, which wolde haue raigned.

But this heade put the whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those which dwelt vpon earth with moch labour, and he had the gouernance of the worlde, ouer all the foules that haue bene. After this I looked, and beholde, the heade that was in the myddest, sodenly appeared nomore, like as the wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, and ouer those that dwelt therein. And I behelde, and lo, the heade vpon the right side, denouered it that was vpon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: loke before thee, and conside the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng haistely out of the wod, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and sayde: Heare thou, I wyl talke with thee, and the Huest shal saye vnto thee: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that the ende of their times might come thorow thee?

And the fourth came, and ouerwanne all the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greate fearfulness, and ouer the whole compass of the earth with the most wicked labour, and so longe tyme dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, and the earth hast thou iudged not with truth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyet, thou hast loued lyers, and destroyed the dwellings of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of such as dyd thee no harme. Therefore is thy wrongeous dealinge and blasphemy come vp vnto the Huest, and thy pryde vnto the Mightie. The Huest also hath looked vpon the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therefore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngracious heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, when she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for thy iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The xij. Chapter.

AND it happened when the Lyō spake these wordes vnto the Aegle, when the heade afore had the vpperhāde, appeared nomore: nether dyd the foure wynges appeare any more, when they came to him, and were sett vp to raigne, and their kyngdome was small and full of vproure.

And I sawe, and beholde, they appeared nomore, and the whole body of the Aegle was brēt, and the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked I out of the traunce of my mynde, and from greate feare, and sayde vnto my sprete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in when thou searchest

* Rede, I sawe, and beholde, out the wayes of the Hyst: lo, yet am I weery in my minde, and very weake in my sprete, and litle strēth is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaued this night. Therefore wil I now beseke the Hyst, \hat{y} he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, π I sayde: B LORDE LORDE yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with \hat{y} before many other, π yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, cōforte me then, and shew me thy seruaunt the interpretacion π playne differce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly cōforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shew me \hat{y} last of tymes.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretacion of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the kyngdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother "Daniel, but it was no expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a kyngdome vpō earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes \hat{y} were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the secōde shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme thē the other, π this do \hat{y} xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from \hat{y} body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greate struynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, bot shal be set in to his begynnynge. And \hat{y} eight vnderwynges which thou sawest hāge vnto \hat{y} wynges of hī, betokē, \hat{y} in hī there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shalbe but small, π their yeares swift, π two of them shal beare. But whan the middest tyme commeth, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto \hat{y} ende.

And where as thou sawest thre heades restynge, this is the interpretacion: In his last shal the Hyst raise vp thre kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to thē, π they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therin, with moch labourē aboue all those \hat{y} were before thē. Therefore are they called \hat{y} heades of the Aegle: for it is they \hat{y} shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, π \hat{y} shal performe π fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that \hat{y} greate heade appeared no more, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpō his bed, π yet with payne, for the two that remaine, shalbe slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

And where as thou sawest two vnderwinges vpon the heade that is on the right syde, it signifieth, that it is they, whō the Hyst hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome, π full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wodd and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukyng him for his vnrighteousnesse, is the wynde, which the Hyst hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them luyngge before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal he delyuer with trouble, those \hat{y} be preserued ouer myne endes: and he shal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnynge. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secrete of the Hyst.

Therefore wryte all these thinges \hat{y} thou hast sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach thē the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehēde and kepe these secretes. But wayte thou here \hat{y} self yet seuen dayes moo, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the Hyst to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceaued, \hat{y} the seuen dayes were past, π I not come agayne into \hat{y} cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most, π came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, \hat{y} thou forsakest vs, π systter here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darcke place, and as an hauen π shippe preserued from \hat{y} tēpest. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brent with Sion? For we are no better, then they \hat{y} dyed there:

and they wepte with loude voyce. Then answered I the τ sayde: Be of good cōforte O Israel, τ be not heuy thou house of Iacob: for y Hyest hath you in remēbraūce, τ y Mightie hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forsakē you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of y mysery of Israel, that I might seke mercy for y lowe estate of youre Sāctuary. And now go youre waye home every mā, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wēt their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remayned still in the felde seuen dayes, as y angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The iiii. Chapter.

AND it happened after the seūē dayes, y I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and when he turned his countenance to cōsider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and when the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that berde him, like as the earth when it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, τ beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of mē out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heauē, to fight agaynst y man, that came out from y see. And I loked, τ beholde, he graued himself a greate mōntayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, τ I coude not.

I sawe after these, y all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afrayed, and yet durst they fight. Neuertheles when he sawe the fearsnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapon: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes y wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myxte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flāmes, and y greate storme, τ fell with a russhe vpon y people, which was prepared to fight τ brēt thē vp euerychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust τ smoke. When I saw this, I was afrayed.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come B downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sory, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sick thorow greate feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed y seruauant all y wōders frō y begynnyng, τ hast counted me worthy, y thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpreta-tion of this dreame. For thus I cōsidre in my vnderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, τ moch more wo vnto thē that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heynes.

Now vnderstonde I y thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therefore are they come in to greate parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, y he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se y thinges y shal happen in y last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The inter-pretation of the sight shall I shewe the, and I wyl open vnto the, the thinge y thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the inter-pretacion. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes τ faith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therefore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanyng of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge vp from the depe of the see, y same is he whom God the Hyest hath kepte a greate season, which by his owne self shall deluyer his creature, τ he shal ordre thē that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, y out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre and storme, τ how y he lift vp nether swerde ner weapon, but y the ruszhing in of him destroyed the whole multitude, y came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, when God wyl deluyer thē y are vpon earth, τ in a traunce of mynde shall he come vpon thē, y dwell in the earth. And one shal vndertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another, one people agaynst another, ¶ one realme agaynst another. When this commeth to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and thē shal my sonne be declared, whō thou sawest clymme vp as a mā. And whan all ŷ people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, ŷ they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stōle vpon the toppe of the mount Sion. Neuertheles Sion shall come, ¶ shall be shewed, beyng prepared ¶ buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without eny hādes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people ŷ are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punished, are likened vnto the flamme: and without eny labour shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cōpared vnto the fyre.

¶ And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye prisoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom ^b Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer ŷ water, and so came they in to another londe.

But they gaue them this counsell, ŷ they shulde leaue the multitude of the Heithē, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer mankynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrates, and ^c God shewed tokens for thē, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeare and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, ŷ Hyst shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therefore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal dēfede his people that remaine, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, ¶ shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cāst nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretacion of the dreame which thou sawest, therefore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. ^d Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstandinge thy mother, and therefore haue I shewed the ŷ treasure of the Hyest. After three dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Then wente I forth in to ŷ felde, geuyng praye and thanks greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and such as is in tyme, and there I satt three dayes.

The riiii. Chapter.

VPON the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce vnto me out of the bush, ¶ sayde: Esdras, Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. Thē spake he vnto me: ^e In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moses, ¶ talked with him, whā my people serued in Egīpte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egīpte, ¶ brought him vpō ŷ mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him ŷ secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayēge: These wordes shalt thou declare, ¶ not hyde thē. And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shal be turned and remaine with my counsell, and with such as be like the, vntyll ŷ tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to waxe olde. For the tyme is deuyded in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth there that, which is after y half of y tenth parte.

^a Mat. 24. a. ^b 4 Re. 17. a. ^c Exo. 14. c. Iosu. 3. d.

B Therefore prepare and ordre thy house, and reforme thy people: comforte such of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruction: let go from the mortall thoughtes: cast away the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place y thoughtes that are most heny vnto the, and haist the to flyt from these tymes: for such euell ⁊ wickednesse as thou hast now sene happē, shal they do yet moch worse. For the weaker that the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal synne and wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpon earth. For the trueth is fled farre awaye, ⁊ lesynge is hard at haude. For now haisteth the vision to come, that thou hast sene.

C Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are present. But they y shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke thē? Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they y dwell therein, are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. Yf I haue foude grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sens the begynnyng, which was wrytten in thy lawe, that niē maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, may lyue.

And he answered me, sayge: Go y waye, gather thy people together, ⁊ saye vnto thē, that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many boxe trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be perfourmed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto y wyse. Tomorrow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

D Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all y people together, and sayde: Hearre these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnyng were straungers in Egipte, from whēce they were deliuered, and receaued the lawe of life, which they kepte not, which ye also haue trāsgressed after thē. Then was this londē and the londē of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But youre fathers and ye youre selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, ⁊ haue not kepte the wayes which the Hyest cōmaūded you. And for so moch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that he had geuen you. And now are ye here and youre brethren amōge you. Therefore yf so be that ye wil budue youre owne vnderstandinge, and reforme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliuē, ⁊ after death shal ye opteyne mercy. For after death shall the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and y names of the yngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therfore come now vnto me, ner axe eny question at me these xl. dayes.

E So I toke the fyue men (as he commaūded me) and we wente in to the felde, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayge: Esdras, Open thy mouth, ⁊ drynke that I geue the. Thē opened I my mouth, ⁊ beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colour of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had drunken it, my hert had vnderstōdinge, and wysdome grew in my brest: for my sprete was kepte in remembrance, and my mouth was opened and shut no more. The Hyest gauē vnderstōdinge vnto the fyue men, y they wrote y hyc thiges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they ate bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth ⁊ foure bokes.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the Hyest spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytte, speake openly, y the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe y lxx. last, y thou mayest shew it onely to such as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vnderstōdinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The xv. Chapter.

BEHOLDE, speake thou in the eares of my people the wordes of prophēcie,

^a Mat. 24. a. 1 Joh. 2. c.

^b Deut. 4. 5.

^c Eze. 3. a. Apo. 10. b.

which I wyll put in ŷ mouth, saieþ the LORDE: and cause them to be wryten in a letter, for it is the trueth. Feare not the ymaginaciōs against ŷ, let not ŷ vnfaithfulnes of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the vnfaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulnes. Beholde saieþ the LORDE, I wil brynge plagis vpon the worlde: ŷ swerde, hunger, death and destruccio, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all ŷ earth, and their shamefull workes are fulfilled.

33 Therefore saieþ the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. ^b Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therefore (saieþ the LORDE) I wil surely auēge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt bloude from amonge them.

^b Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwell in Egēpte, but wyl brynge them out with a mightie hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plagis as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egēpte shal mourne, and the foundacions of it shalbe smytten with the plage and punysment, ŷ God shal brynge vpon it.

C They that tyll ŷ grouēde, shal mourne, for their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blastinge and hale, and an horrible starre. Wo worth ŷ worlde and them that dwell therein, for ŷ swerde ⁊ their destrucciō draweth nye: ⁊ one people shal stōde vp to fight against another, ⁊ swerdes in their hādes. For mē shalbe vustedfast, and some shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kyngs and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, ⁊ shal not be able. For because of their pryde ŷ cities shalbe brought in feare, ŷ houses shal shake, and men shalbe afrayed. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neyghboure, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the hunger of bred, and because of the greate trouble.

D Beholde, I gather ⁊ call together all the kynges of ŷ earth which are from the vprynging, from the south, from the east and Liba-nus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue geuē them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense thē in their bosome. Thus sayeth ŷ LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare ŷ synners, and my swerde shal not cease ouer them, that shed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōsumed the foundacions of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saieþ the LORDE. I wil not spare them. Go youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all thē that synne agaynst him, and therefore deluyereþ he them vnto death and destrucciō: For now are the plagis come vpon the worlde, ⁊ ye shal remayne in thē. For God shal not deluyner you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

E Beholde, an horrible vision commeth frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpon earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afrayed: and as the wyld bores out of ŷ wod, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with thē, and shal waist the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembreþ their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearinge together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afrayed, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal fle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besege thē, and consume one of thē, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

F Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at ŷ greate starre vpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the bely, and the smoke of mā vnto ŷ Camels lytter: And there shalbe greate fearfulness and trembling vpon earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afrayed, and a tremblinge shal come vpon them.

^b Psal. 43. c. Rom. 8. c. 1 Co. 4. b.

And then shal there come greate raynes from ſouth and from the north, and parte from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal shutt them vp agayne, ⁊ the cloude which he rased vp in wrath, and the starre to cause feare towarde ſouth east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, ⁊ the greate cloudes shalbe lift vp, and ſouthern mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afrayed and the ſouthern dwell therein, and that they maye poure out ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hale and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: ſouthern all felde maye be full, and all ryuers, ⁊ they shal breake downe the cities ⁊ walles, mountaynes ⁊ hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afrayed, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heauen, and all they that be aboute her, shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia ſouthern confortest thyself also vpon the hope of Babilon, and art a worshipec of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, ⁊ hast dete ſouthern daughters in whordome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desyred to comytte whordome with the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and inuencions.

Therefore sayeth God: I wyl sende plages vpon the, wyddowhode, pouerte, honger, warres, and pestilence, to waist thy houses with destruction and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dried vp as a floure, when ſouthern heate aryseth ſouthern is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sick as a poore wife that is plaged ⁊ beate of women: so ſouthern the mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so hate the saith the LORDE? Yf thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, when thou wast drunkē: set forth the bewtye of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therefore shalt thou receaue * rewarde.

* Some rede, no rewarde.

Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORDE) euen so shal God do vnto the, and shal deluyner the in to the plage. Thy childre shal dye of hunger, ⁊ thou shalt fall thorow ſouthern swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, ⁊ all thine shal perish with the swerde in ſouthern felde. They ſouthern be in ſouthern moitynes shal dye of hunger, ⁊ eate their owne flesh, ⁊ drinke their owne bloude for very honger of bred and thyrst of water. Thou unhappie shalt come thorow the see, ⁊ receaue plages agayne.

In the passage they shal caste downe the slayne cite, ⁊ shal rote out one parte of ſouthern londe, ⁊ costume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stuble, ⁊ they shalbe thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy londe, thy wod and thy frutefull trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye captiue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and marre the bewtie of thy face.

The xvi. Chapter.

WO vnto the Babilon ⁊ Asia, wo vnto ſouthern Egipte ⁊ Syria: gyrd your selues with clothes of sack ⁊ hayre, and mourne for your childre, be sory, for your destruction is at hande. A swerde is sent vpon you, ⁊ who wil turne it back? A fyre is kyndled amonge you, ⁊ who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, ⁊ what is he that wyl dryue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hogrie lyon in the wod? Or maye eny mā quench the fyre in the stubble, when it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arrowe, ſouthern is shot of a stronge archer? The mightie LORDE sendeth the plages, ⁊ what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled ⁊ gone forth in his wrath, and what is he that wil quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, and who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shall not be afrayed? The LORDE shal threaten, and who shal not vtterly be beaten to poulder at his presence? The earth quaketh, ⁊ the foundations therof: ſouthern see aryseth up with waves from the depe, and the floudes of it are ynquyete, ⁊ the fishes therof also before the LORDE, ⁊ before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arrowes that he shuteth, are sharpe, ⁊ shall not mysse, when they begynne to be shot in to ſouthern endes of the worlde.

B Beholde, \hat{y} plagcs arc sent, τ shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, τ shall not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backward, euen so \hat{y} plagcs \hat{y} shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wyl delyuer me in those dayes? The begynnyng of sorowes τ greate mourninge: the begynnyng of deth τ greate death: the begynnyng of warres, τ the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnyng of euels, τ they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plagcs come? Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble τ anguysch are sent, as scourges for amendment. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye myndefull of \hat{y} scourges.

C Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, \hat{y} they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and euen then shal myschefe growe vpō earth, warres, deth τ greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpō earth shall perish of hōger, τ the other that escape the hunger, shal the swerde destroye: τ the deed shalbe cast out as donge, τ there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For \hat{y} earth shalbe waisted, τ the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll \hat{y} earth τ to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, τ who shal plucke thē of τ gather them? The grapes shal be ripe, τ who shal treade thē? For all places shalbe desolate of mē, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, τ two in the felde, which shall hyde thē selues in the thicke buszshes, τ in the clyffes of stones: like as whan there remayne thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly sought thorow the vynyarde.

D Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for thē \hat{y} search their houses with the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste, τ the feldes therof shall waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauallye there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no brydegromes: the women shal make lamentacion, hauynge no huszbandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shall they be destroyed, τ their huszbandes shal perish of hunger. O ye seruautes of the LORDE, heare these thinges, τ marek thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, O receaue it: beholde, the plagcs drawe nye, τ are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauaylinge woman, which after \hat{y} ix. moneth brighēt forth a sonne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre afore that the paynes come vpō hir body, τ whan the childe cōmeth to the byrth, they tary not the winclynge of an eye: Enē so shall not \hat{y} plagcs be slack to come vpon earth, τ the worlde shal mourne, τ sorowes shal come vpō it on euery syde.

E O my people, heare my worde, make you redy to the battayll: τ in all euell be euen as pylgremes vpon earth. He \hat{y} selleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: τ he \hat{y} byeth, as one that wil lese.^a Who so occupieth marchaūdies, as he that wynneth not: τ he that buyldeth, as he that shall not dwell therein: he that soweth, as one \hat{y} shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shall not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shall get no children: and they \hat{y} mary not, as the wyddowes: ^b τ therfore they \hat{y} laboure, laboure in vayne. For straungers shall reape their frutes, τ spoyle their goodes, ouer throwe their houses, τ take their childrē captiue, for in captiuyte τ hunger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies with robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houses, their possessions τ personnes? the more wil I punysh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honest woman, so shall righteousnes hate iniquyte, whan she decketh hir self, and shall accuse her to hir face, whan he cōmeth that defendeth, which shal make inquisiciō for all synne vpō earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

F Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith before the LORDE God τ his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all \hat{y} workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes τ their heres. For he spake but the worde:^a let the earth be made, ⁊ it was made: let the heauē be made, and it was made. In his worde were ŷ starres made, ⁊ he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, ⁊ the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, and what it conteyneth. He hath shut the see in the myddest of the waters, and with his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a vowe, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vpō the toppe of the mountaynes, ŷ the floudes might poure downe from ŷ stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of ŷ body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the sprete of ŷ Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath searched the groude of all the secretes of the earth.

Ⓢ He knoweth youre ymaginacions ⁊ inuē-cious, and what ye thynke whan ye synne, ⁊ wolde hyde youre synnes. Therefore hath ŷ LORDE searched and sought out all youre workes, and he shal bewraye you all. And whan youre synnes are brought forth, ye shalbe ashamed before men, and youre owne synnes shalbe youre accusers in that daye. What wil ye do? Or how will ye hyde youre synnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from youre synnes, and forget youre vnrighteous-nesses, and medle nomore with them: so shal God lede you forth, and delyuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greate multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the ydle with Idols: and they that cōsent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, ⁊ trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greate insurreccion vpon those that feare ŷ LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shall spare no man: they shall spoyle and waist such as feare the LORDE, their goodes shall they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shall it be knowne who are my chosen, ⁊ they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saieth the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil delyuer you from the same. Be not ye afraied, dispayre not, for God is youre captayne.

Who so kepeth my cōmaundementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, ⁊ let not youre vnrighteousnesses be lift vp. Wo be vnto thē that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickednesses: like as a felde is hedged in with buszshes, and the path therof couered with thornes, ŷ no man maye trauayle thorow: and so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and brent.

The ende of the fourth boke of Esdras.

The boke of Tobias.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

Of the kynred, life and godly conuersacion of Tobias.

Chap. II.

Chap. X.

Tobias father and mother lōge sore for his comynge: And Raguel seyng that he can kepe him no longer, sendeth him awaie with his wife.

Chap. XI.

They returne home, and are welcommed ioyfully. Olde Tobias hath his sight agayne. They reioyse altogether, and geue thakes vnto God.

Chap. XII.

The father and the sonne wolde fayne rewarde the angell. He wil haue nothinge: but sheweth them what he is.

Chap. XIII.

Tobias the elder prayseth God, & exorteth other mē, to be thankfull vnto him.

Chap. XIII.

Tobias beyng now olde, prophecieth the destructiō of Niniue, and the prosperous health of Israel. The sonne forsaketh the sinfull cite, as his father bad him, & goeth to his father in lawe.

The first Chapter.

TOBIAS was of the trybe and cite of Nephtali, which lyeth in the hye countrees of Galile about Naason the waye toward the west, hauynge the cite of Sephet vpon the left syde.

Though he was taken presonner in the dayes of ^aSalmanasar kynge of the Assirians, neuertheles beyng in captiuyte, he forsoke not ^y waye of trueth: In so moch that what so euer he might gett, he parted it dailie with his felowpresoners & brethren, that were of his kyured. And though he were yonger the all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself childlesly in his workes. And when all the other wente to the goldē calues, which ^aeroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Ierusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped ^ŷ LORDE God of Israel, ^afaithfully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuertes. These and soch like thinges dyd he accordinge to the lawe of God, when he was yet but yonge.

B But when he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe ^ca wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now when he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuite vnto Ninuie, what tyme as they all ate of the meates of the Héithē, he ^dkept his soule, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so much as he was myndefull of the LORDE, in all his hert, God gaue him fauoure ^e in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

C So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in prison, ^fand comforted them, and gaue them wholsome exortacions. And when he came to Rages a cite of the Medes, hauyng ^gten talctes of syluer (of ^hŷ thinges wherwith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greate company of people of his kinred, one Gabelus (which was of his owne trybe) beyng in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an handwrytinge.

After a longe season when Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thorow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of thē, as much as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.

D And when Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Iewry, ⁱ(what tyme as God punyshed him for his blasphemy) ^jand in his wrath slew many of the children of Israel, Tobias buried their bodies. ^kBut when it was tolde the kynge, he commaunded to slaye him, and toke awaye all his goodes. Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne ^land with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias agayne to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The ij. Chapter.

AFTER these thinges vpon a solempne ^mdaye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, ⁿand sayde vnto his sonne: Go ^oŷ waye ^pand bryng hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make niery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, left the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarse, toke him ^qand bare him preuely in to his house, ^rŷ when the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarse, he ate his meate with mouryng and feare, remembryng ^sŷ wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: 'youre hye feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heuyenes.

But when ^tŷ Sonne was downe, he wente his waye ^uand buried him. Then all his neighbours reproofed him, sayenge: It is not lōge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the ^vbecause of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and burist thou the deed agayne? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, ^wand buried them at mydnight.

C It happened vpō a daye, that he had buried ^xŷ deed, ^yand was weery, came home, ^zand layed him downe by the wall ^{aa}and slepte. And while he was a slepe, there fell downe vpō his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so ^{ab}ŷ he was blynde. This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his pacifce, like as of holy Iob. For in so much as he euer feared God from his youth vp, ^{ac}and kepte his commaundementes, he was not heuy against God, that the plague of blyndnes chāused vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

¶ For like as blessed Iob was had in derision of kynge, euen so was he laughed to scorne of his elders & kynsfolkes, which sayde vnto him: "where is thy hope, for f which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuked the, & spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men,^a & loke for the life, which God shal geue vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the weeiynge worke, & loke what lyuinge she coude get with the laboure of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened y she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir huszband herd it crie, he sayde: loke y it be not stolen,^d restore it agayne to the owners: for it is not lauffull for vs, to eate or to touch eny thinge of theft. Then was his wife angrie, and sayde: 'Now is thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these & such like wordes dyd she cast him in the tethe.

The iij. Chapter.

¶ THEN Tobias toke it heuely, & with teares beganne to make his prayer, sayge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all y wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgmēt.^f And now O LORDE be myndefull of me, & take no vengeance of my synnes, nether remembre my myszdedes ner y myszdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto y cōmaundemētes, therefore are we spoyled, brought in to captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scatred vs. And now O LORDE, y iudg-mentes are greate, for we haue not done acordinge to y cōmaundemētes, nether haue we walked innocētly before y . And now O LORDE, deale with me acordinge to thy wil, & cōmaunde my sprete to be receaued in peace, for more expediēt were it for me to dye, thē to lyue.

¶ At the same tyme it happened, that Sara the daughter of Raguel at Rages a cite of y Medes was slaundred of one of hir fathers handmaydes, namely, that she shulde haue had seuen huszbandes, which as soone as they were gone in vnto hir, were slayne of the deuell called Asmodeus. Therefore whan she reproued the mayden for hir faute, she answerde her, sayenge: God let vs neuer se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy huszbandes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wēte Sara in to an hye chamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drāke, but cōtynued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde delyuer her from this rebuke.

¶ Vpon the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayesd the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of oure fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgeust the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LORDE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp myne eyes. I beseke y O LORDE, lowse me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me vtterly awaye frō of y earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vnclenly lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in sporte, nether haue I made my self partaker with them that walke in lighte behaouore. Neuertheles an huszbande haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

¶ Now peradventure either I haue bene vnworthy of them, or els were they vnmete for me, for thou happily hast kepte me to another huszband. For why? y thy counsell is not in y power of man. But who so euer loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it stādeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in pacience, he shal haue a rewarde and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal delyuer him: and yf his life be in chastenyng, that he shall haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

¶ For thou hast no pleasure in oure dampnacion: & why? after a storme thou makest y wether fayre and still: after wepinge and heuynes thou geuest greate ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be prayesd for euer. At the same tyme were both their prayers herde in the sight of the magesty of the Hyst God. And Raphael the holy angel of the LORDE was sent to helpe thē both, whose prayers came together before God.

The iij. Chapter.

SO whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his soune Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye thē in thine hert as a foundacion. When God taketh away my soule, burie thou my body, & holde thy mother in honoure all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greate pearsels she suffred for y in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & bewarre, lest at any tyme thou cōsent vnto synne, and lest thou let slippe the commaundemētcs of the LORDE oure God.

Gene allmes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and so shal it come to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned away from the. Be mercifull after y power. Yf thou hast moche, geue plēteously: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good rewarde in the daye of necessite. For allmes delyuereth *frō death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darknes. A greate comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it.

My sonne, kepe the well from all whordome, and (besyde thy wife) se that no faute be knowne of the. Let neuer pryde haue rule in thy mynde ner in thy worde, for in pryde beganne all destruction.

Who so cuer worketh any thinge for the, immediatly geue him his hyre, and loke that thy hyred seruaunte wagies remayne not by the ouer night. Loke that thou neuer do vnto another man, the thinge that thou woldest not another mā shulde do vnto the. Eate thy bred with the hongrie and poore, and couer the naked with thy clothes. Set thy bred and wyne vpon the buryall of the righteous, and do not thou eate and drynke thereof with the synners. Axe euer counsell at y wyse.

^a Exo. 20. b. Eccli. 7. c. ^b Rom. 6. b. * Some reade: frō all synne & from death. 1 Tess. 4. a.

Be alwaye thankfull vnto God, and beseeke him, that he will ordre thy wayes, & that what so cuer thou deuysest or takest in hande, it maye remayne in him. I certifie the also my sonne, that (whan thou wast yet but a bab) ^aI delyuered ten talentes of syluer vnto Gabelus, at Rages a cite of the Medes, & his handwritinge haue I by me. And therefore seke some meanes, how thou mayest come by him, & receaue of him y sayde weight of syluer, and geue him his handwritinge agayne.

My sonne, be not afrayed: trueth it is, we lede here a poore life: ^abut greate good shall we haue, yf we feare God, and departe from all synne, and do well.

The v. Chapter.

THEN answered Tobias his father, & sayde: father, all that thou hast commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I shal requyre this money, I can not tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwritinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with y for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue y money, whyle I am yet lyuynge.

Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of y Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwellecth in Rages a cite of y Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egbathanis. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tary for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then wcte Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At y which his father marueled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

Now whan the angell came in, he saluted him, and sayde: ioye be with the for euermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonne to Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou comest agayne. I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: A xest thou after the kynred of an hyrelinge, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye ŷ, be not displeased, that I desyred to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waie, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So whan they had prepared all things, ŷ they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias bad his father & his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: "The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. Yf we had bene content with oure pouerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we sawe oure sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shall se him. For I trust, that ŷ good angell of God shal beare him cōpany, and ordre well all the things that he doth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of frō wepyng, & helde hir tonge.

The vi. Chapter.

SO Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and ŷ first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afraied, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORDE, he commeth vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the cheke blade, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpō the loude, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete.

The sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bowels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for medicyne. Tobias dyd so, and rosted the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as moch as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye ŷ brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: Yf thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryueth awaye all maner of euell spretes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth ŷ same shal come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anoynte or to strake ŷ eyes withall, where as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: where wilt thou that we remayne? The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good belōgeth vnto the, and thou must mary his daughter: and therefore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene married vnto seuen huszbandes, and they all are deed: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slew them. I am afraied therefore, lest such thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge thē in their age with sorow to their graues.

Then sayde ŷ angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of such a fashiō, that they shut God out from thē and from their

her, and geue them selues to their owne lust, euen as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon soch hath $\text{\textcircled{f}}$ deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, witholde thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but $\text{\textcircled{v}}$ nto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shalbe dryuē away. The secōde night shalt thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shalbe borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for any fleshly lust: that in the sede of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The viij. Chapter.

THEN wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel loked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethren? They saide: Of the trybe of Nephtali, out of the captiuyte of Ninieue. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moch good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mā's father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kyssed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Now whā they had talked together, Raguel bad kyl a wether, and to make a feast. And whā he prayed thē to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my peticion, $\text{\textcircled{r}}$ promise me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seuen men, that wēte in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in cloute, and gaue

the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belogeth thy daughter to wife, therefore might none other haue her.

The sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be maried in hir owne kynred, accordinge to the lawe of Moses. $\text{\textcircled{d}}$ And now dowte thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hāde of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abrahā, the God of Isaac and the God of Iacob be with you, ioyne you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wrytinge of the mariage. And then made they mery, and prayed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of goode cheare my daughter, the LORDE of heauen geue the ioye, for the heynesse that thou hast suffred.

The viij. Chapter.

NOW after $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ they had supped, they brought the yōge man in to her. The thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a peece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him away, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egipte. The spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Vp Sara, let vs make oure $\text{\textcircled{p}}$ rayer vnto God to daye, tomorow, and ouermorow: for these thre nightes wil we reconyle oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioyne together in $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ deuteye of mariage. For we are the children of holy men, and we maye not come together as the Heithen, $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ knowe not God.

Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of oure fathers, praysed be thou of heauē $\text{\textcircled{r}}$ earth of the see, welles, $\text{\textcircled{r}}$ floudes, $\text{\textcircled{r}}$ of all the creatures that be therein. him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for euer. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruauntes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peraduēture, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydēs, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, and brought good tydings. D Then Raguel and Anna his wife praised y LORDE, and sayde: Prayed be thou o LORDE God of Israel, For it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealte mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause thē to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offere the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, y thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruauntes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, and to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to such as wente by y waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, and meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remayne with him two wekes. As for all the good y he had, he gaue Tobias y one half of it, and made his wrytinge, that the half which remayned, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The iiij. Chapter.

A THEN Tobias called vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes: Yf I shulde geue myself to be y seruaunt, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I beseke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruauntes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Medes, and delyuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my marriage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath required me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruauntes, and two Camels, and wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytyng, and receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias y sonne of Toby, how all thinges had happened, and caused him to come with him to y marriage. Now whan he came in to the house of Raguel, he foude Tobias syttinge at y table: and he leape vp, and they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and prayed God, and sayde: the blessinge of the God of Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right verteous and iust man, and of one y feareth God, and geueth greate allmes. And blessinge haue y wife, and youre elders, that ye maye se youre children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre sede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the mariage.

The v. Chapter.

NOW whyle yōge Tobias made lōge B tarienge by reason of y marriage, his father was full of care and heynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonne tarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peraduēture Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begāne he to be very soroufull, he and Anna his wife with him, and beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appoynted. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge cowntre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comforte of oure life, "thou hope of oure generation? Seinge all þy thinges that we haue are onely in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye from vs.

Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomforted, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man þy we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles she might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, looked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cōmyuge afaire of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne i lawe: O tary here, and I shall sende a messaūger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him þy thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

So whan Raguel prayed Tobias with many wordes, ⁊ he wolde in no wyse heare him, he delyuered Sara vnto him, ⁊ the half parte of all his good: in seruantes and handmaydēs, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and brynge you forth safe ⁊ sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honoure hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir huszbande, to rule well hir huszsholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self faultlesse.

The xi. Chapter.

NOW as they were goinge homeward againe, vpon þy xj. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye toward Ninie. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therefore yf it please the, we two wyl go before, and let the husholde with thy wife and þy catell come soft ⁊ fairly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon þy toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

And whyle she was waytinge there for his cōmyuge, she looked afaire of, and anone she perceaued hir sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde hir huszbande, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth: And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou comest in to the house, immediatly worshipe the LORDE thy God, and geue thanks vnto him: then go to thy father, and kyss him, ⁊ strake his eyēs ouer with the gall of þy fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messaūger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.

So þy blynde father arose, and beganne to renne, and stombled with his fete, and gaue a seruaunt his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped ⁊ thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taried half an houre, and then beganne the blemysh to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte szkynne of an egg: which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

Then they prayed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thanks, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all þy husholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, ⁊ reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so for þy space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerichone.

The xii. Chapter.

A TH^E Tobias called his sonne vnto him ⁊ sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he droue the euell sprete from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to hir father and mother: he deluyered me, that I was not denoured of the fish, he hath made the to se the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greate good of him. How shulde we worthly deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him,
 toke him asyde, and beggan to praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them:
 Prayse y God of heauen, and geue thanks vnto him before all men luyunge, for he hath shewed his mercy * vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secreete, but to shew and to prayse y workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fasting, and to geue allmes is better, then to hoorde vp treasures of golde. For allmes deluycreth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euerlastinge life, But they that do synne and vnightousnes, are y enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherefore I tell you the trueth, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and lefdest thy dyner, and hyddest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offred thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the,
 and to deluyer Sara y sonnes wife from the euell sprete. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seuen that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afrayed, and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces

 vnto the ground. Then sayde the angell:
 Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene with you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thanks vnto him.

^d You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therefore is y tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his won-derous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes,
 he was taken awaye out of their sight, so y
 they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of three houres, and praysed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wōderous workes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

TH^E olde Tobias opened his mouth, and praysed the LORDE and sayde:
 Greate art thou o LORDE for euermore, and thy kyngdome worlde without ende: for thou scourgest and healest, thou ledest vnto hell, and bryngest out agayne, and there is none y maye escape thy hande. O geue thanks vnto y LORDE ye children of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the Heithē.
 For amonge the Heithen which knowe him not hath he scatred you, to the intēt that ye shulde shew forth his marnelous workes: ⁊ cause them for to knowe, that there is none other God almighty but he. He hath chastened vs for oure myszdedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Considre then, how he hath dealt with you, ⁊ prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euerlastinge kyng in youre workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the londe of my captiuyte, for he hath shewed his maiesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therefore O ye synners, and do righteousnes before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me ⁊ my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. O Ierusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punyshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O
 prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, ⁊

geue thanks to the euerlasting God, that he maye builde vp his tabernacle agayne in \hat{y} , that he maye call agayne vnto the, all such as be in captiuyte, and that thou mayest haue ioye for euermore. ^a With a fayre light shalt thou shyne, τ all \hat{y} endes of \hat{y} worlde shal honoure the. ^b The people shal come vnto the from farre, they shal bringe giftes, and worshipe \hat{y} LORDE in the, and thy londe shal they haue for a Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the greate name in the.

C Cursed shal they be that despyse the, τ all they that blasphemē the, shal be condēpned: but blessed shal they be, \hat{y} buylde the vp. As for the, thou shalt reioyse in \hat{y} childrē, for they all shalbe blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all \hat{y} loue \hat{y} , and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE o my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath deluyered his cite Ierusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte my self happie, yf my sede remayne to se \hat{y} cleames of Ierusalē.

The gates of Ierusalem shalbe buylded with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the cōpase of hir walles with precious stones. All hir stretes shalbe paved with whyte Marble stone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sunge. Praysed be \hat{y} LORDE, which hath exalted her, \hat{y} his kyngdome maye be vpon her for euermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkynge.

The xiiij. Chapter.

AND after that Tobias had gottē his sight agayne,^d he lyued two and xl. yeaeres, τ sawe his childers children. Now when he was an hundreth and two yeaere olde, he dyed, τ was buried honorably in Ninie. For when he was sixe and fiftie yeaeres of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was thre score yeaere olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, and departed in peace.

But in \hat{y} houre of his death he called vnto B him his some Tobias, and seuen yonge springaldes his sonnes children, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Ninie is at hande,^e for the worlde of the LORDE can not fayle, and oure brethren that are scated out of the londe of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole londe of it that hath bene waist, shalbe fylled: and the house of God that was brent in it, shalbe buylded agayne, τ all such as feare God shall returne thither: the Heithen also shal forsake their Idols, τ come to Ierusalem, and dwell there, and all the kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshipe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therefore my children, heare youre C father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness,^f seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Conmaunde youre children \hat{y} they do right, geue allmes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in trueth and with all their power. Hearre me therefore my childrē, and abyde not here: but in what daye so euer ye haue buried youre mother besyde me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wikednes of it shal brynge it to destruccion and ende.

After \hat{y} death of his mother, Tobias D departed away from Ninie, with his wife and children, and with his childers children, τ came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of thē. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fifth generacion and childers childrē. And whan he was xcix. yeaere of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynsolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued τ accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the londe.

Iudith syngeth prayse vnto the LORDE. The people come together vnto Ierusalē to geue thankes and prayse vnto the LORDE. How Iudith made hir ende.

The first Chapter.

ARPHAXAT the kyng of the Medes subdued many people vnto his domynion, & buylled a noble strōge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuentie cubites hie, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundred cubites hie. But vpon the foure corners euery syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kyng trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charettes.

So in y twelfth yeare of his raigne it happened, that Nabuchodonosor y kyng of the Assirians (which raigned in the greate cite of Ninieue) fought agaynst Arphaxat, and ouercame hi in y greate felde called Ragau, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Iadason in the felde of Erioth the kinge of the Elikes.

Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the Heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Eszdrelō, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Iordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of lesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all these dyd Nabuchodonosor the kyng of y Assirians sende messaungers. But they all with one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put thē away without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kyng toke indignaciō at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by this kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The ij. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeare of kyng Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of y first moneth, it was deuysed in the courte of Nabuchodonosor y kyng of the Assiriās, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all y elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secrete counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his domynion. Now whan they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kinge called Holofernes the chefe captayne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despysed my commaundement. ^bThou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Holofernes called together all the captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assiria, and mustred the soulyers vnto the hoost (like as the kyng commaunded him) namely, an hundredth and twetye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinance sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oxen, and small cattell, and y without nombre. He caused come to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Moch golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lamde, like the gres-hoppers.

And whan he was gone past the borders of the Assirians, he came towarde the greate mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne euery strōge holde. As for y welthy cite of Meloth, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childrē of Tharsis and the Ismaelites, which laye towarde the wyldernes and vpon the south syde of y londe of Chelon. He went ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hie cities that were there, from the broke of Mambre tyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Iaphet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so euer withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in y earth.

The iij. Chapter.

SO the kynges & prynces of all cities & londes sent their Embassitours: namely,

^a 1 Mac. 1. a.^b Eze. 9. b.

they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal ⁊ Lybia ⁊ Celicia, which came to Holofernes, ⁊ sayde: Let thy wrath cease towards us:
 It is better for vs to serue the greate kynge Nabuchodonosor with oure lyues, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessions, all mountaynes and hilles, all feldes, greate and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and houtholdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subieccion be it altogether. We oure selues also and oure children wyll be thyne owne, come vnto vs a peceable lorde, and vse oure
 seruyce at thy pleasure.

33 Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horseme ⁊ greate power, and conquered all stronge fenced cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, ⁊ such as were mete for y warre, to helpe him. There came such a feare also vpon those countrees, that the indwellers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers ⁊ the people together, wete forth to mete him as he came, ⁊ receaued him honorably with garlandes ⁊ torches, with daunses, tabrettes and pipes.

C Neuertheles though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomak:
 but he destroyed their cities, ⁊ hewed downe their woddes. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulde rote out all the goddes of the londe: to y intent that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nacions which Holofernes with his power brought vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Idumeans in the lode of Gabaa and Septopoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherin he caused all the whole multitude of his hoost to be gathered together.

The iiii. Chaptr.

24 WHAN the children of Israel y dwelt in Iewry herde this, they were sore afrayed of him. There came such tremblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed also shulde do vnto the cite of Ierusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities ⁊ their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria roude aboute vnto

Iericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared corne for them agaynst the battayll.

Eliachim also y prest wrote vnto all the that dwelt towards Eszdelon (which lyeth ouer agaynst y greate felde by Dotha Im) ⁊ vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, wherby there might be eny waye and passage to Ierusalem.
 ⁊ y they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixe y mountaynes.
 And the children of Israel dyd, as Eliachim
 the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the altuer of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one acorde cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their children shulde not be geuen in to a pray, and their wyues in to a spoyle, y their cities shulde not be layed waist, ⁊ y their Sanctuary shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the Heithen.

C Then Eliachim the hye prest of the LORDE
 wente rounde aboute all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, y the LORDE wil heare youre petitions, yf ye cō-tynue stedfast in fastinges and prayers in y sight of the LORDE. Remembre Moses the seruaunte of the LORDE, which ouer-threw y Amalechites (that trusted in their might ⁊ power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charettes ⁊ horsmen) not with weapons, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer before the LORDE: In so moch that they which offred brent sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offred
 the offringes vnto y LORDE, beyng arrayed in hayrie clothes, and had aszshes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, y he wolde vyset his people of Israel.

The v. Chaptr.

25 AND worde came to Holofernes the prynce of the warres of the Assyriis, y the

childrē of Israel prepared them selues to make resistance, ⁊ how they had stopped the wayes betwixe the mountaynes. Then was he ex-ceddinge wroth, ⁊ called all the prynces of Moab, ⁊ the captaynes of Ammon, ⁊ sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, ⁊ kepeth in the moūtaynes? Or what maner of cities are they? What is their power? Or what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their captayne? And why do they^a despyse vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to mete vs, ⁊ they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the captayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the truth before the concernynge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

B This people is of the generacion of the Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe ⁊ goddes of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, ⁊ so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddes) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a deth^b in to ⁊ whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, ⁊ there they dwelt foure hundred years, in ⁊ which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the kynge of Egipte oppressed them,^c and subdued thē in buyldinge of his cities with makynge of claye ⁊ brick, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punished the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plages.

C Now whan the kynge of Egipte let thē go their waye,^d ⁊ the plage ceased, ⁊ then folowed after thē, to take thē, ⁊ to brynge thē agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened ⁊ see, so ⁊ the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, ⁊ these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod, In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egipcians folowed vpon them, they were so ouerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell thē that came after, how it happened.

D So whan this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wilderness of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, ⁊ where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. ^eThere were ⁊ bytter waters made swete for thē, that they might drynke, ⁊ xl. yeaeres had they meate from heauē. Where so euer they wente (without bowe ⁊ arowe, without bukler or swerde) their God fought for thē, ⁊ caused thē to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, excepte it were so, ⁊ they departed vnfaithfully from ⁊ worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped^f euy other besyde their God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyled, to be slayne, ⁊ to be put to confucion. Neuertheles as oft as they were sory for departinge from the worships of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power ⁊ strēth to withstōde their enemies.

E Morouer they slew the kynge of the Cananites, Jebusites, Pherezites, Ethites, Euites ⁊ Amorites, ⁊ all ⁊ mightie in Hesebon, ⁊ toke their lōdes, ⁊ cities in possession: and so longe as they synned not in ⁊ sight of their God, it wete well with them, for their God hateth vn-righteousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of ⁊ waye,^g which God had geuen them, ⁊ they shulde walke in it, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, ⁊ many of them were caried awaye presoners into a straūge cōtre. But now lately they haue turned thē selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, ⁊ are come together agayne^h out of the countrees where they were scatred abroad: and thus haue they cōquered these mountaynes ⁊ dwell therein: ⁊ as for Ierusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it againe in possession.

F And therefore my lorde, make diligēt inquisition, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doutles their God shal deliuer them in to thy handes, ⁊ subdue them vnto ⁊ power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstande them, for their God shal defende thē,ⁱ ⁊ so shall we be a shame to all ⁊ worlde.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, ⁊ thought to slaye him, ⁊ sayde one to another: what is he this, which darre saie, ⁊ ꝑ childre of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kyng ⁊ his hoost? where as they are an vnwaped people, without strenght ⁊ vaderstodlige of ꝑ fettes of warre? That Achior therefore maye knowe, ꝑ he hath disceaned vs, we wil go vp in to ꝑ mountaynes: ⁊ when the mightie men of the are taken, he also shalbe stickte with the swerde, ꝑ all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The vi. Chapter.

SO when they had left of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, ⁊ sayde vnto Achior. For so much as thou hast prophecied vnto vs, sayenge: that the people of Israel shalbe defended of their God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yee when we slaye them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, ⁊ all Israel shal be destroyed with the, ⁊ the shalt thou fele, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. The shalt the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow thy sydes, ⁊ thou shalt fall downe stickte amonge the wounded of Israel, ⁊ shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be vtterly destroyed with the. But yf thou thinkest thy prophecy to be true, why dost thou then change thy coloure? why art thou afrayed? Thinkest thou that my wordes are not able to be perfourmed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt fele these thinges with the, beholde, from this houre forth wyl I sende the vnto yonder people, that when the punyshment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserued) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punyshed with them.

So Holofernes commaunded his seruauntes to take Achior, ⁊ to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to delyuer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruauntes toke him, ⁊ wete thorow the playne felde. But when they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the slynge casters came out agaynst them: Neuertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, ⁊ bounde Achior hand ⁊ fote to a tre, ⁊ so left him bounde with wythies, ⁊ turned agayne vnto their lorde.

Notwithstoddinge the children of Israel wente downe fro Bethulia, came vnto him, lowsed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and axed him what the matter was, that the Assiriās had left him bounde.

Osias the sonne of Micha of the trybe of Symeon, ⁊ Charmim (which is also called Gothoniel) were the pryncippall rulers at the same tyme. Now when Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, ⁊ before the all, he tolde them, what answere he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, ⁊ how Holofernes himself was wroth, ⁊ commaunded him for the same cause to be delyuered vnto ꝑ Israelites: that when he ouercame the childre of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnly tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, praysinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a generall complaynte ⁊ wepyng, ⁊ sayde: O LORDE God of heauen ⁊ earth, beholde their pryde, ⁊ loke vpon oure lowlynes, ⁊ cōside how it standeth with thy sayntes, ⁊ make it to be knowne, ꝑ thou forsake not those, which holde them fast by the, ⁊ how ꝑ thou bringest the lowe, ꝑ presume of the selues, ⁊ make their boast in their owne strength. So when the wepyng and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayge: the God of oure fathers, whose power ⁊ strength thou hast prayed, shall so rewarde the, ꝑ thou shalt rather se their destruccione. When ꝑ LORDE oure God then shall geue his seruauntes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so ꝑ if it please ꝑ, thou with thyne mayest dwell with vs.

Now when Osias had ended the councell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, ⁊ so they refrezshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The vij. Chapter.

THE next daye Holofernes commaunded his hoost, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were ^aan C. xx. thousande fightinge men on fote, τ two τ twentie thousande horsm \bar{c} , besyde the preparynge of them \bar{y} were wonne, τ came to them on euery syde out of the countrees τ cities which he had tak \bar{c} . All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyl syde, vnto the topp that loketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Behna, vnto Chelmon \bar{y} lyeth towarde Eszrelon.

Now when the childr \bar{c} of Israel sawe so greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon \bar{y} grounde, strowed aszshes vpon their heades, τ prayed with one acorde, \bar{y} the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapens, τ sat betwixte the mountaynes in \bar{y} narrow place, τ kepte the waye daye τ night. But whyle Holofernes was goinge aboute, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this cōmaunded he to be directe another waye, τ to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they vsed secretly, more for pleasure then for necessite.

Then wente the Ammonites τ the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust nether in speare ner arowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest overcome them therefore without \bar{y} strykyng of eny battayll, sett m \bar{c} to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye th \bar{c} without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wōne, for so moch as it lieth in the moū-taynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he ^bset an hundred men at euery well rounde aboute.

And when this watch had endured twentye dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, fayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in \bar{y} whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osias, and sayde all with one voyce: 'God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kynge of the Assirians, therefore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirste and greate destruction. Therefore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto \bar{y} people of Holofernes: for better it is \bar{y} we be captiue and prayse the LORDE with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughed to scorne τ shamed of euery man when we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen τ earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which puny-sheth vs according to the deserynge of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, \bar{y} ye geue vp the cite now in to \bar{y} power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

Whan they had spok \bar{c} out these wordes, there was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voyce, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, ^cwe haue done anysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou \bar{y} art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punysh oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scourge, and geue not those ouer that knowlege the, vnto a people which knoweth the not, lest they saye amonge the Heithen: 'where is their God?

And when they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tungen, Osias stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: 'O take good hertes vnto you (deare brethren) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peradventure he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The viij. Chapter.

AND it happened when these wordes came to the eares of Iudith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Idox, the sonne of Ioseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, & sonne of Iannor, the sonne of Iedeon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchia, the sonne of Euam, & sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, & sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir huszbande was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye harvest. For whyle he was byndinge & sheenes together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Iudith his desolate wyddow three yeares & six monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made herself a preuy chambre, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hir maydēs. She wore a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones & the solempne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beautyfull personne. Hyr husbande also had lefte her greate riches, a plenteous housholde, greate vnnouceable possessions and many catell. This Iudith was a woman of a very good reporte with euery one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell worde of her.

Whā this Iudith herde, how Osias had promised the people, ^athat after the fyfthe daye he wolde geue vp & cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chambri and Charmin: and when they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherin Osias hath consented, & yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempte the LORDE? This deuoyce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of & LORDE a tyme, & appoynte him a daye after youre wyl?

Neuertheles for so moch as the LORDE is pacient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouringe out teares, and besekynge him of grace. ^bFor God threateneth not as a mā, nether wyl he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therefore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a meke sprete, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs accordinge to his owne wyl and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, & brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so moch as we folowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which forsoke their God, & worshipped other goddes: for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled & brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for whose cōforte let vs tarry with mekenesse. He shall require and make ^dinquisition for oure bloude, from the vexacions of oure enemies: he shal bryng downe all the Heithen, that ryse vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, euē the LORDE oure God.

Therefore deare brethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all & people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondesth, lift vp ther hertes with youre exhortacion, & they maye call to remembrance, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, & they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remēbre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was ^eIsaac, so was Iacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were fōude stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaued not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put thē selues ^fforth with vnpaciency and murmuryng agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therefore shulde not we vndertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to considre, that all these punyshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes & myszdedes: Beleyunge also, that this correccion commeth vnto vs (as to the seruantes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruction.

Then sayde Osias & the elders vnto Iudith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no mā can reprove thy wordes. Praise thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy womā, and fearest God. And Iudith sayde vnto them: "Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and deuice, yf it be of God: and beseke God, that he wyl brynge my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I deuysed: ^bYe shal stōde this night before the porte, and I wyl go forth with Abra my maydē: Praye ye therfore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remēbre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, axe ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osias the prynee of the people of Iuda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

The ix. Chapter.

NOW whā they were gone their way, Iudith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed aszhes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my father ^cSymeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulness, and that rauyshed ^fvyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wites in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuyte, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruauutes, which bare a zele vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseke ^f. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnynge, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and deuysed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, ^τ thy iudgmentes are done in thy euerlastinge fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hoost of the ^dEgipcians, whan they beyngeweapened, persecuted thy seruauutes, ^τ put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokedest vpon their hoost, castinge a thicke darknes before them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters ouerwhelmed them.

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in ^f power and multitude of their men of warre, in their charettes, ^earowes ^τ speares, and knowe not, that thou onely art oure God, which destroyed warres from the begynnynge, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from ^f begynnynge, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, ^f they wyl vihalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waist the tabernacle of thy name, and to cast downe the horne of thine aulter with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) ^f the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and ^f thou mayest smyte him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

This shal brynge thy name an euerlastinge remēbraunce, yf the hande of a woman ^fouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondest not in ^f power of men, nether hast thou eny pleasure in the strēth of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and meke hath thy pleasure bene euernore.

O thou God of the heuens, thou maker of the waters, and LORDE of all creatures, heare me poore woman, callynge vpon the, and puttynge my trust in thy mercy. Remembre thy ^ecouenaunt O LORDE, and mynister wordes in my mouth, ^τ stablysh this deuce in my hert, that thy house maye contynue still in holynes, and that all the Heithen maye knowe and vnderstōde, that thou art God, and that there is none other but thou.

The x. Chapter.

AND whan she had left of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyeen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed ^f hayrie cloth from her, ^bput of the garmentes of hir wyddowhode, waszshed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and plated hir hayre, sett an houe vpon hir heard, and put on such apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armettes, spanges, earynges, fynger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best aray.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beautye and fayrnesse (for all this decking of hir self was not done for eny voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therefore dyd the LORDE increase hir beautye) so ŷ she was exceadinge anyable and wellfaoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bred ⁊ chese, and wente hir waye.

33 Now when she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which when they sawe her, they were astonnyed, ⁊ marueled greatly at her beautye, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of oure fathers geue ŷ his grace, and with his power perfourme all the deuce of thy hert: that Ierusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy ⁊ righteous. And all they ŷ were there, sayde with one voyce: so be it, so be it. Iudith made hir prayer vnto ŷ LORDE, ⁊ wente out at ŷ porte, she ⁊ hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spyes of ŷ Assirians met with her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of ŷ Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shalbe geuē vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scorne to yelde the selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in youre sight. Therefore haue I deuyed by my self after this maner: I wyl go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyl shew him, how he maye come by them, and wyne them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

C And whan these men had herde hir wordes, ⁊ considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent beautye) ⁊ sayde vnto her: Thou hast saued thy life by fyndinge oute this deuyce, ŷ thou woldest come downe to orre lorde: ⁊ be thou sure, that whā thou comest vnto him, he shal in-treate the well, ⁊ thou shalt please him at ŷ hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes pauillion, and tolde him of her. Now when she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome ⁊ taken with hir beautye. Then saide his seruantes: who wolde despise ŷ people of ŷ Iewes, ŷ haue so fayre wemē? Shulde we not by reason fight against thē for these? So whā Iudith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, ŷ was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragle and precious stones, she lokted fast vpō him, ⁊ fell downe vpō the earth. And Holofernes seruantes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The xi. Chapter.

34 THEN sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people, yf they had not despysed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst thē. But tell me now, what is the cause ŷ thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Iudith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after ŷ wordes of thy hād-mayden, the LORDE shall bryng thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe Iyueh, ⁊ as truly as his power Iyueh, which is in the to the punyshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the beestes also of ŷ felde. For all people speake of thy prudēt actiuyte, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commēded in all londes.

35 The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake,^a and it is wel knowne, what thou commaūdest to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl de-lyuer them ouer vnto the eneuie. And for so moch as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afrayed of the. They suffre greate hunger also, ⁊ for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Morouer, they are appointyd to slaye all their catell, that they

maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbyddē thē to touch) for corne, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these things, it is a playne case, y they must nedes be destroyed. Which when I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto y, to shew the these things. For I thy handmayden worshippe God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, when he wyl rewarde thē their synne: then shal I come and shew the, and brynge the throw the myddest of Ierusalem, so that thou shalt haue all y people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so much as one dogg barck agaynst the, for these things are shewed me by the prouydenge of God: and for so much as God is displeasid with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruautes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so much as thy promyse is good, yf thy God performe it vnto me, he shall be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The xij. Chapter.

THEN commaunded he her to go in, where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellynge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her frō his table. Iudith answered him, and sayde: "As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Yf these things that thou hast brought with the fayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Iudith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shall not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the things that I haue deuysed.

So his seruautes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appoynted. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might haue leue to go forth by night and before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wēte forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and wasshed hirself in the well water. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the deluyeraunce of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenyng.

Vpon y fourth daye it happened, y Holofernes made a costly supper vnto his seruautes, and sayde vnto Vagao his chamberlayne: Go thy waye, and counceill this Hebruesse, that she maye be wyllyng to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to seorne, that she were come from him vnmmedd withall.

Then wente Vagao vnto Iudith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afrayed, to come in to my lorde, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Iudith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lorde naye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as long as I lyue.

So she stode vp, and deckte hirself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moned, so that he brent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sytt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Iudith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, than euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the things that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery with her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A NOW whan it was late in the night, his seruantes made haist, euery mā to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber doores, and wente his waye, for they were all ouerladen with wyne.^a So was Iudith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkenness fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Iudith hir mayden, to stōde without before the dore, and to wayte. And Iudith stode before the bed, makinge her prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strength me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Ierusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye performe the thinge, which I haue deuysed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

B And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lowsed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie loekes of his heade, and sayde: Strength me o LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the necke, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and deluyered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Iudith cried afaire of vnto ŷ watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle ⁊ greate, yonge ⁊ olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir enerichone: but she wente vp in to an hye place, and caused sylence to be proclaimed.

C Whan euery man now helde his tonge, Iudith sayde: O prayse the LORDE oure God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath performed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it then, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assiriās, and this is the canapy, wherin he laye in his dronkenness: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE Iyueth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remainyng there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynges of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: ⁊ ŷ with greate victory, so that I am escaped, and ye deluyered. O geue thanks vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.^b

So they praysed the LORDE altogether, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought oure enemies to naught.

And Ozias ŷ chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all wemen vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded ŷ a right to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shall neuer come out of the mouth of mē, which shal all waye remembre ŷ power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguysh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God oure LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amē, Anen.

Achior also was called, ⁊ he came. Then sayde Iudith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whō thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be auenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande smyttē of the head of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest see that it so is, beholde, this is ŷ heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened \hat{y} with destruction, sayenge: "whan the people of Israel is takē, I shall cause the also to be stiecke with the swerde. Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguish τ feare, so \hat{y} he swnowned withall. But after that he was come agayne to himself, he fell downe before her τ prayed her, sayēge: Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Iacob: for all the people that heare of thy name, shall praise the God of Israel because of the.

The xiiij. Chapter.

IUDITH saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Styck vp this heade vpon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take euery man his weapen, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go besyde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyes in the tētes se this, they shall of necessity be cōpelled to fle baewarde, and to rayse vp their captayne to the battyll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes paution, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fearfulness shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceaue that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal delyuer them vnto you, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seyng the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his Heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterie vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they stiecke vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapen, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyes sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tēt, came before his chamber, and made a greate ruzzhing to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him. For there durst not one of the Assirians knocke, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynees and all the chefe in the kyngde of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes, ⁶ and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Iudith.

But whā he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceaue no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltred in his bloude vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Iudiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womā of \hat{y} Iewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame.

For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpō them, so \hat{y} theyr myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an exceedyng greate crye in the whole hoost.

The xv. Chapter.

NOW whan all the hoost herde that Holofernes was headed, their mynde and counsell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vudertoke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, left all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapens, and so they fled by the wayes of the feldes, and thorow all the fote pathes of the dales.

And whan \hat{y} children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wente downe with trōpettes, blowinge and makyng a greate crie after thē. As for the Assirians, they had no ordre, and kepte not thē selues together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordre, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messangers vnto all the cities and cōtrees of Israel.

So all the regions and euery cite sent out

their best men after them in harness, & smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to y^e vttemost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia came in to the tetes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch things as had bene theirs: there was no nōbre of the catell, and of all costly Iewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Ioachim the Hye prest at Ierusalē, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Iudith.

Now when she came out vnto them, they beganne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshipec of the cite of Ierusalē, thou ioye of Israel, thou honoure of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued clenlynes and chastyte, & hast knowne no man but thine owne huszbande: therefore hath the hāde of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for euer. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyles of the Assirians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornamentes) they gaue it vnto Iudith. And all the people reioysed, both wemen, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The xvi. Chapter.

THEN sange Iudith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O syng vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuyng, be ioyfull and call vpon his name. ^a It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might delyuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, ^b and their horses couered the valleys.

He purposed to haue brēt vp my londe, and to slaye my yonge men with the swerde.

He wolde haue caryed away my children and virgins in to captiuyte, but the almighty LORDE hurte him, and delyuered him in to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confucion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue the greate giauntes sett them sclues agaynst him: but Iudith the daughter of Merari with hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. ^e For she layed awaie hir widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an houe, to beglye him. Hir slippers rauyshed his eyes, hir bewtye captiuated his mynde, ^f with the swerde smote she of his neck. The Persians were astonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of y^e Assirians, whan my symple appeared, drye of thyrst. The sonnes of the daughters haue pearsed them thorow, and slayne them as fugityue childrē: they perysched in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let us syng a songe of thākesgeuyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we syng vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shulde serue the, ^g for thou spakest but the worde, & they were made: thou sente thy sprete, & they were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundacions with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like waxe. But they that feare the, shal be greate with y^e in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp against my generacion, for the almighty LORDE wyl auenge him self of them, & in the daye of iudgmēt wyl he vyset them. For he shall geue fyre & wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and fele it for euermore.

After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Ierusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promysed offerynges.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Iudith was in greate reputacion at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so ȳ after hir huszbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worshipe. She dwelt in hir huszbandes house an hundreth and fyue yeare, ⁊ left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried besyde hir huszbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. ^b So longe as she lyued, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherin this victory was gotten, was solelymly holden, and rekened of the Iewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Iewes euer sence, vnto this daye.

The xi. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is described the dreame of Mardocheus.

MARDOCHEUS the sonne of Iair, the sonne of Semei, ^a ȳ sonne of Cisei of ȳ trybe of Ben Ianin a Iew: which had his dwellinge in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, ⁊ excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges courte (Neuerthelesse he was one of the presoners, whom ^b Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilō had caried awaye from Ierusalem vnto Babilon with Iechonias the kyng of Iuda.) In the seconde yeare of the raigne of greate Artaxerses in the first daye of ȳ moneth Nisan. had this Mardocheus soch a dreame: He thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, ⁊ greate vprour in ȳ londe: ⁊ ȳ he sawe two greate dragōs, ready to fight one agaist another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all Heithen were vp, to fight agaynst ȳ righteous people. And ȳ same daye was full of darcknes ⁊ very vnclaire, full of trouble ⁊ anguysh, yee a greate fearfulness was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared ȳ plage ⁊ euell ȳ was deuysed ouer thē, ⁊ were at a poynte with them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greate ryuer ⁊ in to many waters. And with ȳ it was daye, ⁊ the sonne rose vp agayne. And ȳ lowly were exalted, and deuoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desyred to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntyll the night.

The xij. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus vttereth the treason of the two scravauntes agaynst the kynge, and therefore doth the kynge rewarde him.

AT the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell ^ahandes vpon the kynge Artaxerses: and so he certified the kinge therof. Then caused the kynge to examen ^b̄ two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

BThis the kynge caused to be put in ^b̄ Cronicles for an euerlasting remembraūce, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kynge commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the courte, and for this faithfulness of his, he gaue him a rewarde. But Aman the soune of Amadathu the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges courte, vnder-toke to hurte Mardocheus ^ā his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The xiiij. Chapter

The copie of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses (by the entisinge of Amā) sent out in to all countres, for the destruction of the Iewes. The prayer of Mardocheus.

THE greate kynge Artaxerses which ^araigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and seuen and twētye londes, sendeth his frendly salutacion vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltie and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed with equyte allwaye and gentylnes, to gouerne those that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholy to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to brynge my kingdome vnto tranqylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my councelers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellēt in wysdome, whose good wyll, trueth ^ā faithfulness hath oft bene shewed ^ā proued (which was also ^b̄ pryncipall ^ā next vnto ^b̄ kinge) Amā by name, which certified vs, how ^b̄ in all lōdes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, ^b̄ made statutes ^ā lawes agaynst all other people, ^ā haue allwaye despysed the proclaimed commaundementes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde contynue by you ^ā not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceaued the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, ^ā withstonde oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure kyngdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therefore haue we commaunded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordered and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wyues ^ā children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: ^ā ^b̄ there shalbe no mercy shewed, ^ā no man spared. And this shalbe done ^b̄ xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar) of this yeare, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intēt that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranqylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the workes and noble actes of ^b̄ LORDE, ^ā made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE, LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmightie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and deluyer Israel, there is no mā that can withstōde ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen ^ā earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, ^b̄ can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was nether of malyce, ner presumption, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipe yonder proude presumptuous man (for I wolde haue bene cōtent, and ^b̄ with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel eny good, to haue kyst euē his fotesteppes) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not sett the honour of a mā in the steade of the glorye of God, and because I wolde worshippe none but onely ſ my LORDE. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

And therefore O LORDE thou God and kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they ymagyn how they maye bringe vs to naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine inheritance of olde. O despyse not thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered & brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto thy people, whō thou hast chosen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyeue O LORDE, and prayse thy name. O LORDE, suffre not ſ mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All ſ people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORDE, for their death and destruction stode before their eyes.

The xiiij. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

QUEENE Hester also beyng in the battayll of death, resorted vnto the LORDE, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmētes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the steade of precious oymntment, she scatred ashes and dōge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe, All the places where she was wōte to haue ioye afore, those fylled she with ſ hayre, ſ she plucte out herself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but ſ, for my misery and destruction is harde at my hande. Fro my youth vp I haue herde out of the kyured of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amōge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritance, and loke what thou didest promise thē, thou hast made it good vnto thē.

Now well LORDE, we haue synned before the, therefore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Neuertheles it satisfieth thē not, that we are in bytter and heuy captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed thy hondes vpon the hondes of thy goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordered and appointed: to destroye thine inheritance, to shut and to stoppe ſ mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshippe of thy house and thine aulter, and to open the mouthes of the Heithen, ſ they maye prayse the power & vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshy kynge for euer.

O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto thē that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorne in oure misery and fall: but turne their deuyce vpō them selues, and punysh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Thinke vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in ſ tyme of oure distres and of oure trouble. Strength me O thou kynge of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquēt and pleasaunt speach in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to ſ hate of oure enemie, to destroye him, and all such as consent vnto him. But deluyer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely ſ. LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshippe of the vnrighthouse, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncireūcyded and of all Heithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, ſ I hate the token of my preenyuence & worshippe, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, & that I abhorre it as an vncleane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyete and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amās table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynkofferinges, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens ſ daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but onely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboute all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and delyuere vs out of the hande of ȳ wicked, ⁊ delyuere me out of my feare.

The rb. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

AND vpon ȳ thirde daye it happened, that Hester^a layed away ȳ mournynge garmentes, and put on hir glorious apparell, and dected hirself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder ⁊ Sauoure of all thinges) toke two maydes with her: vpon the one she leaned hir self, as one ȳ was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose coloured. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amiable, but hir hert was soroufull for greate feare. She wente in thorow all the dores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly araye, all of golde, and sett with precious stones, and he was very terrible. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and loked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leaned hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

Neuertheles God turned ȳ kynges mynde, that he was gentle,^b that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, ⁊ helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her louynge wordes also, ⁊ sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am thy brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. The sayde she: I sawe the^c (O lorde) as an angell of God, ⁊ my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of anyte. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was afraied, and all his seruauntes comforted her.

The rbi. Chapter.

A cople of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Iewes.

THE greate kynge Artaxerses, which raigneth frō India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces ⁊ rulers of the same londes, such as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondrye friendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshippe, be euer ȳ more proude and hye mynded, and vndertake not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plenteous benefites maye they not suffre, and begynne to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnthankfulnes awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumpcion (as they that be vnnyndefull and vnthakfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, ȳ seyth all thinges, which (iudgment) hateth ⁊ punysheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, ȳ they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are comytted to be handled, waxe proude, and defyle thē selues with sheddynge of innocent bloude, which bryngeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceatfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceaue and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search therafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vnhonest, and noysome thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and therby to beware in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyete ⁊ peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a change: and as for ȳ thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu ȳ Macedonyan^d (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amōge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the friendshipe that we bear towards all people, so that he was called our father, and had in hie honoure of euery man, as the next and princypall vnto the kyng, he coude not forbear him self from his pryde, hath vndertaken not onely to robbe vs of the kyngdome, but of oure life.

With manyfolde disceate also hath he desyred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of oure kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had takē them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto thē of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Iewes (which were accused of ſ wicked, ſ they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable ⁊ right lawes, and that they be the children of the most Hye Iyuyng God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherfore, as for the letters and cōmaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effecte: for he that set them vp and inuented thē, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deseruyng.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp the copy of this letter in all places, that the Iewes maye frely and without hinderance holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpo ſ xiiij. daye of ſ xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguysch and trouble wolde haue oppressed thē. For the God that gouerneth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye wherin ſ chosen people shulde haue perished.

Morouer, amōge the hie solempne dayes that ye haue, ye shall holde this daye also with all gladnesse: that now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraūce to good, for all such as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruccion to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lōdes that do not this, shal horribly perish and be destroyed with the swerde and fyre, and shall not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of ſ wilde beastes ⁊ foules.

The booke of Wysdome.

What this booke conteyneth.

Chap. I.

An exortaciō for iudges and rulers to loue wysdome. The sprete of wysdome hateth falsede, dissimulacion and Ypocrysie, rebuketh vnrighteousnesse and abhorreth wicked doers.

Chap. II.

The ymaginaciōs and thoughtes of the vngodly, how they geete the selues ouer vnto synne, and persecute all vertue and trueth.

Chap. III.

The felicity and health of godly people, though they be put here to trouble and heynesse: Agayne, what sorow shall happen to the vngodly and their children.

Chap. IIII.

To lyue chaist & godly withall, is cōmendable. A disprays of the wicked. The honoure of verteous age. The shamefull death of the vngodly.

Of the greate darcknesse in Egipte, and myndnesse of the vngodly.

Chap. XVIII.

How God destroyed the firstborne of Egipte. Gods people eate the easter lambe ioyfully, the Egiptians mourne. God punysheth the synners in the wildernesse. Moses intreateth for the people.

Chap. XIX.

Like as the wicked are euer synnyng more and more, so doth the wrath of God neuer cease, tyll they be destroyed. Of them that were punyshed in the tyme of Loth.

The first Chapter.

A O SET youre affection vpon wysdome, ye that be iudges of the earth.^a Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, and seeke him in the synghenesse of hert. ^b For he will be fonde of them that tempte him not, and appeareth vnto such as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be allowed,) reformeth yf vnwyse. And why? wysdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fayned nourtoure, and withdraweth himself fro yf thoughtes that are without vnderstandinge: and where wickednes hath the vpper hãde, he fleth from thence. ^c For the sprete of wysdome is louynge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witness of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. ^d For the sprete of yf LORDE fylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and yf same that vpboldeth all thinges, hath knowlege also of the voyce.

B Therefore he that speaketh vnrightheous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgment of reprove. And why? inquisicion shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shalbe punished. For the care of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudgings shal not be hydd. Therefore beware of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slauder. ^e For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

C ^f O seeke not youre owne death in yf erreure of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre owne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destructione of the luyngge. For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyuge: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue health, that there shulde be no destruction in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for rightheousnesse is euerlastinge and immortall, but vnrightheousnes bringeth death.) Neuerthelesse, the vngodly call her vnto them both with wordes and workes, and wyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The ij. Chapter.

FOR yf vngodly talke and ymagin thus amonge them selues (but not right:) ^g The tyme of oure life is but short and tedious. and when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man yf turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, and we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrels, and yf wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for oure body, it shalbe very aszshes yf are quēched, and oure soule shal vanish as yf soft ayre. Oure life shall passe awaye as yf trace of a cloude, and come to naught as yf myst yf is dryuē awaye with the beames of yf Sonne, and put downe with the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle and litle, and no man shal haue oure workes in remembraunce.

For oure tyme is a very shadow yf passeth awaye, and after oure ende there is no returnynge, for it is fast sealed, so yf no mā cōmeth agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye yf pleasures yf there are, and let vs soone vse yf creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues with good wyne and oylment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne oure selues with roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but oure lust shal go thorow it. Let euery one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leaue some token of oure pleasure in euery place, for yf is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppress the poore rightheous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regarde yf heades yf are gray for age. Let yf lawe of vnrightheousnesse be oure auctorite, for yf thinge yf is feble is nothinge worth. Therefore let vs defraude the rightheous, and why? he is not for oure profit, yee he is cleane cōtrary to oure doinges. He checketh vs for offendinge agaynst yf lawe, and slaundreth vs as transgressours of all nurtoure. He maketh his boast to haue \hat{y} knowlege of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of our thoughtes: ^o It greueth vs also to loke vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He counteth vs but vayne personnes, he withdraweth him self from oure wayes as from fylthyues: he comendeth greatly \hat{y} latter ende of the iust, τ maketh his boast \hat{y} God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be \hat{y} true sonne of God, ^b he will receaue him τ delyuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitefull rebuke and tormentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite τ proue his pacience. ^c Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Such thinges do the vngodly ymagyn. τ go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath bynded them. As for the misteries of God, they vnderstonde them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousnesse, ner regarde the worshippe that holy soules shal haue. For God created man to be vndestroied, yee ^d after the ymage of his awne lickenesse made he him. ^e Neuertheless thorow enyve of the deuell came death in to the worlde, ^f and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The iij. Chapter.

BUT the soules of \hat{y} righteous are in \hat{y} \hat{y} hande of God, ^g τ \hat{y} payne of death shal not touch thē. ^h In \hat{y} sight of \hat{y} vnwyse they appeare to dye, τ their ende is takē for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vtter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffre payne before men, ⁱ yet is their hope full of immortalite. They are punished but in few thinges, neuertheless in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, τ fyndeth thē mete for himself: yee as the golde in the furnace doth he trye them, τ receaueth them as a brentofferinge, and when \hat{y} tyme commeth they shalbe loked vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes \hat{y} renne thorow the rede buszshe. ^k They shal iudge the nacions, τ haue dominion ouer \hat{y} people, τ their LORDE shal raigne for euer. They \hat{y} put their trust in him, shal vnderstonde the trueth, and such as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in loue: for his chosen shal haue giftes τ peace. ^l But the vngodly shalbe punyshed accordinge to their awne ymaginacions, for they haue despyed the righteous, τ forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyeth wysdome τ nurtoure, he is vnhappye, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutefull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vndiscrete, and their childrē most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather \hat{y} baren τ vndefyled, which hath not knowen the synfull bedd: she shal haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is \hat{y} gelded, ^m which with his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be geuen \hat{y} speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in \hat{y} temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour, τ the rote of wysdome shall neuer fade awaye. As for \hat{y} childrē of aduouters, they shal come to an ende τ the sede of an vrighteous bedd shal be rote out. And though they lyue lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, τ their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spoken to in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous.

The iij. Chapter.

OHOW fayre is a chaist generacion with vertue? The memoriall therof is immortal, for it is knowne with God and men. When it is present, mē take exāple thereat: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned τ holden in honoure, τ wynneth \hat{y} rewarde of the vndefyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly childrē is vnprofitable, and the thinges \hat{y} are planted with whordome, shal take no depe rote, ner laye eny fast foundation, ⁿ Though they be grene in the branches for a tyme, yet shal they be shakē with the wynde: for they stonde not fast, τ thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roteo out. For the vnparfecte braunches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee mete for nothinge. And why? all the children ȳ are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wickednesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken with death, yet shal he be in rest.

B Age is an honorable thinge: neuertheles it stondesth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vnderfyled life is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amōge synners, he trāslated him. Yee sodclly was he taken awaye, to the intent ȳ wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstōdinge, & ȳ yporisyse shulde not begyle his soule. For ȳ craftie bewitching of lyes make good thinges darck, ȳ vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptuous desyre, turne asyde ȳ vnderstōdinge of ȳ symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therefore haisted he to take him awaye frō amonge ȳ wicked. This the people se, & vnderstonde it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how ȳ ȳ louynge fauoure & mercy of God is vpō his saintes, & ȳ he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

C Thus ȳ righteous ȳ is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are luyng: & ȳ youth ȳ is soone brought to an ende, ȳ lōge life of ȳ vnrigheteous. For they se ȳ ende of ȳ wyse, but they vnderstōde not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore ȳ LORDE hath taken him a waie. And why? they se him & despise him, therefore shall God also laugh thē to scorne: So ȳ they thē selues shal dye here after (but without honoure) yee in shame amonge ȳ deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those ȳ be puft vp, & remoue thē frō ȳ fundacions, so ȳ they shalbe laied waist vnto the huest. They shal mourne, and their memoriall shall perishe. So they beyng afraied shall remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye thē.

The b. Chapter.

A THEN shal ȳ righteous stonde in greate stedfastnesse agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely with thē, & takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed with horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of ȳ sodane health: groynge for very distresse of mynde, & shall saye within them selues (hauynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguys of mynde):

These are they, whom we soontyme had in derision, & iested vpō. We foolles thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be without honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therefore we haue erred from the waye of trueth, ȳ light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sone of vnderstōdinge rose not vp vpō vs. We haue weered oure selues in ȳ waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath oure pryde done vnto vs? B Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger remynge before: as a shippe ȳ passeth ouer the wawes of the water, which when it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, nether ȳ path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde ȳ flyeth thorow ȳ ayre, & no man can se eny token where she is flowne, but only heareth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemēce of hir goynge, & flyeth on shakyng hir wynges, where as afterwarde no tokē of hir waye can be foude. Or like as whē an arowe is shott at a marck, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cōmeth together agayne, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

Such wordes shal they that haue synned, C speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like a drye thistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye with the wynde: like as thynne scomme ȳ is scatred abrode with the storme: like as ȳ smoke which is dispersed here & there with the wynde, & as ȳ remembrance of a straūger ȳ tarieth for a daie, & thē departeth.

But ȳ righteous shal lyue for euermore:

their rewarde also is with the LORDE, ⁊ their remembrance with the Hyest. Therefore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome ⁊ a beutifull crowne of the LORDES bande: for with his right hande shal he coner thē, ⁊ with his owne arme shall he defende thē. His gelousy also shal take awaye the harnesse, and he shal wapē ŷ creature to be auēged of ŷ enemies. He shal put on "righteousnes for a brest plate, ⁊ take sure iudgment in steade of an helmet. The invincible shyld of equite shall he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpē for a speare, ⁊ the whole compase of the worlde shall fight with him agaynst the vnywye.

Ⓓ Thē shal the thunder boltes go out of ŷ lighteninges, ⁊ come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place apoynted: out of the hard stony indignacion there shall fall thick hailes, ⁊ ŷ water of ŷ see shal be wroth agaynst thē, ⁊ the floudes shal renne roughly together. Yee a mightie wynde shal stōde vp agaynst them, ⁊ a storme shall scatter thē abroad. Thus the vnrighteous dealinge of thē shal bringe all the lōde to a wyldernes, ⁊ wickednes shall ouerthrowe the dwellinges of the mightie.

The vi. Chapter.

Ⓐ WYSZDOME is better then strength,^b ⁊ a mā of vnderstādinge is more worth thē one ŷ strōge. Heare therefore (O ye kinges) ⁊ vnderstonde: O lerne ye ŷ be iudges of the endes of the earth. Geue eare ye ŷ rule ŷ multitudes, ⁊ delite in moch people. For the power is geuē you of the LORDE,^c ⁊ the strēth from the Hyest: which shal trie youre workes and search out youre ymaginaciōs: How that ye beyng officers of his kyngdome, haue not executed true iudgment, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousness, ner walked after his will. Horribly ⁊ that right soone shall he appeare vnto you: for an harde iudgmēt shal they haue ŷ beare rule. Mercy is graūted vnto the symple,^d but they that be in auctorite shalbe sore punyshed. For God which is LORDE ouer all, shall excepte no mā persone, nether shal he stande in awe of eny mans greatnesse: for he hath made ŷ small and greate, ⁊ careth for all alyke. But the mightie shal haue ŷ sorer punyshmēt.

Vnto you therefore (o ye kinges) do I speake, ŷ ye maye lerne wyszdomē and not go anysse:

for they ŷ kepe righteousness shalbe righteously iudged: and they ŷ are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answeare. Wherefore set youre lust vpon my wordes, ⁊ loue thē, so shal ye come by nourtoure. Wyszdome is a noble thinge, ⁊ neuer faydeth awaie: yee she is easely seue of thē that loue her, ⁊ founde of such as seke her. She preuēteth them ŷ desyre her, ŷ she maye first shewe herself vnto thē. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greate trauaile, for he shal fynde her syttinge ready at his dores. To thinke vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: ⁊ who so watcheth for her, shalbe safe, ⁊ that soone. For she goeth aboute, sekyng such as are mete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, ⁊ meteth them with all diligēce. For ŷ vnfained desyre of reformacion is hir begynnyng: to care for nourtoure is loue, and loue is the kepinge of hir lawes. Now the kepinge of ŷ lawes is perfeccion ⁊ an vn corrupte life, ⁊ an vn corrupte life maketh a man familar with God. And so the desyre of wyszdomē ledeth to ŷ kyngdome euerlastinge. If youre delyte be thē in royall seates ⁊ cepters (o ye kynes of the people) set youre lust vpō wyszdomē, ŷ ye maye raighe for euer more. O loue the light of wyszdomē, all ye ŷ be rulers of the people. As for wyszdomē, what she is, and how she came vp, I wil tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from ŷ begynnyng of the natiuyte, and bryng the knowlege of her in to light, and wil not kepe back the truth. Nether will I haue to do with cōsumyngē envye, for such a man shal not be partaker of wyszdomē. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kyngē is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourtoure then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good.

The viij. Chapter.

Ⓐ MYSELF also am a mortall man, like as all other, ⁊ am come of ŷ earthy generaciō of him ŷ was first made, ⁊ in my mothers wōbe^e was I fashioned to be flesh: In the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in blonde thorow the sede of man, ⁊ the cōmodious appetite of slepe. Whan I was borne, I receaued like ayre as other men, τ fell vpon the earth (which is my nature) crienge τ wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrapped in swadlinge clothes, τ brought vp with greate cares. For there is no kinge ŷ hath had eny other begynnyng of byrth.^a All men then haue one intrauence vnto life, τ one goinge out in like maner.

B Wherefore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geue me: I called, τ the sprete of wysz-dome came in to me. I set more by her thē by kingdomes τ royall seates, τ counted riches nothinge in cōparison of her.^b As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, τ syluer shal be counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboute wel fare τ beutie, τ purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched.^c All good thinges came to me with her, τ innumerable riches thorow hir hādes. I was glad in thē all, for this wysz-dome wēte before me, τ I knew not ŷ she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaynedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, τ hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue τ frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the giftes of wysz-dome.

C God hath graunted me to talke wysely, τ conueniēty to hādle the thinges ŷ he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, ŷ ledeth vnto wysz-dome, τ teacheth to vse wysz-dome aright.^d In his hāde are we τ oure wordes: yee all oure wysz-dome, oure vnderstandinge τ knowlege of all oure workes. For he hath geue me ŷ true scēce of these thinges: so that I knowe how ŷ world was made, τ the powers of ŷ elemētes: ŷ begynnyng, endinge τ myd-dest of ŷ tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: ŷ course of the yeaere: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures τ kindes of beastes: the furiousnesse of beastes: the power of ŷ wyndes: the ymaginacions of mē: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, τ all soch thinges as are secrete τ not loked for, hane I lerned. For the work-master of all thinges hath taught me wysz-dome. In hir is ŷ sprete of vnderstādinge, which is holy, manifolde, one onely, sotyll, courteous, discrete, quyk, vndefyled, playne, swete, louyng the thinge ŷ is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth not to do well, gētle, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: hauyng all vertues, eir-cūspete in allthinges: receauinge all spretes of vnderstādinge beige cleane τ sharpe. For wisz-dome is nember thē all nēbble thiges: she goeth thorow τ attayneth to all thiges, because of hir clenues. For she is ŷ breth of ŷ power of God, τ a pure cleane expressinge of ŷ clearnes of Allmightie God. Therefore can no vndefyled thinge come in to her: for she is ŷ bryghtnes of ŷ euerlastige light, ŷ vndefiled myrroure of ŷ maiesty of God, τ ŷ ymage of his goodness. And for so much as she is one, she maie do all thinges: τ beinge stedfast herself she renueth all, τ amōge ŷ people cōveyeth she herself in to ŷ holy soules. She maketh Gods freundes τ prophetes: for God loueth no mā, but him in who wysz-dome dwelleth. For she is more beautifull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starres, and the daye is not to be cōpared vnto her: for vpo ŷ daye cōmeth night. But wickednesse can not ouercome wysz-dome, and foolishnes maye not be with her.

The viij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME reacheth frō one ende to another mightily, τ louigly doth she ordre all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her euē fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligēce to mary my self with her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutie. Who so hath ŷ cōpany of God, cōmēdeth hir nobilitye, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is ŷ scolemastresse of ŷ nurtoure of God, τ ŷ choser out of his workes. Yf a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wisz-dome, ŷ worketh all thiges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstādinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, ŷ worketh more thē wysz-dome? Yf a man loue vertue τ righteousnes, let him labour for wysz-dome, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes τ prudence, righteousnes τ strēgth, which are soch thinges as mē can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. Yf a mā desyre moch knowlege, she cā tell ŷ thinges ŷ are past, τ discernie thinges for to come: she knoweth ŷ sotilities of wordes, τ cā expōide darke sentēces. She can tell of tokēs τ wōderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, τ the endes of all tymes ⁊ ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cōpany, ⁊ comō lougly with her: no doute she shal geue me good counsell, ⁊ speake cōfortably vnto me in my carefulness ⁊ grefe. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amōge the comōs ⁊ lordes of ȳ counceill. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so ȳ I shal be maruelous in ȳ sight of greate mē, ⁊ ȳ faces of prynces shal wōder at me. Whā I holde my tōge, they shal byde my leysure:^a whā I speake, they shal loke vpō me: ⁊ yf I talke moeh, they shal laye their handes vpō their mouth. Morouer, by the meanes of her I shal optayne immortallite, and leaue behinde me an euerlastyng memoriall, amōge thē ȳ come after me. I shal set ȳ people in ordre, and the naecions shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrauntes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amōge the multitude I shal be counted good, ⁊ mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest with her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, ⁊ hir felashipe hath no tediousnesse, but myrth ⁊ ioye.

¶ Now whan I cōsidered these thynges by myself, ⁊ pondered them in my hert, how ȳ to be ioyned vnto wyszdome is immortallite, ⁊ greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how ȳ in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company with her shalbe wyse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute sekyng, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grewe to more vnderstādyng, I came to an vndefyled body. Neuertheless whan I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (⁊ ȳ was a poynte of wyszdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The ix. Chapter.

¶ O GOD of my fathers, ⁊ LORDE of mercies, (thou ȳ hast made^b all thynges with thy worde, ⁊ ordeyned mā thorow thy wyszdome, ȳ he shulde haue dominio ouer ȳ creature, which thou hast made: ȳ he shulde ordre ȳ worlde acordinge to equite ⁊ righteousness, ⁊ execute iudgmēt with a true hert) geue me wyszdome, which is euer aboute thy seate, ⁊ put me not out frō amōge thy children: for I thy seruauant ⁊ sounne of thy handmayden,^c am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yōge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and ȳ lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amōge the children of men, yet yf thy wyszdome be not with him, he shal be nothyng regarded. ^dBut thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto thy people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

Thou hast cōmaunded me to buylde a temple vpon thy holy mount, ⁊ an altur in the cite wherin thou dwellest: a lieknesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared frō the begynnyng, and thy wyszdome with ȳ, which knoweth thy workes:^e which also was with ȳ whan thou maydest ȳ worlde, ⁊ knew what was acceptable in thy sight, ⁊ right in thy commaundementes. O sende her out of thy holy heauens and from the trone of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, ⁊ labour with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in thy sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thynges: and she shal lede me soberly in my workes, and preserue me in hir power. So shal my workes be acceptable, ⁊ then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, ⁊ be worthy to syt in my fathers seate. ^fFor what man is he, that maye knowe the counceill of God? Or, who can thinke what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, ⁊ oure forecastes are but vncertaine. ^gAnd why? a mortall and corruptible body is heuy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the vnderstandinge ȳ museth vpon many thynges. Very hardly can we discern the thynges that are vpon earth, and greate labour haue we, or we can fynde the thynges which are before oure eyes: Who will then seke out the grōnde of the thynges that are done in heauē? Oh LORDE, who eā haue knowlege of thy vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wyszdome and sende thy holy goost frō aboue? that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: ȳ men maye lerne ȳ thynges that are pleasaunt vnto the, and be preserued thorow wyszdome.

The r. Chapter.

WYSZDOME preserued \hat{y} first mā, whō God made^a a father of the worlde, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the mould of \hat{y} earth, τ gaue him power to rule all thinges. When the vrighteous wente awaye in his wrath from this wyszdome, \hat{y} brotherheade perished^b thorow \hat{y} wrath of murthur. Agayne, whā \hat{y} water^c destroyed \hat{y} whole worlde, wyszdome preserued the righteous thorow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Morouer whā wickednes had gotten \hat{y} vpperhande, so \hat{y} the nacions were putt vp with pryde,^d she knewe \hat{y} righteous, preserued him faultlesse vnto God, and layed vp sure mercy for his children. ^eShe preserued the righteous, whan he fled from the vngodly \hat{y} perished, what tyme as \hat{y} fyre fell downe vpon \hat{y} v. cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfrutefull waist and smokinge lōde geueth testimony of their wickednesse: yee the vnripe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a tokē of a remembraunce of the vnfaithfull soule, there standeth a piler of salt. For all such as regarded not wyszdome, gat not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto mē, a memoriall of their foolishnes: so \hat{y} in the thinges wherin they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for such as take hede vnto wyszdome, she shal deluyer them from sorowe.

Whan the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, \hat{y} wyszdome led him the right waye, shewed him \hat{y} kyngdome of God, gaue him knowlege of holy thinges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. In \hat{y} disceatfulnes of such as defrauded him, she stode by him, τ made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from \hat{y} disceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, \hat{y} he might knowe, how that wyszdome is stronger then all thinges. ^fWhan the righteous was solde, she forsoke him not, but deluyered him frō synners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and fayled him not in the bandes: ^gtyll she had brought him the cepter of \hat{y} realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyers, τ brought him to perpetuall worships.

She deluyered the righteous people and faultlesse sedē, ^hfrom thenacions that oppressed them. She entred in to the soule of the seruauant of God, and stode by him in wonders and tokens agaynst the horrible kyngē. She gaue \hat{y} righteous the rewarde of their laboures, τ led them forth a maruelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. ⁱShe brought them thorow the reed see, and caried them thorow the greete water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyles of the vngodly, and ^jprayed thy holy name (o LORDE) and magnified thy victorious hād with one acorde. For wyszdome openeth the mouth of \hat{y} domme, τ maketh \hat{y} tonges of babes to speake.

The ri. Chapter.

SHE ordred their workes in the hādes of ^kthe holy prophet: ^lso \hat{y} they wente thorow \hat{y} wyldernes \hat{y} was not inhabited, τ pitched their tētes in \hat{y} waist deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, τ were auenged of their aduersaries. ^mWhā they were thirstie, they called vpō \hat{y} , τ water was geuē them out of \hat{y} rok, τ their thirst slockened out of \hat{y} harde stone. For by \hat{y} thinges, wher thorow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their nede. For vnto the enemies thou gauest māš bloude in steade of luyunge water. And where as they had scarcenesse in \hat{y} rebuke whan the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyrst \hat{y} was at that tyme, how thou woldest bringe thine awne vnto honour, τ slaye their aduersaries.

For whan they were tryed τ noutrured with fatherly mercy, ⁿthey knowleged how the vngodly were iudged, and punyshed thorow \hat{y} wrath of God. These hast thou exorted as a father, τ proued thē: but vnto \hat{y} other thou hast bene a boysteous kyngē, layed hard to their charge, & condēd thē. Whether they were absent or present, their punyshmēt was alyke. For their grefe was dubble: namely, mouraynge, and ŷ remēbraunce of thinges past. But whā they perceaued ŷ their punyshmētes dyd thē good, they thought vpon the LORDE, & wondered at ŷ ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in ŷ out-castinge they thought scorne, as of an abiecte. Neuerthelesse ŷ righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but euen like as ŷ thoughtes of ŷ foolish were, so was also their wickednes.

C Where as certayne mē now (thorow erreure) dyd worshipsomme serpentes & vayne beestes, thou sendest a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeance: ŷ they might knowe, that lōke where withall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punyshed. For vnto thy allmyghty hande, that made the worlde of naught, it was not vnpossible, to sende amonge them an heape of Beeres, or woode lyōs, or cruell beastes of a straūge kynde, such as are vuknowne, or sponte fyre, or cast out a smoking breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtinge, but also kyll them with their horrible sight. Yee without these beestes might they haue bene slayne with one winde, beyng persecuted of their awne workes, and scattered abrode thorow the breth of thy power.

D Neuertheles thou hast ordred all thinges in measure, nōbre & weight. For thou hast euer had greate strēgth & might, & who maye withstōde ŷ power of thine arme? And why like as ŷ small thyng ŷ ŷ balauce weyeth, so is ŷ worlde before ŷ: yee as a droppe of ŷ morninge dew, that falleth downe vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as though thou sawest not the sinnes of mē, because they shulde amende. For thou louest all the thinges that are, and hatest none of thē whō thou hast made: nether didest thou ordeyne or make eny thyng of euell will.

How might eny thyng endure, yf it wer not thy will? Or how coude eny thyng be preserued, excepte it were called of ŷ? But thou sparest all, for all are thine, o LORDE, thou loner of soules.

The xij. Chapter.

O LORDE, how gracious & swete is thy sprete in all thinges? Therfore chastenest thou thē measurably that go wrōge, and warnest them, concernyng the thinges wherin they offende: thou speakest vnto them (o LORDE) and exortest thē to leane their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde inhabiters of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they commytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wytecraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominaciōs, myszbeleues & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that ŷ londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childrē of God.

Neuertheles thou sparedest thē also (as mē) & sendest ŷ forerūners of thyne hoost, eue hornettes to destroye thē out by lytle & litle. Not ŷ thou wast vnable to subdue ŷ vngodly vnto ŷ righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or with one rough worde to destroye thē together: But thy mynde was to dryue thē out by lytle & litle, genyinge thē time & place to amende: knowinge well, ŷ it was an vnrighteous naciō & wicked of nature, & ŷ their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursed sede from ŷ begynnynge, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done ŷ? Or who wyl stōde agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before thy face an auēger of vnrighteous mē? Or who wil blame ŷ, yf ŷ people perish, whō thou hast made? For there is none other / God but thou, ŷ carest for all thinges: ŷ thou mayest declare how ŷ thy iudgmēt is not vnright. There dare nether kige, ner tyraūt in thy sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

For so moch thē as thou art righteous thy self, thou ordrest all thiges righteously, & ŷ punishest eue hī ŷ hath not deserved to be punyshed, & takest him for a straūger & an aleaunt in ŷ lōde of thy power. For thy power is ŷ begynnynge of righteousnes: and because thou art LORDE of all thinges, therefore art thou gracious vnto all. When men thinke y not to be of a full strength, thou declarest thy power: τ boldly deliuerest thou them ouer y knowe y not. But thou LORDE of power iudgest quietly, and ordrest us with greate worshippe, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

D By such workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be iust and lounge: and hast made thy childrē to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgest, thou gnest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punyshed, and with such diligence deliuered y enemies of thy seruautes, which were worthy to dye (where thorow thou gauest thē tyme τ place of amēdement y they might turne frō their wickednes) with how greate diligence then punyshest thou thine awne childrē, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne τ made couenautes of good promises? So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punyshest oure enemies dynerse wayes: to y intēt y whā we punysh, we shulde remēbre thy goodnesse: τ when we oure selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

E Wherefore where as men haue lyued ignorauntly τ vnrighteously, thou hast punyshed thē sore, euē thorow y same thinges that they worshipped. For they wente astraye very lōge in y waye of erroure, τ helde y beestes (which euē their enemies despysed) for goddes, lyunge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therefore hast thou sent a scornefull punyshment amonge them, as amonge the childrē of ignoraunce. As for such as wolde not be reformed by those scornes τ rebukes, they felt the worthy punishmēt of God. For y thinges y they suffred, they bare thē vn-paciētly, beinge not contēt in them but vn-wyllinge. And when they peryshed by y same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowledged then, that there was but one true God, whom afore they wolde not knowe: therefore came y ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A WAYNE are all men, which haue not y knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are e sene, knewe not him, that of himself is euerlastinge.

Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some y course of y starres, some y water, some toke Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heauen which rule y earth, for goddes. But though they had such pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes: yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more fayrer he is that made them. For the maker of beuty hath ordened all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of thē, they shulde haue perceaued therby, y he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

For by the greatnesse τ beuty of the creature, y maker therof maye playnely be knowne. Notwithstandinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God τ wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they wēte aboute in his workes and sought after them, it is a tokē, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes y are sene: howbeit they are not wholly to be excused. For yf their vnderstandinge and knowledge was so greate, y they coude discern the worlde and y creatures, why dyd they not rather fynde out y LORDE therof?

But vnhappye are they, and amonge the deed is their hope, that call thē God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by connyng, the similitude of beastes, or eny wayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. e Or as when a carpenter cutteth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the bark of it connyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be vsed, and dighteth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a coked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carneth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (accordinge to the knowlege of his connyng) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he casteth some colour vpon it. Then maketh he a conueniēt tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, pronydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessite be helped.

D Then goeth he and offreth of his goodes vnto it for his children and for his wife: he seketh helpe at it, he axeth counsell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it \hat{y} hath no soule: for health, he maketh his petition vnto him that is sieke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: τ to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges \hat{y} he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do no maner of good.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A GAYNE, another mā purposinge to sayle τ begynnyng to take his iourney thorow \hat{y} raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, \hat{y} is farre weaker, thē \hat{y} tre \hat{y} beareth him. For as for it, coueteousnesse of moneye hath founde it out, τ \hat{y} craftes mā made it with his connyng. But thy prouydence (O father) gouerneth all thinges frō \hat{y} begynnyng, for thou hast made a waye in \hat{y} see,^a τ a sure path in the myddest of \hat{y} wawes: declaringe therby, \hat{y} thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuertheless, \hat{y} \hat{y} workes of thy wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made:^b τ therefore do men commytte their lyues to a small pece of wod passinge ouer the see in a shyppe, τ are sauēd.

B For in the olde tyme also whā the proude giauntes perished,^c he (in whō the hope was left to increase \hat{y} worlde) wēte in to the shippe, which was gouerned thorow thy hande, and so left sede behinde him vnto \hat{y} worlde. For happie is \hat{y} tre where thorow righteousnes cōmeth: but cursed is the ymage of wod, \hat{y} is made with hādes, yee both it τ he \hat{y} made it: He, because he made it: τ it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge.^d For the vngodly τ his vngodlynes are both like abhominable vnto God. Euen so \hat{y} worke τ he \hat{y} made it also shal be punyshed together. Therefore shal there a plage come vpon the ymages of the Heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the sekinge out of ymages is the begynnyng of whordome, and the bringinge vp of them is the destruccio[n] of life. For they were not from the begynnyng, nether shall they cōtinue for euer. The welthy ydilnes of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therefore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whē a father mourned for his sonne \hat{y} was taken awaye frō him, he made him an ymage (in all \hat{y} haist) of his deed sonne: τ so begāne to worshipe him as God, which was but a deed mā τ ordered his seruantes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme τ thorow lōge custome, this erreure was kepte as a lawe, τ tyrāutes cōpelled mē by violēce to honoure ymages. As for those \hat{y} were so farre of, \hat{y} mē might not worshipe them presently, their picture was brought frō farre (like the ymage of a kyng who they wolde honoure) to the intent that with greate diligence they might worshipe him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular connyng of the craftesman gauē the ignoraunt also a great occasiō to worshipe ymages. For the workman wyllyng to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his connyng to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the beuty of the worke) the comon people was diseaued, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erreure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affection, or to do some pleasure vnto kinges) ascribed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vnto no man.

Morouer, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greate warres of ignorance, those many and greate plagēs called they peace.^e For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable watches: so that they kepte nether life ner mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death maliciously, or els greued his neighbour with aduourtie. And thus were all thinges myxte together: bloude, manslaughter, theft, dissimulation, corrupcion, vnfaythfulnesse, sedicion, periury, disquietinge of good men, vnthākfulnes, defylinge of soules, chaūginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of mariage, mysordre of adoutrie and vnielnesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnynge and ende of all euell. For they ŷ worshipe Idols, either they are madd whā they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly mansweare them selues. For in so much as their trust is in ŷ Idols (which haue nether sole ner vnderstandinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurte them.

Therefore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthly: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vniustly to disceauē, and dyspysingē righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth euer with the offence of the vngodly.

The xvi. Chapter.

BUT thou (O oure God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordrest thou all thinges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. Yf we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is perfecte righteousness: Yee to knowe thy righteousness and power, is the rote of immortalite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath not disceaued vs: as the payntinge of the picture (an vnprofitable labourē) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight entiseth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Neuertheles, they that loue soche euell thinges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh ⁊ tempereth soft earth, laboureth it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessell, what so euer serueth for oure vse: and so of one peece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for seruice, and some contrary. But where to euery vessell serueth, that knoweth ŷ potter himself. So with his vayne labourē he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not ŷ more because he shal labourē ner because his life is shorte: but stryueth to excell goldsmythes, ŷ syluer smythes ⁊ copper smythes, and taketh it for an honour to make vayne thinges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth ⁊ his life is more vyle then claye: for so much as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gaue him his soule to worke, and brethed in him the breth of life. They counte oure life but a pastyme, and oure conversacion to be butt a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he ŷ of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himself to offende aboute all other.

All the enemies of thy people and ŷ holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnhappie and excedinge proude vnto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the Heithē to be goddes,^a which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: ⁊ as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borrowed sprete, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshipping, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. Yee they worshippē beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thinges that can not fele vnto them, ⁊ they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of these beestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thinge, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thanks vnto God.

The xvi. Chapter.

FOR these and soch other thinges haue they suffred worthy punyshment, ⁊ thorow ŷ multitude of beestes are they roted out. In steade of the which punishmentes thou hast graciously ordred thine awne people, ⁊ geuen them their desyre that they lōged for: a new ⁊ straunge taist, preparinge them^b quales to be their meate: to the intent ŷ (by the thinges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they ŷ were so greedy of meate, might be with-drawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shorte tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and taisted a new meate. For it was requisite ŷ (without eny excuse) destruction shulde come vpō those which vsed tyrāny, ⁊ to shewe onely vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. ^a For vpon the cruel wodnesse of the beestes came vpon them, they perysshed thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

B Notwithstōdinge thy wrath endured not perpetually, but they were put in feare for a litle season, ŷ they might be reformed, hauyng a token of saluacion, to remembre the cōmaundement of thy lawe. For he ŷ cōuerted, was not healed by the thinge ŷ he sawe, but by THE, O sauioer of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, ŷ it is thou, which deliuerest frō all euell. As for thē when they were bytten with greshoppers and flyes, ^b they died, for they were worthy to perish by such: But nether the teth of dragons ner of venomous wormes ouercame thy children, for thy merey was euer by them ⁊ helped thē. Therefore were they punyshed to remēbre thy wordes, but hastily were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulnesse, that they might not vse thy helpe.

C It was nether herbe ner plaster ŷ restored thē to health, but thy worde (o LORDE) which healeth all thinges. It is thou (o LORDE) ŷ hast the power of life ⁊ death: ^c thou ledest vnto deatnes dore, ⁊ bringest vp agayne. But man thorow wickednes slayeth his owne soule, ⁊ when his sprete goeth forth, it turneth not agayne, nether maye he call agayne ŷ soule ŷ is takē awaye: It is not possible to escape thy hande. For ŷ vngodly ŷ wolde not knowe ŷ, were punyshed by ŷ strēgth of thine arme: ^d with straunge waters, hailes and raynes they persecuted, ⁊ thorow fyre were they cōsumed. For it was a wonderous thinge that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thinges: but ŷ worlde is ŷ auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was ŷ fyre so tame, ŷ the beestes which were sent to punysh ŷ vngodly, brent not: ⁊ ŷ because they shulde se ⁊ knowe, ŷ they were persecuted with the punyshmēt of God. And sountyne brent the fyre in the water on euery syde, ŷ it might destroye ŷ vnrighteous nacio of the earth. Agayne, thou hast fed thine awie people with angels fode, ^e ⁊ sent thē bred ready from heauē (without their labour) beyng very pleasūt ⁊ well gusted. And to shewe thy riches ⁊ swetnesse vnto thy childrē, thou gauest euery one their desyre, so ŷ euery man might take what liked him best. But the snowe ⁊ yse abole the violēce of the fyre, ⁊ melted not: ŷ they might knowe, ŷ the fyre burninge in the hale ⁊ rayne, destroyed ŷ frute of ŷ enemies: ŷ fyre also forgatt his strēgth agayne, ŷ ŷ righteous might be norished. For ŷ creature ŷ serueth ŷ (which art ŷ maker) is fearse in punyshinge ŷ vnrighteous, but it is easy ⁊ gētle to do good. vnto such as put their trust in the. Therefore dyd all thinges alter at the same tyme, ⁊ were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is ŷ norse of all thinges, acordinge to ŷ desyre of thē ŷ had nede therof: ŷ thy childrē (o LORDE) whō thou louest, ^f might knowe, ŷ it is not nature ⁊ the growinge of frutes ŷ fedeth mē, but ŷ it is thy worde, which preserueth thē ŷ put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed with the fyre, as soone as it was warmed with a litle Sonne beame, it melted: ŷ all men might knowe, ŷ thanks ought to be geuen vnto ŷ before ŷ Sonne ryse, ⁊ ŷ thou oughtest to be worshipped before ŷ daye spryngue. For ŷ hope of ŷ vnthankfull shal melt awie as the wynter yse, ⁊ perishe as water, ŷ is not necessary.

The xvij. Chapter.

GREATE are thy iudgmētēs (o LORDE) ^g ⁊ thy counceils can not be expressed: therefore men do erre, ŷ wil not be reformed with thy wysdome. For whan the vnrighteous thought to haue thy holy people in subieciō, ^h they were bounde with the bandes of darknes ⁊ longe night, shutt vnder ŷ rofe, thinkinge to escape ŷ euerlastinge wysdome. And whyle they thought to be hyd in ŷ darknesse of their synnes, they were scattered abrode in ŷ very myddest of the darek coueringe of forgetfulnes, put to horrible feare ⁊ wonderously vexed. For the corner where they were, might not kepe them from feare: because ŷ sounde came downe and vexed them: yee many terrible and straunge visions made them afrayed.

B No power of the fyre might geue them light, nether might the cleare flames of the starres lightē ŷ horrible night. For there appeared vnto thē a sodane fyre, very dredeful: At ŷ which (whan they sawe nothinge) they were so afrayed, that they thought ŷ thinge which they sawe, to be the more fearfull. ^a As for the sorcery ⁊ enchauntemēt ŷ they vsed, it came to derisiō, and the proude wysdome was brought to shame. For they ŷ promised to dryue awaie the fearfulness ⁊ drede frō ŷ weake soules, were sick for feare thē selues, and that with scornē. And though none of ŷ wōders feared thē, yet were they afrayed at the beestes which came vpon thē, ⁊ at ŷ Hissinge of the serpētes: In so moech that with trōblinge they swowned, ⁊ sayde they sawe not ŷ ayre, which no mā yet maye escape.

C For it is an heuy thinge, whā a mans owne consciēce beareth recorde of his wickednes ⁊ condēpeth him. And why? a vexed ⁊ wounded consciēce, taketh euer cruell thinges in hāde. ^b Fearfulness is nothinge els, but a declaringe ŷ a mā seketh helpe ⁊ defence, to answer for him self. And loke how moche lesse the hope is within, the more is ŷ vncertaynte of the matter, for the which he is punished. But they ŷ came in ŷ mightie night, slepte ŷ slepe ŷ fell vpon thē frō vnder ⁊ frō aboue: somtyme were they afrayed thorow ŷ feare of ŷ wonders, ⁊ somtyme they were so weake, ŷ they swowned withall: for an hastie ⁊ sodane fearfulness came vpon thē. Afterwarde, yf eny of thē had fallē, he was kepte ⁊ shutt in preson, but without chaynes. But yf eny dwelt in a village, yf he had bene an hyrd or huszbandman, he suffred intolerable necessite: for they were all bounde with one chayne of dareknesse.

D Whether it were a blasynge wynde, or a swete songe of ŷ byrdes amonge the thicke braunches of the trees, or the vehemence of haistie rünynge water, or greate noyse of ŷ fallynge downe of stones, or the playenge ⁊ rünynge of beastes whō they sawe not, or ŷ mightie noyse of roaringe beestes, or ŷ sownde ŷ answereth agayne in the hye mountaynes: it made thē swowne for very feare. For all the earth shynd with cleare light, ⁊ no mā was hyndered in his laboure. Onely vpon thē there fell a heuy night, an ymage of darcknesse that was to come vpon them. Yee they were vnto them selues the most heuy ⁊ horrible dareknesse.

The xviij. Chapter.

NEUERTHELES thy sayntes had a very greate light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they sawe not the figure of them.) And because they suffred not ŷ same thinges, they magnified the: and they ŷ were vexed afore (because they were not hurte now) thanked the, and besought ŷ (o God) ŷ there might be a difference. Therefore had they a burnynge piler of fyre to lede them in the vnknowne waye, ⁊ thou gauest them the Sonne for a fre gift without eny hurte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light ⁊ to be put in the preson of dareknes, which kepte thy childrē in captiuyte, by whom the vncorrupte light of the lawe of ŷ worlde was for to be geuen. Whan they thought to slaye ^c the babes of the righteous (one beinge laied out, and yet preserued to be leder vnto the other) thou broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, and destroydest these in the mightie water. Of that night were oure fathers certified a fore, that they knowinge vnto what oother they had geuen credēce, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued ŷ health of the righteous, but the vngodly were destroyed. For like as thou hast hurte oure enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou calledest a fore. For the righteous children of the good men offred secretly, ⁊ ordred the lawe of righteousnes vnto vnite: ŷ the iust shulde receaue good and euell in like maner, singinge prayes vnto ŷ father of all men. Agayne, there was herde an vnconuenient voyce of the enemies, ⁊ a piteous erie for childrē that were bewayled. The master and the seruaūt were punyshed in like maner. For they all together had innumerable that dyed one death.

^d Nether were ŷ lyuinge sufficient to bury ŷ deed, for in ŷ twyncklinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of thē was destroyed. As oft as God helped thē afore, yet wolde it not make thē beleue: but in ŷ destrucciō of ŷ first borne they knowledged, that it was ŷ people of God. For whyle all thinges were still, ⁊ whā ŷ night was in ŷ myddest of hir course, thy Allmightie worde (o LORDE) leapte downe frō heanē out of thy royall trone, as a rough mā of warre, in ſ̄ myddest of ſ̄ londe ſ̄ was destroyed: ⁊ ſ̄ ſharpe swerde performed thy straite cōmaudemēt, stāding ⁊ ſ̄ ſylling all things with death: yee it stode vpon ſ̄ earth ⁊ reached vnto the heauen. Then the sight of the euell dreames vexed them sodenly, and fearfulness came vpon them vnawarres.

D Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyck, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed thē, shewed thē these things afore: so that they were not ignoraunt, wherfore they perished.

The tentacion of death touched the righteous also, and amonge the multitude in the wyldernes there was insurreccion, but thy wrath endured not longe. For the faultlesse man wente in all the haist,^a and toke the battayll vpon him, brought forth the weapē of his ministracion: euen prayer and ſ̄ cōsours of recōcilinge, set himself agaynst ſ̄ wrath, and so brought the misery to an ende: declaring therby, that he was thy seruauit. For he ouercame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapēs of might: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembrance of the ooth ⁊ couenaūt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the wrath, and parted ſ̄ waye vnto the luyunge. And why? ^b in his longe garnēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers grauē, and thy maiesty was written in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afraied of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wrath.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A S for the vngodly, the wrath came vpon them without mercy vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happē vnto them: how that (whan they had cōsented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greate diligence) they wolde repente, ⁊ folowe vpon them. ^c For whan they were yet mournyng and makinge lamētacion by the graues of the deed, they deuyd another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their flienge, whom they had cast out afore with prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the things ſ̄ happened vnto them afore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punishment, was requisite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormētes: that thy people might haue a maruelous passage thorow, and that these might fynde a strauge death.

B Thē was euery creature fashioned agayne of the new accordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commaundementes, ſ̄ thy children might be kepte without hurte. For the cloude ouershadowed their tentes, ⁊ the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so ſ̄ in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greate depe became a grene felde: where throw all ſ̄ people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous ⁊ maruelous workes. For as ſ̄ horses, so were they fedd, ⁊ leapte like lābes, prayinge the (o LORDE) which haddest deluyered them. And why? they were yet myndefull of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth flies in steade of catell, and how ſ̄ ryuer scrauled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fyszshes.

C But at the last they sawe a new creacion of byrdes, what tyme as they were ^ddisceaued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punishmentes came vpon ſ̄ symers, not without the tokēs which came to passe afore by the vehemēce of ſ̄ streames: for they suffred worthely accordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abominably ⁊ churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vnknowne gestes, some brought the straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no straungers with their wylls, but persecuted those also,^e and dyd thē moch euell, that receaued thē gladly. Therefore were they punyshed with blyndnesse, like as they that were couered with ^fsodane darcknesse at the dores of the righteous: so ſ̄ euery one sought ſ̄ inтраuce of his dore.

D Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tune is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepe their melody: which maye easely be perceaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lode was turned in to a watery, & ȳ thinge that afore swamme in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (cōtrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench.

Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that wēte with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not despysed them, but alwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

The ende of the boke of wysdome.

Ecclesiasticus called Iesus Syrac.

The prologe of Iesus the some of Syrac vnto his boke.

MANY and greate mē haue declared wysdome vnto vs out of ȳ lawe, out of ȳ prophetes & out of other that folowed thē. In the which thinges Israel ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wisdome: Therefore they that haue it & reade it, shulde not onely thē selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wrytinge.

After that my graundfather Iesus had geuen diligent laboure to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other bokes that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therin: he purposed also to wryte some thinge of wysdome and good maners, to the intēt that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more vnderstandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherefore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wrytten in the Hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well when it is trāslated in to another speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other bokes sounde farre other wyse, than they do, when they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yeaere when I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomy Euerges, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherefore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and trauallye to interprete this boke. And consideringe that I had tyme, I laboured and dyd my best to perfourme this boke, and to brynge it vnto light: that the straingers also which are disposed to lerne, might applye them selues vnto good maners, & lyeue acordinge to ȳ lawe of ȳ LORDE.

Chap. LI.

A prayer of Iesus Syrac. Wyszdome calleth the ignoraunt vnto her.

The first Chapter.

ALL wyszdome cometh of God^a the LORDE, ⁊ hath bene euer with him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred \hat{y} sonde of the see, \hat{y} droppes of the rayne ⁊ the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heauē, \hat{y} bredth of the earth ⁊ the depense of the see? Who hath sought out the grounde of Gods wyszdome,^b which hath bene before all thinges? Wyszdome hath bene before all thinges, and the vnderstandinge of prudence from euerlastinge. (Gods worde in the heyth is the well of wyszdome, and the euerlastinge cōmaundementes are the intraunce of her.) Vnto whom hath \hat{y} rote of wyszdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wyszdome bene discovered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the manyfolde entraunce of her?

There is one: euē the Hyest, the maker of all thinges, \hat{y} Allmightie, \hat{y} kyng of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sytteth vpon his trone, beinge a God of dominion: He hath created her thorow \hat{y} holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: He hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh accordinge to his gift: he geueth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshippe and triūphe, gladnesse ⁊ a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a mery hert, geneth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, ⁊ in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

^a 3 Re. 3. b. and 4. c. Iob 28. c. Iacobi 1. a.

The loue of God is honorable wyszdome: loke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wōderous thinges it doth.^c The feare of LORDE is the begynnyng of wyszdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shal go with the chosen wemen, and shalbe knowne of \hat{y} righteous and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is \hat{y} right Gods seruyce, that preserueth and iustifieth the hert, and geueth myrth ⁊ gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shalbe happie: and whan he hath nede of comforte, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wyszdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir giftes, ⁊ the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wyszdome, and geneth plenteous peace ⁊ health. He hath sene her ⁊ nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wyszdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto honoure.

The feare of the LORDE is the rote of wyszdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wyszdome is vnderstandinge and denocion of knowlege, but wyszdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryueth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, ⁊ his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A paciēt man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and thē shal he haue \hat{y} rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstōdinge wil hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mēs lippes shal speake of his wyszdome. In the treasures of wyszdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshippe of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wysdome, kepe the commaundement, and God shal gene her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome ⁊ nurture, he hath pleasure in faith and louynge mekenesse, and he shal fyll the treasures therof. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a duble hert. Be not an ypcrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Marek well these things, lest thou happen to fall and brynge thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discourer thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregacion: because thou woldest not receaue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of faynednes and disceate.

The ij. Chapter.

MY sonne, yf thou wilt come in to γ seruyce of God,^a stonde fast in righteousnes and feare, ⁊ arme thy soule to tentacion: sattle thine hert, and be paciēt: bowe downe thine eare, receaue the wordes of vnderstandinge, and shrencke not away, whan thou art entused. Holde the fast vpon God, ioynue thy self vnto him ⁊ suffre, that thy life maye encrease at the last. What so euer happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in heynesse, and be pacient in thy trouble.^b For like as golde and syluer are tryed in the fyre, euen so are acceptable men in the fornaue of aduersite. Beleue in God, and he shal helpe the: orde thy waie a right, and put thy trust in him. Holde fast his feare, and growe therin. O ye γ feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shrencke not away frō him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare γ LORDE, beleue him, and youre rewarde shall not be emptye. O ye that feare γ LORDE, put youre trust in him, ⁊ mercy shal come vnto you for pleasure. O ye γ feare γ LORDE, set youre loue vpō him, ⁊ youre hertes shal be lightened.

Considere the olde generacions of men (o ye children) and marck them well:^c was there euer eny one confounded, that put his trust in the LORDE? Who euer contynued in his feare, and was forsaken? Or whom dyd he euer despyse, that called faithfully vpō him? For God is gracious and mercifull, he forgeueth synnes in γ tyme of trouble, and is a defender for all them γ seke him in γ trueth. Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wicked lippes and euell occupied handes, ⁊ to the synner γ goeth two maner of waies. Wo be vnto them that are losew of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therefore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost pacience, forsaken the right wayes, and are turned back in to frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to vset thē?

They that feare γ LORDE, wil not mistrust his worde: and they that loue him,^d wyl kepe his commaundement. They that feare the LORDE, wyl seke out γ thinges that are pleasaunt vnto him: and they that loue him, shal fulfill his lawe.^e They that feare γ LORDE wil prepare their hertes, and hüble their soules in his sight. (They that feare the LORDE, kepe his commaundementes, and wil be pacient, tyll they se himself) sayenge: ^f better it is for vs to fall in to the handes of γ LORDE, then in to the hādes of men: for his merey is as greate as him self.

The iij. Chapter.

THE children of wysdome are a cōgregation of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Hearre me youre father (o my deare children) and do there after, that ye maie be safe. ^g For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeh hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shall be forgeuē him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children: ⁊ whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. He that honoureth his father,^h shall haue a longe life: ⁊ he that is obedient for γ LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and cloth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honour thy father in dede, in worde and in all pacience, that thou mayest haue his blessing:ⁱ for the blessinge of γ father buyldeth vp the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundations. Reioyce not when thy father is reprov'd, for it is no honoure vnto the, but a shame. For the worshippe of a mans father is his awne worshippe, and where the father is without honoure, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge fayle, haue pacience with him, ⁊ despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shall not be forgotten: and when thou thy self wantest, it shall be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousness) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembered: thy synnes also shall melt awaye, like as the yse in ȳ fayre warme wether.

C He ȳ forsaketh his father, shall come to shame: and he that defyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perfourme thy workes with louynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. ^aThe greater thou art, the more hūble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt fynde fauoure in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vnto God, ⁊ he is honoured of the lowly.

^bSeke not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and search not the grounde of such thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, think vpon that allwaye, and be not curious in many of ^chis workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se with thine eyes, ȳ thinges ȳ are secrete. Make not thou to moch search in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the allready, which be aboue ȳ capacite of men. The medlinge with such hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wyttes in vanite. Now he that loueth parell, shal perish therin.

D An harde herte shal fayre euell at ȳ last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prospere: ⁊ he that is frowarde of hert, wyll euer be the worse and worse.) A wicked hert shall be ladē with sorowes, and ȳ vngodly sinner wyll heape one synne vpon another. The counsell of the proude hath no health, for ȳ plante of synne shal be roted out in thē. The hert of him ȳ hath vnderstandinge, shal perceaue hie thinges, and a good eare wil gladly herken vnto wysdome. An hert that is wyse ⁊ hath vnderstandinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousness. ^dWater quencheeth burnynge fyre, ⁊ mercy reconceyleth synnes. God hath respecte vnto him ȳ is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that when he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde.

The iiii. Chapter.

MY sonne, defraude not the poore of his ^aalmes, and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath nede. Despise not an hongrie soule, and defye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is helpelesse, and withdrawe not the gift from ȳ nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedey. Cast not thine eyes asyde fro ȳ poore, ȳ thou geue him not occasion to speake euell of the. For yf he complayne of ȳ in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shal be herde: euē he ȳ made him, shal heare him. Be courteous vnto ȳ company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, ⁊ bowe downe thy heade to a man of worshippe. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answer, and ȳ with mekenesse.

B Delyuer him ȳ suffreth wrōge fro ȳ hāde of ȳ oppressoure, ⁊ ⁊ be not faint harted whā thou sittest in iudgmēt. Be merciful vnto ȳ fatherles as a father, ⁊ be in steade of an husbāde vnto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obedīct sonne of ȳ Hiest, and he shal loue the more thē thy mother doth. Wisdome bretheth life in to hir children, receaue thē ȳ seke her, ⁊ wyll go before thē in ȳ waye of righteousness. He ȳ loueth her, loueth life: ⁊ they ȳ seke her diligētly, shal haue greate ioye. They ȳ kepe her, shal haue the heretage of life: for where she entrech in, there is the blessinge of God. They that honour her, shal be ȳ seruauentes of the holy one: and they that loue her, are beloued of God. Who so geneth eare vnto her, shal iudge the Heithē: and he that hath respecte vnto her, shall dwell safely.

all. Feare, drede and teutacion shal she bringe vpon him, and trye him in hir doctrine: tyl she haue so proued him in his thoughtes, that he committe his soule vnto her. The shal she stablish him, bringe the right waye vnto him, make hi a glad mā, shewe him hir secretes, and heape vpon him the treasures of knowlege, vnderstandinge and righteousnes. But yf he go wronge, she shall forsake him, and geue him ouer in to the handes of his enemye.

My soune, make moeh of the tyme, eschue the thinge y is. euell, and for thy life shame not to saye y truth. For there is a shame y bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth worshipe and faouore. Accepte no prison after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of thy neighbour in his aduersite, kepe not back thy counsell whā it maye do good, nether hyde thy wysdome in hir beuty. For in the tōge is wysdome knowne, so is vnderstandinge, knowlege and lernynge in the talkinge of the wyse, and stedfastnesse in y workes of righteousnes. In no wise speake agaynst the worde of treuth, but be ashamed of the lyes of thine owne ignorance. Shame not to confesse thine erreure, and submitte not thyself vnto euery man because of synne. Withstande not y face of the mightie, and stryue not agaynst the streame. But for the truth stryue thou vnto death, and God shal fight for the agaynst thine enemies. Be not haystie in thy tonge, nether slack and negligent in thy workes. Be not as a lyon in thine owne house, destroyinge thy housholde folkes, and oppressing them y are vnder the. Let not thine hande be stretched out to receaue, and shutt whan thou shuldest geue.

The 6. Chapter.

TRUST not vnto thy riches, and saye not: tush, I haue ynough for my life. (For it shall not helpe in the tyme of vengeance and temptacion.) Folowe not the lust of thine owne hert in thy strength, and saye not: tush, how shulde I, or who wyl cast me downe because of my workes? for doutles God shal auenge it. And saye not: I haue committed no synnes, butt what euell hath happened me? For the Allmightie is a pacient rewarder. Because thy synne is forgēc y, be not therefore without feare, nether heape one synne vpō another. And saye not: tush, the mercy of the LORDE is greate, he shal forgewe my synnes, be they neuer so many. For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cōmeth downe vpon synners.

Make no tariēge to turne vnto y LORDE, and put not of frō daye to daie: for sodenly shal his wrath come, and in the tyme of vengeance he shal destroye y. Trust not in wicked riches for they shal not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to euery wynde, and go not in to euery waye: for so doth the synner that hath a dubble tonge (Stonde fast in y waye of y LORDE) be stedfast in thy vnderstandinge, abyde by thy worde, and folowe the worde of peace and righteousnes. Be getle to heare y worde of God, that thou mayest vnderstande it, and make a true answer with wysdome. Be swift to heare, but slowe and pacient in geninge answer. Yf thou hast vnderstandinge, shappe thy neighbour an answer: Yf no, laye thine hāde vpō thy mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vndiscrete worde, and so cofōided. Honour and worshipe is in a mā wyse talkinge, but y tōge of y vndiscrete is his awne distracciō. Be not a preuy accuser as long as thou lyuest, and vse no slauder with thy tonge. For shame and sorow goeth ouer the thefe, and an euell name ouer him that is dubble tonged: but he that is a preuy accuser of other men, shalbe hated enryed and confounded. Se that thou iustifie the small and greate alyke.

The 6i. Chapter.

BE not thy neighbours enemye for thy frēdes sake: for who so is euell shal be y heyre of rebuke and dishonoure, and who so euer beareth enyve and a dubble tōge, offendeth. Be not proude in the denyce of thine owne vnderstandinge, lest thy leaues wyther, and thy frute be destroyed, and so thou be left as a drye tre. For a wicked soule destroyeth him that hath it, maketh him to be laughed to scorne of his enemies, (and bringeth him to the porcion of the vngodly.) ^a A swete worde multiplieth frendes, and pacieth thē ŷ be at variaunce, and a thankfull tonge will be plentiful in a good man. Holde frendshipe with many, neuertheles haue but one councceler of a thousande.

33 Yf thou gettest a frende, proue him first,^b and be not haistic to geue him credence. For some man is a frende but for a tyme, and wyl not abyde in the daye of trouble. And there is some frende that turneth to enemyte, and taketh parte agaynst the: and yf he knowe eny hurte by the, he telleth it out. Agayne, some frende^c is but a companyon at the table, and in the daye of nede he contynueth not. But a sure frende wil be vnto ŷ euen as thine owne self, and deale faithfully with thy household folke. Yf thou suffre trouble and aduersite, he is with the, and hydeth not him self from the. Departe frō thine enemies, yee and bewarre of thy frendes.

C A faithful frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth such one, findeth a noble treasure. A faithfull frende hath no peare, the weight of golde and syluer is not to be compared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faithfull frende is a medicine of life, ⁊ they ŷ feare the LORDE, shal fynde him. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal prospere with frendes: and as he is himself, so shal his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctryne frō thy youth vp, so shalt thou fynde wyszdome tyll thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte paciētly for hir good frutes. For thou shalt haue but litle labour in hir worke,^d but thou shalt eate of hir frutes right soone. O how exceedyge sharpe is wyszdome to vnlearned men? an vntedfast body wyl not remaine in her. Vnto soch she is as it were a twichstone, ⁊ he casteth her from him in all the haist: for wyszdome is with him but in name, there be but few ŷ haue knowlege of her. (But with them that knowe her, she abyedeth euē vnto ŷ appearinge of God.)

34 Geue care (my sonne) receaue my doctryne, and refuse not my counccell. Put thy fote in to hir lynckes, and take hir yock vpon thy neck: bowe downe thy shulder vnder her, beare hir patiently, and be not weery of hir bandes. Come vnto hir with thy whole hert, and kepe hir wayes with all thy power.

Seke after her, and she shalbe shewed the: and whā thou hast her, forsake her not. For at the last thou shalt fynde rest in her, and that shal be turned to thy great ioye. Then shal hir fetters be a stronge defence for the, ⁊ hir yock a glorious rayment. For the bewtie of life is in her, and hir bandes are the couplinge together of saluacion. Yee a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crowne of ioye shalt thou weere.

35 My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue vnderstādyng: and yf thou wilt applye thy mynde, thou shalt be wyse. Yf thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt receaue doctryne: and yf thou delyte in hearinge, thou shalt be wyse. Stonde with ŷ multitude of soch elders as haue vnderstandinge, and consente vnto their wyszdome with thine hert: that thou mayest heare all godly sermons,^e and that the worthy sentences escape the not. And yf thou seist a man of discrete vnderstandinge, gett the soone vnto him, and let thy fote treade vpon the steppes of his dores. ^f Let thy mynde be vpon the commandementes of God, and be earnestly occupied in his lawes: so shal he establish thy hert, and geue ŷ wyszdome at thine owne desyre.

The viij. Chapter.

DO no euell, so shall there no harme happen vnto the. Departe awaye from the thinge that is wicked, and no mysfortune shal medle with the. My sonne, sowe no euell thinges in the forowes of vnrighteousnes, so shalt thou not reape thē sevenfolde. Labour not vnto man for any lordshipe, nether vnto the kynge for the seate of honoure. Iustifie not thy self before God^g (for he knoweth the hert) and desyre not to be reputed wyse in the presence of the kynge. Make no labour to be made a iudge, excepte it so were, ŷ thou coudest mightily put downe wickednes: for yf thou shuldest stōde in awe of ŷ presence of the mightie, thou shuldest fayle in geuyng sentence. Offende not in ŷ multitude of the cite, and put not thyself amonge the people. Bynde not two synnes together,^h for in one synne shalt thou not be vnpunished. Saye not: tush, God wil lōke vpō the multitude of my oblacions, and whan I offre to the hiest God, he wyl accepte it.

Heithen is to be abhorred. "Because of vnrightheous dealinge, wronge, blasphemies and diuerse disceate, a realme shal be trāslated frō one people to another.

B There is nothinge worse then a cuvetous man. What prydest thou the, o thou earth and aszbes? There is not a more wicked thinge, then to loue moneye. And why? soch one hath his soule to sell: yet is he but fylthie dōge whyle he lyueth.

And though the physician shewe his helpe neuer so longe, yet in conclusion it goeth after this maner: to daye a kynge, to morrow deed. For whan a man dyeth, he is the heyre of serpent, beastes and wormes. The begynnynge of mans pryde, is to fall awaye from God: and why? his hert is gone from his maker, for pryde is the originall of all synne. Who so taketh holde therof, shalbe fylled with cursinges, and at \hat{y} last it shal ouer throwe him. Therefore hath the LORDE brought the cōgregacions of the wicked to dishonoure, and destroyed them vnto the ende.

C God hath destroyed the seates of proude prynces, and sett vp the meke in their steade. God hath wythered the ^brottes of the proude Heithen, and planted the lowly amonge them. God hath ouerthrowne the ^clonde of the Heithen, and destroyed them out of the grounde. He hath caused them to wyther awaye, he hath brought them to naught, and made the memoriall of them to ceasse from out of the earth. (God hath destroyed the name of the proude, and left the name of \hat{y} humble of mynde.) Pryde was not made for man, nether wrothfulness for mens children. The sede of men that feareth God, shalbe brought to honoure: but \hat{y} sede which transgresseth the commaundementes of \hat{y} LORDE shalbe shamed. He \hat{y} is the ruler amōge brethren, is holdē in honoure amōge them, and he regardeth soch as feare the LORDE.

D The glory of the riche, of the honorable and of the poore is the feare of God.

Despyse not thou the iust poore man, and magnifie not \hat{y} rich vngodly. Greate is the iudge and mightie in honoure, yet is there none greater, then he \hat{y} feareth God. Vnto \hat{y} ^dseruaunt that is discrete, shal the fre do seruyce. He that is wyse and well nurtoured, wyll not grudge whan he is reformed, τ an ^eignoraunt body shal not come to honoure. Be not proude to do thy worke, and dispare not in the tyme of ^faduersite. Better is he \hat{y} laboureth, and hath plenteousnes of all thinges, then he \hat{y} is gorgious, and wanteth bred.

E My sonne, kepe thy soule in mekenes, and geue her hir due honoure. Who shal iustifie him, that synneth agaynst himself? Who wil honoure him, that dishonoureth his owne life? The poore is honoured for his faithfulness and trueth, but \hat{y} rich is had in reputacio because of his goodes. He that ordreth himself honestly in pouerte, how moch more shal he behaue himself honestly in riches? And who so ordreth himself vnonestly in riches, how moch more shal he behaue himself vnonestly in pouerte?

The xi. Chapter.

THE ^gwysdome of him \hat{y} is brought lowe, shal lift vp his beade, and shal make him to sytt amonge greate mē. Commende not a man in his bewtye, nether despyse a man in his vtter apperaūce. The Bey is but a small beast amonge the foules, yet is hir frute exceedinge swete. Be not proude of thy rayment, ^hand exalte not thyself in the daye of thy honoure: for \hat{y} workes of the Hiest onely are wonderfull: yee glorious, secreate and vnknowne are his workes. Many tyrauntes haue bene ⁱayne to syt downe vpo the earth, τ \hat{y} vnlickly hath worne \hat{y} crowne. Many mightie mē haue bene brought lowe, and the honorable haue bene deluyered in to other mens handes. ^kCondemne no man, before thou haue tryed out the matter: and whan thou hast made enquisicion, then reforme righteously. Geue no sentēce before thou hast herde the ^lcause, but first let men tell out their tayles.

B Stryue not for a matter that toucheth not thyself, and stonde not in the iudgment of synners. My sonne, medle not with many matters: τ \hat{y} thou wylt be ^mriche, thou shalt not gett it: and though thou rennest thy waye afore, yet shalt thou not escape. some man is slouthfull, hath nede of helpe, wäteth strēgh, and hath greate pouerte, and Gods eye loketh vpon him to good, setteth him vp from his love estate, and lifsteth vp his heade: so that many men maruell at him, and geue honoure vnto God.

C Prosperite and aduersite,^b life and death, pouerte and riches come all of the LORDE. (Wyszdome, nurtoure and knowledge of \hat{y} lawe are with God: lone and \hat{y} wayes of good are with him. Erroure and darcknes are made for synners: and they that exalte them selues in euell, waxe olde in euell.) The gift of God remaineth for the righteous, and his good wyl shal geue prosperite for euer. Some man is rich by lyuyng nygardly, and \hat{y} is the porcion of his rewarde, in that he sayeth: now haue I gotten rest, and now wyl I eate and drynke of my goodes myself alone. And yet he considereth not, that the tyme draweth nye, \hat{y} he must leaue all these things vnto other men, and dye himself. Stonde thou fast in thy couenant, and exerceyse thy self therin, and remayne in the worke vnto \hat{y} age. Continue not in the workes of synners, but put thy trust in God, and byde in thine estate: for it is but an easy thīge in \hat{y} sight of God, to make a poore man riche, and that sodenly. The blessinge of God haisteth to \hat{y} rewarde of the righteous, and maketh his frutes soone to flourish and prospere. Saye not: what helpeth it me? and what shal I haue \hat{y} whye? Agayne, saye not: I haue ynough, how can I wante? When thou art in welfare, forget not aduersite: and whan it goeth not well with the, haue a good hope, that it shal be better. For it is but a small thinge vnto God, in the daye of death to rewarde every mā accordinge to his wayes. The aduersite of an houre maketh one to forgett all pleasure, and whan a man dyeth, his workes are discovered. Prayse no body before his death, for a man shalbe knowne in his children.

E Bring not every man in to thine house, for the disceatfull layeth wayte dynersly. Like as a partrich in a maūde, so is the hert of the proude: and like as a spyte, that loketh vpon the fall of his neighbour. For he turneth good vnto euell, and slaundreth the chosen. Of one sparck is made a greate fyre, τ an vngodly mā layeth wayte for bloude. Bewarre of the disceatfull, for he ymagineth wicked thinges, to bringe \hat{y} in to a perpetuall shame. Yf thou takest an aleaūt vnto \hat{y} , he shal destroye the in vnquietnes, and dryue the from thine owne wayes.

The xij. Chapter.

WHAN thou wylt do good, knowe to whom thou doest it, τ so shalt thou be greatly thanked for thy benefites. Do good vnto the righteous, and thou shalt fynde greate rewarde: though not of him, yet (no doute) the LORDE him self shal rewarde the. He stōdeth not in a good case, that is allwaye occupied in euell, τ geueth no allmes: for the Hyest hateth the synners, and hath mercy vpon them that shew the workes of repētaunce. Geue thou vnto such as feare God, and receaue not a synner: As for the vngodly and synners, he shall recompense vengeance vnto them, and kepe them to the daye of wrath. Geue thou vnto the good, and receaue not the synner: do well vnto him that is lowly, but geue not to the vngodly. Let not the bred be genen him, that he be not mightier then thy self therin. For so shalt thou receaue twyse as moch euell, in all the good that thou doest vnto him: And why? the Hyest hateth synners, and shal rewarde vengeance to the vngodly.

B In prosperite a frende shal not be knowne, τ in aduersite an enemye shal not be hyd. For whan a mā is in wealth, it greueth his enemies: but in heuynes and trouble a man shal knowe his frende. Trust neuer thine enemy, for like as an yron rusteth, so doth his wickednes. And though he make moch crouchinge and knelinge, yet kepe well thy mynde, and beware of him. Sett him not by \hat{y} , nether let him sytt at thy right hāde: lest he turne him, gett in to thy place, take thy rowme and seke thy seate, and so thou at the last remembre my wordes, and be pricked at my sayenges.

C Bynde not two synnes together, for there shal not one be vnpanyshed. Who wil haue pite of the charner, that is stynged of \hat{y} serpēt, or of all such as come nye \hat{y} beastes? Euc so is it with him \hat{y} kepeth cōpany with a wicked mā, τ lappeth him self in his synnes. For a season wil he byde with the, but yf thou stomble, he tarieth not. An enemy is ſhall he tempte the, and (with a preuy mock) ſhall he queſtion ſy of thy ſecretes. The vnumerciſſull mynde of his ſhal marck thy wordes, he ſhal not ſpare to do ſy hurte ⁊ to put ſy in preſon. Bewarre, ⁊ take good hede to thy ſelf, for thou walkeſt in parell of thy ouerthrowinge.

(Now whā thou heareſt his wordes, make the as though thou werest in a dreame, ⁊ wake vp. Loue God all thy life longe, ⁊ call vpon him in thy nede.) Eury beaſt loueth his like, euen ſo let eury man loue his neyghboure. All fleſh wil reſorte to their like, and eury man will kepe company with ſuch as he is himſelf. But as ſy wolfe agreeth with the lambe, ſo doth the vngodly with ſy righeteouſ. What felſhippe^c ſhulde an holy man haue with a dogg? How can the ryche and the poore agree together? The wilde aſſe is the Lyons pray in the wilderneſſe, euen ſo are poore men the meate of the ryche. Like as the proude maye not awaye with lowlynes, euen ſo doth the riche abhorre the poore. Yf a rich man fall, his frendes ſett him vp agayne: but when the poore falleth, his frendes forſake him. Yf a rich mā fall in to an erreure, he hath many helpers: he ſpeaketh proude wordes, and yet men iuſtifie him.

But yf a poore man go wronge, he is punyſhed: yee though he ſpeake wiſely, yet can it haue no place. When the riche man ſpeaketh, eury body holdeth his tōge: and loke what he ſayeth, they prayſe it vnto the cloudes. But yf the poore man ſpeake, they ſaye: What felowe is this? and yf he do anyſſe, they ſhal deſtroye him. Riches are good vnto him that hath no ſynne in his conſcience, and pouerte is a wicked thinge in the mouth of the vngodly. The hert of man chaungeth his countenance, whether it be in good or euell. A chearfull countenance is a tokē of a good hert, for els is it an harde thinge to knowe the thought.

BLISHED is the man, that hath not fallen with ſy worde of his mouth,^d and is not pricked with the conſcience of ſynne. Happie is he that hath had no heuynes in his mynde, and is not fallen from his hope. It becometh not a cūetous man and a nygarde, to be ryche: and what ſhulde a nygarde do with golde? He that with all his carefulnes heapeth together vnrightheously, gathereth for other folkes, and another mā shal make good chere with his goodes. He \bar{y} is wicked vnto him self, how shulde he be goode vnto other mē? How can soch one haue eny pleasure of his goodes? There is no thinge worse, then whan one disfaoureth himself, \bar{r} this is a rewarde of his wickednes. Yf he do eny good, he doth it not knowinge therof, and agaynst his will, and at the last he declareth his vngraciousnes. A nygarde hath a wicked eye, he turneth away his face, and despyseth his owne soule. ^aA couetous mans eye hath neuer ynough in the porciou of wickednes, vntyll the tyme that he wither away, and haue lost his owne soule.

B A wicked eye spareth bred, \bar{r} there is scarcenesse vpo his table. My soune, do good to thy self of \bar{y} thou hast, \bar{r} geue \bar{y} LORDE his due offeringes. Remembre \bar{y} death tarieth not, \bar{r} how \bar{y} the couenaunt of the graue is shewed vnto the: (for the couenaunt of this worlde shal dye the death.) ^bDo good vnto thy frende before thou dye, and according to thy abylyte reach out thine hande, and geue vnto \bar{y} poore. Be not disapoynted of \bar{y} good daye, \bar{r} let not \bar{y} porcion of \bar{y} good daie ouerpas the. Shalt thou not leaue thy trauayles and labours vnto other men? In the deuydinge of the heretage geue and take, and sanctifie thy soule. Worke thou righteousnes before thy death, for in \bar{y} hell there is no meate to fynde. ^cAll flesh shal fade awaye like grasse, \bar{r} like a florishinge leaf in a grene tre. Some growe, some are cast downe: euen so is \bar{y} generacion of flesh and bloude: one commeth to an ende, another is borne.

C All transitory thinges shall fayle at the last, and the worker therof shal go withall. Euery chosen worke shall be iustified, and he \bar{y} meddleth withall, shal haue honoure therein. Blessed is the man \bar{y} kepeth him in wyszdome, and exercyseth himself in vnderstandinge, \bar{r} with discrecion shal he thinke vpon the fore knowlege of God. Which considereth \bar{y} wayes of wyszdome in his heart, hath vnderstandinge in hir secretes, goeth after her (as one that seketh hir oute) \bar{r} contynueth in hir wayes. He loketh in at hir windowes, \bar{r} herkeneth at hir dores: He taketh his rest besyde hir house, \bar{r} festeneth his stake in hir walles: He shall pitch his tent nye vnto hir hande, and in his tent shal good thinges rest for euermore: He shal sett his children vnder hir coueringe, \bar{r} shal dwell vnder hir braunches. Vnder hir coueringe shal he be defended from the heate, and in hir glory shall he rest.

The xv. Chapter.

HE that feareth God, wil do good: and HE who so kepeth the lawe, shal optayne wyszdome. As an honorable mother shal she mete him, and as a vyrgin shall she receaue him. ^dWith \bar{y} bred of life and vnderstandinge shal she fede him, and geue him the water of wholesome wyszdome^e to drynke. Yf he be constant in her, he shall not be moued: and yf he holde him fast by her, he shal not come to cofucion. She shall brynge him to honoure anonge his neyghbours, and in the myddest of the congregacion shall she open his mouth. With the sprete of wyszdome and vnderstadinge shal she fyll him, and clothe him with the garment of glory. She shal heape the treasure of myrth \bar{r} ioye vpo him, and geue him an euerlastinge name to heretage. Foolish men wyll not take holde vpon her, but such as haue vnderstandinge, wil mete her, for she is farre from pryde and disceate. Men that go aboute with lyes, wil not remembre her: (but men of truth shall be founde in her, euen vnto the beholdinge of God.) Prayse is not semely in the mouth of \bar{y} vngodly, for he is not sent of \bar{y} LORDE. For of God commeth wyszdome, \bar{r} the prayse shall stonde by the wyszdome of God, and shal be plenteous in a faithfull mouth, and the LORDE shal geue her vnto him.

Saye not thou: It is the LORDES faute B that I am gone by, for thou shalt not do \bar{y} thinge that God hateth. Saye not thou: he hath caused me to go wronge, for he hath no nede of the vngodly. God hateth all abhominacion of erreure, \bar{r} they that feare God wyl loue no soch. ^fGod made man from the begynnynge, \bar{r} left him in the hande of his counsell. He gaue him his commaundementes and preceptes: yf thou wilt obserue the commaundementes, \bar{r} kepe acceptable faithfulness for euer, they shal preserue \bar{y} . He hath set water and fyre before the, reach out thine hande vnto which thou wilt. Before man is life and death, good and euell: loke what him liketh, shalbe geuen him. For the wysdome of God is greate and mightie in power, and beholdeth all men continually. ⁶ The eyes of the LORDE are vpon them that feare him, and he knoweth all the workes of man. He hath commaunded no man to do vngodly, nether hath he geuen eny man leue to synne.

The xviij. Chapter.

DELYTE not thou in the multitude of vngodly children, and haue no pleasure in them, yf they feare not God. Trust not thou to their life, and regarde not their labours: for one sonne yf feareth God is better, than a thousande vngodly. And better it is for a man to dye without childre, than to leaue behynde him soch children as are vngodly. For by one yf hath vnderstandinge, maye a whole cite be vpholden, but though the vngodly be many, yet shal it be waysted thorow them. Many soch thinges hath myne eye sene, and greater thinges then these haue I herde with myne eares. ⁶ In the congregacion of the vngodly shal a fyre burne, and amonge vnfaithfull people shal the wrath be kyndled.

The olde giātes optayned no graee for their synnes, ⁷ which were destroyed, trustinge to their owne strength. Nether spared he them, ⁸ amōge whom Loth was a straunger: but smote them and abhorred them because of the pryde of their wordes. He had no pitie vpon them, but destroyed all the people, that were so stoute in synne. ⁹ And for so moch as he onersawe not the sixe hundredth thousande, that gathered them selues together in yf hardnesse of their hert: it were maruell yf one beyng hardnecked, shulde be fre. For merey and wrath is with him: ¹⁰ he is both mightie to forgeue, and to poure out displeasure. Like as his merey is greate, euē so is his punishment also, he iudgeth a man accordinge to his workes. The vngodly shal not escape in his spoyle, and the longe pacience of him that sheweth mercy, shal not byde behynde. All merey shall make place vnto euery man accordinge to the deseruyng of his workes, (and after the vnderstandinge of his pilgreamage.)

Saye not thou: I wyl hyde my self from God, for who wyl thinke vpon me from aboue? I shal not be knowne in so greate a heape of people, for what is my soule amonge so many creatures? Beholde, the heauen, yee the heauen of heauens, the depe, the earth and all that therein is, shall be moued at his presence: the mountaynes, the hilles and the foundacions of the earth shal shake for feare, whan God vysiteth them. These thinges doth no hert vnderstonde, but he vnderstandeth euery hert, and who vnderstandeth his wayes? No man seyth his storme, and the most parte of his workes are secrete. Who wil declare the workes of his righteousnes? Or who shal be able to abyde them? for the couenaunt is farre from some, and the tryenge out of men is in the fulfillyng. He that is humble of hert, thinketh vpon soch thinges: but an vnwyse and erroneus man casteth his mynde vnto foolish thinges.

My sonne, herken thou vnto me, and lerne vnderstādinge, and marek my wordes with thine hert: I wyl geue the a sure doctrine, and planely shal I enstrucke the. God hath sett his workes in good ordre from the begynninge, and parte of them hath he sundered from the other. He hath garnyshed his workes from euerlastinge, and their begynnynges accordinge to their generacions. None of them dishobedient vnto his worde. After this, God lokyd vpon the earth, and fylled it with his goodes. With all maner of luyng beastes hath he couered the grounde, and they all shalbe turned vnto earth agayne.

The xviij. Chapter.

GOD shope man of the earth, and turned him vnto earth agayne. ⁴ He gaue him the nombre of dayes and certayne tyme, yee and gaue him power of the thinges that are vpon earth. He clothed him with strength, and made him after his owne licknes. He made all flesh to stonde in awe of him, so that he had the dominion of all beastes and foules. ⁵ He made out of him an helper like vnto him self, and gaue them discrecion and tonge, eyes and eares, and a hert to vnderstande, and filled them with instruccioe ⁊ vnderstandinge. He created for them also the knowlege of the sprete, filled their hert with vnderstandinge, and shewed them good and euell. He sett his eye vpon their hertes, declaringe vnto them his greate and noble workes: (that they shulde prayse his holy name together, reioyse of his wonders, ⁊ be tellinge of his noble actes.)^a Besydes this, he gaue them instruccioe, and the lawe of life for an heretage. He made an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, and shewed them his righteousnes ⁊ iudgements. They sawe his glory with their eyes, and their eares hearde the maiesty of his voyce. And he saide vnto them: beware of all vnrighteous things. He gaue euery man also a commaundement concernynge his neyghboure.

3 Their waies are euer before him, and are not hyd from his eyes. ^b He hath sett a ruler vpon euery people, but Israel is ^γ LORDES porcion. All their workes are as the Sonne in ^δ sight of God, ⁊ his eyes are allwaye lokinge vpon their waies. All their vnrighteousneses are manifest vnto him, and all their wickedneses are open in his sight. The mercy ^ε a man sheweth ^ζ is as it were a purse with him, and a mans good dede preserueth him as the apple of an eye. At the last shall he awake, ^η ⁊ rewarde euery man vpon his heade as he hath deserued, and shal turne them together in to the nethermost partes of the earth. ^θ But vnto them that wyll repent, he hath geue the waye of righteousnes. As for such as be weake, he comforteth the, suffreth them, and sendeth them the porcion of ^ι verite. O turne then vnto the LORDE, forsake thy synnes, make thy prayer before the LORDE, do the lesse offence, turne agayne vnto the LORDE, forsake thine vnrighteousnes, be an vtter enemy to abhominacion (lerne to knowe the righteousnes and iudgements of God, stonde in the porcion that is sett forth for the ⁊ in the prayer of the most hye God. Go in to the porcion of the holy worlde, with such as be luyng and geue thanks vnto God.)

c Who wil prayse the LORDE in the hell? Abyde not thou in the erreure of the vngodly, but geue him thākes before death. As for ^κ deed, thankfulness perisheth from him as for ^λ geueth. Geue thou thanks in thy life, ye while thou art luyng ⁊ whole shalt thou geue thanks, and prayse God and reioyse in his mercy. O how greate is the luyng kyndnesse of the LORDE, and his mercifull goodnes vnto such as turne vnto him? For all things maye not be in man: ⁊ why? the sonne of man is not immortall, and he hath pleasure in the vanyte of wickednes. What is more cleare the Sonne? yet shal it fayle. Or what is more wiked, then the thinge that flesh and bloude hath ymagined? and that same shall be repropud. The LORDE seyth the power of the hye heauen, and all are but earth and aszshes.

The xliij. Chapter.

HE that luyeth for euermore, made all things together. ^α God onely is righteous, ⁊ remayneth a victorious kynge for euer. ^β Who shalbe able to expresse the workes of him? Who hath sought out the grounde of his noble actes? Who shal declare the power of his greatnesse? Or, who will take vpon him to tell out his mercy? As for the wonderous workes of the LORDE, there maye nothinge be taken from them, nothinge maye be put vnto them, nether maye the grounde of them be founde out. But whan a man hath done his best, he must begynne agayne: and whan he thinketh to be come to an ende, he must go agayne to his labour. What is man? Wherto is he worth? What good or euell can he do? ^γ Yf the nombre of a mans dayes be almost an hundreth yeare, it is moch.

3 Like as the droppes of rayne are vnto ^δ see, and as a grauell stone is in comparison of the sonde: ^ε so are these few yeares to the dayes euerlastinge. Therefore is ^ζ LORDE pacient with them, and poureth out his mercy vpon them. He sawe and perceaued the thoughtes and ymaginacions of their harte, that they were euell: therefore heaped he vpon his mercifull goodnes vpon them, and shewed them the waie of righteousnes. The mercy that a mā hath, reacheth to his neyghboure: but ^η mercy of God is vpon all flesh. He chasteneth, he teacheth and nourturcth: yee euen as a shepherde turneth agayne his flock, so doth he all them that receaue chastenyng, nourtoure and doctryne. Mercifull is he vnto

C My sonne, whan thou doest good, make no grudging at it: and what so euer thou geuest, speake no discomfortable wordes. Shal not the dew coole the heate? Euen so is a worde better then a gift. Is not a frendly worde a good honest gift? ^b but a gracious man geueth them both. A foole shal cast a man in the tethe, and that roughly, and a gift of the nygarde putteth out ^c eyes. Get the righteousnes before thou come to iudgmēt: Lerne before thou speake, and go to phisick or euer thou be sick: ^d examen and iudge thy self, before the iudgment come, and so shalt thou fynde grace in the sight of God. Humble thy self afore thou be sick, and in tyme of thy disease shewe thy conuersacion. Let not to praye allwaye, and stonde not in feare to be reformend vnto death, for the rewarde of God endureth for euer. Before thou prayest, prepare thy soule, and be not as one ^e tempteth God. D From the mornynge vntyll the euenynge the tyme is changed, and all soch thynges are soone done in ^g sight of God. A wyse man feareth God in all thynges, and in the dayes of transgression he kepeth him self from synne. A discrete man hath pleasure in wyszdome, and he that fyndeth her, maketh moch of her. The xiiij. Chapter.

A LABOURYNGE man that is geuen vnto dronckennes, shall not be riche: and he that maketh not moch of small thynges, shal fall by litle and litle. ^a Wyne and women make wyse men rēnagates, and put men of vnderstādinge to reprove: and he that accompanieth aduouterers shal become a wicked man. Mothes and wormes shall haue him to heretage, yee he shall be sett vp to a greater example, and his soule shalbe roted out of the nombre. ^b He that is haistie to geue credence, is light mynded, and doth agaynst himself. Who so reioyseth in wickednes, shal be punished: he that hateth to be reformed, his life shalbe shortened: and he that abhorreth bablinge of wordes, quençeth wickednes. (He that offendeth agaynst his owne soule, shal repent it: and he that reioyseth in wickednes, shalbe punyshed.)

Rehearse not a wicked and churlish worde twyse, and thou shalt not be hyndered. Shew thy secretes nether to frende ner foo, and yf thou hast offended, tell it not out. For he shal herken vnto the and marck the: and whan he fyndeth oportunyte, he shall hate the. ^c Yf thou hast herde a worde agaynst thy neyhboure, lett it be deed within the: and be sure, thou shalt haue no harme therby. A foole trauaileth with a worde, like as a woman that is payned with bearinge of childe. Like as an arowe shott in a dogges thye, so is a worde in a fooles hert. ^d Tell thy frende his faute, lest he be ignoraunt, and saye: I haue not done it, or yf he haue done it, that he do it nomore. Reproue thy neyhboure, that he kepe his tonge: and yf he haue spokē, that he saye it nomore.

C Tell thy neyhboure his faute, for oft tymes an offence is made, and geue not credēce to euery worde. A man falleth somtyme with his tonge, but not with his will. ^e For what is he, ^f hath not offended in his tonge? Geue thy neyhboure warnynge, before thou threaten him, and geue place vnto the lawe of the LORDE. The feare of God is all wyszdome, and he that is a right wyse man kepeth the lawe. symers is no good vnderstandinge: it is but wickednesse and abhominacion ⁊ a blasphemynge of wysdome. A symple man of small vnderstandinge that feareth God, is better then one that hath moch wysdome, and transgresseth the lawe of the Hyest.

A craftye sotell man can be wyse, but he is vnrighteous, and with giftes he wraysteth the open and manyfest lawe. A wicked man can beane himself humbly, and can douke with his heade, and yet is he but a disceauer within. He hydeth his face,^a and disguyseth it: ⁊ because he shulde not be knowne, he preuenteth the.

And though he be so weake that he can do the no harme, yet whan he maye fynde oportunitie, he shall do some euell. A man maye be knowne by his face, and one that hath vnderstandinge, maye be perceaued by the loke of his countenance. A mans garment, laughter ⁊ goynge, declare what he is.

The xx. Chapter.

SOME man reprobeth his neghboure oft tymes, but not in due season: Agayne, some man holdeth his tonge, and he is wyse and discrete. It is moch better to gene warnynge and to reprove, then to beare euell will: for he that knowlegeth him self openly, shalbe preserued from hurt and destruccion. Like as whan a chamberlayne thorow desyre and lust defyleth a mayden, euen so is it with him that vseth violence and vnrighteousnes in y^e lawe: (O how good a thinge is it, a man y^e is reprobud, to shewe openly his repentaunce? for so shalt thou escape wylfull synne.)

Some man kepeth sylence, and is founde wyse: but he that is not ashamed what he sayeth, is hatefull. Some man holdeth his tonge, because he hath not the vnderstandinge of the language: and some man kepeth sylence, waytinge a conuenient tyme.^d A wyse man wyll holde his tonge tyll he se oportunitie, but a wanten and an vn discrete body shal regarde no tyme. He that vseth many wordes, shal hurte his owne soule: and he that taketh auctorite vpō him vnrighteously, shalbe hated.

Some man hath oft tymes prosperite in wicked thinges: Agayne, some man getteth moch, and hath harme and losse. There is some gift that is nothinge worth: Againe, there is some gift, whose rewarde is dubble. Some man getteth a fall by beyng to proude, and some commeth to worships from lowe estate. Some man bieth moch for a litle pryce, and must paye for it seuenfolde.

A wyse man with his wordes maketh him self to be loued, but the fauours of fooles shalbe poured out. The gift of the vn wyse shal do the no good, for his eyes are seuen folde. He shal geue litle, ⁊ saye he gaue moch: he openeth his mouth and crieth out, as it were one that crieth out wyne. To daye he lendeth, tomorrow he axeth it agayne, and soch a man is to be hated. The foole sayeth: I haue no frende, I haue no thanke for all my good dedes: yee euen they that eate my bred, speake no good of me. O how oft, and of how many shal he be laughed to scorne? He taketh a more perloous fall by soch wordes, then yf he fell vpon the grounde: euen so shal the falles of wicked men come haistely. In the mouth of him that is vntaught, are many vnconuenient and vnmete wordes. A wyse sentence shall not be alowed at the mouth of the foole, for he speaketh it not in due season.

Some man synneth not, because he hath not wherwithall, and in his rest he shall be stynged. Some man there is that destroyeth his owne soule with shame, and for an vnwyse bodyes sake destroyeth he it, (and with acceptinge of personnes shal he vndoo himself.) Some man promiseth his frende a gift for very shame, and getteth an enemye of him for naught. A lye is a wicked shame in a man, yet shall it be euer in the mouth of the vnwyse. A thefe is better, then a man that is accustomed to synne, but they both shal haue destruccion to heretage. The conditions of lyers are vn honest, and their shame is euer with them.

A wyse man shall brynge himself to honoure with his wordes,^e and he that hath vnderstandinge shall be fell by amonge greate men. He that tylleth his lond, shal increase his heape of corne: he that worketh righteousnes, shall be exalted, ⁊ he that pleaseth greate men, shall escape moch euell. A MY sonne, yf thou hast synned, do it no more:^b but praye for thy foresynnes, that they maye be for geuen the. Fle from synne, euen as from a serpent: for yf thou commest to nye her, she wyll byte the. The teth therof are as the teth of a lyon, to slaye the soules of men. The wickednes of man is as a sharpe two edged swerde, which maketh such woundes that they can not be healed.

Stryfe and wrougeous dealinge shall waist awaye a mans goodes, & thorow pryde a rich house shalbe brought to naught: so the riches of the proude shalbe roted out. The prayer of the poore goeth out of the mouth,^c and commeth vnto the eares, and his vengeance (or defence) shall come, and yf haistely. Who so hateth to be reformed, it is a token of an vngodly personne: but he that feareth God, wyll remembre himself. A mightie man is knowne afarre of by his tonge, but he that hath vnderstondinge, perceaueth that he shal haue a fall.

B Who so buyldeth his house with other mens cost, is like one that gathereth stones in wynter. The congregacion of the^d vngodly is like stubble gathered together, their ende is a flamme of fyre. The waye of the vngodly is sett with stones, but in their ende is hell, darcknes, and paynes. He that kepeth the lawe, wyll holde fast the vnderstandinge therof, and the ende of the feare of God is wyszdome. He that is not wyse, wyll not be taught in good: but the vnwyse man aboundeth in wickednes: and where bytternes is, there is no vnderstodinge. The knowledge of the wyse shall flowe like water that renneth ouer, and his counsell is like a fountayne of life.

C The hert of a foole is like a brokē vessell, he can kepe no wyszdome. When a man of vnderstondinge heareth a wyse worde, he shal commend it, and make moch of it. But yf a voluptuous man heare it, he shall haue no pleasure therin, but cast it behynde his back. The talkyng of a foole is like an heuy burthen by the waye: but to heare a wyse man speake, it is a pleasure. Where a doute is in the congregacion, it is axed at the mouth of the wyse, and they shal pondre his wordes in their hertes. Like as a house that is destroyed, euen so is wyszdome vnto a foole: As for the knowledge of the vnwyse, it is but darck wordes. Doctryne is vnto him yf hath no vnderstandinge, euen as fetters aboute his fete, and like manicles vpon his right hande.^e A foole listeth vp his voyce with laughter, but a wyse man shall scarce laugh secretly.

D Lernynge is vnto a wyse man a fewell of golde, and like an armlett vpō his right arme. A foolish mans foote is soone in his neighbours house, but one that hath experience, shall be ashamed at the personne of the mightie. A foole wyll pepe in at yf wyndow in to the house, but he that is well nourted, wyll stonde without. A foolish man stonndeth herkenynge at the dore, but he that is wyse, wyll be ashamed.

The lippes of the vnwyse wylbe tellynge foolish thinges, but yf wordes of such as haue vnderstandinge, shalbe weyed in the balaunce. The hert of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wyse is in their hert. When the vngodly curseth the blasphemers, he curseth his owne soule.^f A preuy accuser of other men shal defyle his owne soule, and be hated of enery man: (but he that kepeth his tonge and is discrete, shall come to honoure.)

The xxiij. Chapter.

A SLOUTHFULL body is moulded of a stone of claie: he that toucheth him, must wash his handes agayne. A mysnurtered sonne is the dishonoure of the father. A foolish daughter shalbe litle regarded. A wyse daughter is an heretage vnto hir husbände: but she that commeth to dishonesty, bringeth hir father in heuynes. A daughter that is past shame, dishonoureth both hir father and hir husbände: the vngodly shal regarde her, but they both shal despise her. The playenge of Musick is not mete where heuynes is, euen so is the correccō & doctryne of wyszdome euer vnpleasaunt vnto fooles.

B Who so teacheth a foole, is euen as one that gleweth a potsherde together: as one that telleth a taylor to him that heareth him not, and as one that rayseth a mā out of an heuy slepe. Who so telleth a foole of wyszdome, is euen as a man, which speaketh to one ŷ is a slepe. Whā he hath tolde his tayle, he sayeth: what is the matter? Whā one dyeth, lamentacion is made for him, because the light fayleth him: euē so let mē mourne ouer a foole, for he wanteth vnderstandinge. Make but litle weeping because of the deed: for he is come to rest: but the life of the foole is worse then the death. ^aSeuen dayes do men mourne for him that is deed, but the lamentacion ouer the vnwyse and vngodly shulde endure all the dayes of their life.

^c Talke not moch with a foole, and go not with him that hath no vnderstandinge. Bewarre of him, lest it turne the to trauayle, ⁊ thou shalt not be defyled with his synne. Departe from him, and thou shalt fynde rest, ⁊ shalt not be drawē back in to his foolishnes. What is heuier then leade? And what shulde a foole be called els, but leade? ^bSōde, salt ⁊ a lōpe of yron is easier to beare, then an vnwyse, foolish, and vngodly man. Like as the band of world bounde together in the foundacion of the house can not be lōwse, euē so is it with ŷ hert ŷ is established in ŷ thought of coucell. The thought of the wyse, shal nether feare ner be offended at eny tyme.

^d Like as a fayre playstred wall in a winter house, ⁊ an hyc buyldinge, maye not abyde ŷ wide ⁊ storme: euē so is a foolles hert afraid in his ymaginacion: he feareth at euery thinge, and can not endure. He that nyppeth a maus eye, bryngeth forth teares: and he that pricketh the hert, bringeth forth ŷ meanyge ⁊ thought. Who so casteth a stone at the byrdes, frayeth them awaye: ⁊ he ŷ blasphemeth his frēde, breaketh ŷ frēdshipe. though thou drewest a swerde at thy frende, yet dispayre not, for thou mayest come agayne to thy frende. Yf he speake sowerly, feare not, for ye maye be agreed together agayne: excepte it be so that thou blaspheme him, dysdayne him, opē his secretes and wounde him tratorously: for all such thinges shal dryue awaye a frende.

^e Be faithfull vnto thy neghboure in his pouerte, that thou mayest reioyse with him also in his prosperite. Abyde stedfast vnto him in ŷ tyme of his trouble, that thou maiest be heyre with him in his heretage. Like as the vapor and smoke goeth out at the ouen before ŷ fyre, euen so euell wordes, rebukes and threatenynge go before bloudsheddinge. Be not ashamed to defende thy frende: as for me, I wyl not hyde my face from him, though he shulde do me harme. Who so euer heareth it, shal beware of him. Who shal set a watch before my mouth, ⁊ a sure seale vpon my lippes, ŷ I fall not with thē, ⁊ ŷ my tonge destroye me not?

The xxiij. Chapter.

OLORDE, father and gouernoure of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginaciō ⁊ counsell. Oh let me not fall in soch reprofē. Who wyll kepe my thought with ŷ scourge, and the doctryne of wyszdome in myne herte? that he spare not myne ignoraunce, that I fall not with them, lest myne ignoraunces increase, that myne offences be not many in nombre, and that my synnes exceede not: lest I fall before myne enemyes, and so my aduersary reioyse. O LORDE, thou father ⁊ God of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginacion. O let me not haue a proude loke, but turne awaye all voluptuousnes fro me. Take fro me the lustes of the body, let not the desyres of vnclenes take holde vpon me, and geue me not ouer in to an vnshamefast and obstinate mynde.

Hear me (o ye children) I will geue you a doctryne, how ye shal ordre youre mouth: who so kepeth it, shal not perish thorow his lippes, ner be hurt thorow wicked workes (As for the synner, he shalbe taken in his owne vanite: he that is proude and cursed, shal fall therin.) ^aLet not thy mouth be accustomed with swearinge, for in it there are many falles. Let not the namyng of God be continually in thy mouth: for like as a seruaunt which is oft punyshed can not be without some sore, euen so what so euer he be ŷ sweareth and nameth God, shal not be cleane pouged fro synne. A man that vseth moch swearinge, shalbe fylled with wickednes, and the plage shall neuer go from his house. Yf he begyle his brother, his faute shalbe vpon him: yf he knowlege not his synne, he maketh a dubble offence: and yf he sweare in vayne, he shall not be founde righteous, for his house shalbe full of plagēs.

Vse not thy mouth to vn honest and fylthye talkynge,^b for in it is the worde of synne. Remembre thy father and thy mother, whā thou art set amouge greate men: lest God forget \bar{y} in their sight, and lest thou dotinge in thy custome, suffre rebuke, and wyshe not to haue bene borne, and so curse the daye of thy natiuite. The man that is accustomed with the wordes of blasphemy, wyl neuer be reformed all \bar{y} dayes of his life. To synne twyse is to moch, but the thirde bringeth wrath and destruccio. An whote stomack can not be quenched, (euc̄ like a burnynge fyre) tyll it haue swalowed vp somthiḡe: euc̄ so an vchaste mā hath no rest in his flesh, tyll he haue kyndled a fyre.

¶ All bred is swete to an whoremonger, he wyl not leaue of, tyll he haue his purpose. A man that breaketh wedlock, \bar{a} regardeth not his soule, but sayeth: Tush, who seyth me?^c I am compassed aboute with dareknes, the wallis couer me, no body seyth me: whom node I to feare? The Hyst wyl not remembre my synnes. (He vnderstondeh not that his eyes se all thinges, for all soch feare of mē dryueth away the feare of God from him: for he feareth onely the eyes of men, and considereth not that the eyes of the LORDE are clearer then the Sonne, beholdinge all \bar{y} wayes of men and the grounde of the depe, and lokinge euen to mens hertes in secrete places. The LORDE God knewe all thinges or euer they were made, and after they be brought to passe also he loketh vpon them all. The same mā shalbe opely punyshed in \bar{y} stretes of \bar{y} cite,^d and shalbe chased abrode like a yonge horse foale: and when he thinketh leest vpon it, he shalbe takē, Thus shal he be put to shame of every man, because he wolde not vnderstonde the feare of the LORDE. And thus shal it go also with every wyfe \bar{y} leaueth hir huszbande, \bar{a} getteth enheretaunce by a straunge marriage. She shalbe brought out of \bar{y} cōgregaciō, and hir childrē shalbe loked vpō. Hir childrē shal not take rote: \bar{a} as for frute, hir braūches shal brīge forth none. A shamefull reporte shal she leaue behynde her, \bar{a} hir dishonoure shal not be put out. And they \bar{y} remayne, shal knowe, \bar{y} there is nothiḡe better, thē \bar{y} feare of God: \bar{a} \bar{y} there is nothiḡe sweter, then to take hede vnto the commaundementes of the LORDE. A greate worshippe is it to folowe \bar{y} LORDE, for longe life shalbe receaved of him.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

WYSZDOME shal prayse himself, \bar{a} be honoured in God, \bar{a} reioyse in \bar{y} myddest of his people: In the cōgregacions of the Hyst shal she open hir mouth, \bar{a} tryumphe in \bar{y} beholdinge of his power: In \bar{y} myddest of hir people shal she be exalted, \bar{a} wōndred at in the holy fulnesse: In the multitude of the chosen she shalbe commended, \bar{a} amouge soch as be blessed she shalbe prayed, \bar{a} shal saye: I am come out of the mouth of \bar{y} Hyst, first borne before all creatures. I caused \bar{y} light \bar{y} fayleth not, to aryse in the heauen, \bar{a} couered all the earth as a cloude. My dwellinge is aboue in \bar{y} heyth, \bar{a} my seate is in the piler of the cloude. I my self alone haue gone rounde aboute the compasse of heauen, \bar{a} pearsed the grounde of \bar{y} depe: I haue walked in the floudes of \bar{y} see, \bar{a} haue stonde in all landes: my domynion is in euery people and in euery nacion, \bar{a} with my power haue I troden downe the hertes of all, both hye and lowe.

In all these thinges also I sought rest, \bar{a} dwellinge in some enheritaunce. So \bar{y} creator of all thinges gaue me a commaundement: \bar{a} he that made me, appoynted me a tabernacle, and saide vnto me: Let thy dwellinge be in Iacob, and thy inheritance in Israel, \bar{a} rote thy self amōge my chosen. ^fI was created from the begynninge and before the worlde, \bar{a} shal not leaue of vnto the worlde to come. ^gIn the holy habitacion haue I serued before him, and so was I stablished in Sion. ^hIn \bar{y} holy cite rested I in like maner, \bar{a} in Ierusalem was my power. I toke rote in an honourable people, euen in the porcion of \bar{y} LORDE \bar{a} in his heretage, \bar{a} kepte me in \bar{y} fulnes of the sayntes. I am sett vp an hye like a Ceder vpō Libanus, \bar{a} as a Cyper tree vpon the mount Hermon: I am exalted like a palme tre in Cades, ⁊ as a rose plāted in Iericho: As a fayre olyue tre in the felde, ⁊ am exalted like as a plantayne tre by the water syde. I haue geuen a smell in the stretes, as ⁊ Cynamon and Balme, that hath so good a sauoure: yee a swete odoure haue I geuen, as it were Myrre of the best.

C I haue made my dwellinges to smell as it were of rosyn, Galbanum, of Clowes and Incense, ⁊ as Libanus when it is not hewē downe, ⁊ mine odoure is as the pure Balme. As the Terebynte haue I stretched out my branches, and my branches are the branches of honoure and louynge faouure. ^aAs ⁊ vyne haue I brought forth frute of a swete sauoure, and my floures are ⁊ frute of honoure and riches. I am the mother of bewtye, of loue, of feare, of knowlege and of holy hope. In me is all grace of life and trueth: ^bIn me is all hope of life and vertue. O come vnto me, all ye that be desyrus of me, and fyll youre selues with my frutes: for my sprete is sweter then hony, ⁊ so is my inheritaunce more then the hony combe: the remembraunce of me endureth for euermore. They that eate me, shal haue the more hunger: and they that drynke me, shal thyrste the more. Who so herkeneth vnto me, shal not come to confucion: and they that worke in me, shal not offende. They that make me to be knowne, shal haue euerlasting life.

All these thinges are the boke of life, the counaunt of the Hyest, and the knowlege of the trueth. ^cMoses commaunded the lawe in the preceptes of righteousnes for an heretage vnto the house of Iacob,^d and cōmitted ⁊ promyses vnto Israel (Out of Dauid his seruānt HE ordered to raise vp a most mightie kinge, syttinge in the seate of honoure for euermore.) ^eThis fylleth with wyszdome like as the floude of Phison, ⁊ as ⁊ floude of Tigris, when the new frutes are a growinge.

D This bringeth a plenteous vnderstandinge, like Euprates: ^f ⁊ fylleth it vp, as Iordane in the time of haruest. This maketh nurtoure to breake forth as the light, ⁊ as the water Gihon in ⁊ haruest. The first hath not knowne her perfectly, nomore shal the last seke out ⁊ grounde of her. For hir thought is fuller thē the see, and hir counsell is profounder then the greate depe.

I wyszdome haue cast out floudes. I am as a greate waterbroke out of ⁊ riuier. I am as the ryuer Dorix, and as a water condyte am I come out of the garden of pleasure. I sayde: I wyl water the garden of my yonge plantes, and fyll the frute of my byrth. So my waterbroke became exceedinge greate, and my ryuer approched vnto the see. For I make doctryne to be vnto all mē as light as the fayre mornynge, and I shall make it to be euer the clearer. (I will pearse thorow all the lower partes of the earth, I wyll loke vpon all such as be a slepe, and lighten all thē that put their trust in the LORDE.) I shal yet poure out doctrine, like as propcey, and leaue it vnto such as seke after wyszdome, and their generacions shal I neuer fayle, vnto the holy euerlastinge worlde. Beholde, how that I haue not laboured for my self onely, ^gbut for all them ⁊ seke after ⁊ trueth.

The xrb. Chapter.

THREE thinges there are, ⁊ my sprete ^afauoureth, ^bwhich be also a lowed before God and men: The vnyte of brethren, the loue of neyghbours, and man and wyfe that agree well together.^c

Thre thinges there be which my soule hateth, and I vtterly abhorre the life of them: A poore man that is proude. A rich mā that is a lyar,^d and an olde body that doteth and is vnchaste.

Yf thou hast gathered nothings in thy youth, what wylt thou fynde thē in thine age? O how pleasaut a thinge is it, whā gray headed men are discrete, ⁊ when the elders can geue good counsell? O how cōly a thinge is wyszdome vnto aged men? yee vnderstandinge and counsell is a glorious thinge. The crowne of olde men is to haue much experience, ⁊ ⁊ feare of God is their worshippe.

There be ix. thinges, which I haue iudged in my hert to be happie, and the tenth wil I tell forth vnto men with my tonge. A man ⁊ whyle he lyueth, hath ioye of his children, and seith ⁊ fall of his enemies. Well is him, that dwelleth ^ewith an houswife of vnderstōd-inge, and that hath not fallen with his tonge, and ſ̄ hath not bene faire to ſerue ſoch as are vnmete for him. Wel is him, ſ̄ fyndeth a faithfull frende: ⁊ wel is him, which talketh of wiſdome vnto an eare ſ̄ heareth him. O how greate is he, ſ̄ fyndeth wiſdome ⁊ knowlege? Yet is he not aboute him, that feareth the LORDE. The feare of God hath ſett itſelfe aboute all thinges. Blessed is ſ̄ man, vnto whō it is graunted to haue the feare of God. Vnto whō ſhal he be lickened, ſ̄ kepeth it faſt? The feare of God is the begynnyng of his loue, and the begynnyng of faith is to cleue faſt vnto it. The heuynes of the hert is all the punyſhment, and the wickednes of a woman goeth aboute all. All punyſhment ⁊ plage is nothinge in comparison of the plage of the hert, euē ſo all wickednes is nothinge to the wickednes of a woman.

What ſo euer happeneth vnto a man, is nothinge in comparison of it, ſ̄ his euell willers do vnto him: and all vengeance is nothinge to the vengeaunce of the enemye. There is not a more wicked heade then the heade of the ſerpēt, and there is no wrath aboute ſ̄ wrath of a woman. "I wyl rather dwell with a lyon and dragon, then to kepe houſe with a wicked wyfe. The xvi. Chapter.

HAPPIE is the man that hath a vertuous wyfe, for the nōbre of his yeares ſhalbe dubble. An honeſt woman maketh hir huſbande a ioyfull man, ⁊ ſhe ſhall fylle ſ̄ yeares of his life in peace. A vertuous woman is a noble gift, which ſhalbe geuen for a good porcion vnto ſoch as feare God. Whether a man be rich or poore, he maye haue euer a mery hert, ⁊ a chearful countenaunce. There be thre thinges ſ̄ my hert feareth, and my face is afrayed of the fourth. Treason in a cite, a ſedicious people, and noyſome tonges, all theſe are heuier then the death. But whan one is gelouſ ouer his wife, it bryngeth payne and ſorowe vnto the hert: and a woman that telleth out all thinges, is a ſcourge of the tonge. Whan one hath an euell wife, it is euen as whan an vnlike pare of oxen muſt drawe together: he that getteth her, getteth a ſcorpion. A dronken woman is a greate plage, for ſhe can not couer hir owne ſhame.

The whordome of a woman maye be knowne in the pryde of hir eyes and eyelldes. "Yf thy daughter be not ſhamefaſt, holde her ſtraightly, leſt ſhe abuſe hirſelfe thorow ouernoch libertie. Bewarre of all the diſhoneſty of hir eyes, and maruell not yf ſhe do agaynſt the. Lik as one that goeth by the waye and is thyrſtie, ſo ſhall ſhe open hir mouth, and drynke of euery nexte water that ſhe maye gett.

By euery hedge ſhal ſhe ſyt her downe, ⁊ opē hir quyuer againſt euery arowe. A louynge wyfe reioyseth hir huſbande, and fedeth his bones with hir wyſdome. A woman of few wordes is a gift of God, and to a well nurtured mynde maye nothinge be compared.

An honeſt and manerly woman is a gyft aboute other giftes, and there is no waight to be compared, vnto a mynde that can rule it ſelfe. Like as the Sonne whan it aryseth, is an ornament in the hye heauen of ſ̄ LORDE, ſo is a vertuous wife ſ̄ bewtye of all hir houſe. Like as the cleare light is vpon ſ̄ holy cadelſtick, ſo is the bewtye of the face vpō an honeſt body. "Like as the goldē pilers are vpon the ſockettes of ſyluer, ſo are the fayre legges vpon a woman that hath a cōſtant mynde. (Perpetuall are the fōudations that be laied vpon a whole ſtony rocke.

so are $\dot{\gamma}$ commaundementes of God vpon an holy woman.)

D There be two things $\dot{\gamma}$ greue my hert, and in the thirde is a displeasure come vpon me. When an experte man of warre suffreth scarsenes and pouerte, Whan men of vnderstandinge and wysdome are not set by: And whan one departeth from righteousnes vnto synne. Who so doth soch, the LORDE hath prepared him vnto the swerde. There be two maner of things, which me thyncke to be herde and perylous. A marchaunt can not lightly kepe him from wronge, nether a tauerner himself from synne.

The xxvij. Chapter.

BECAUSE of pouerte haue many one offended: and he that seketh to be riche, turneth his eyes asyde. Like as a nale in the wall sticketh fast betwixte two stones, euen so doth synne sticke betwixte $\dot{\gamma}$ byer and the seller. Yf he holde him not diligently in $\dot{\gamma}$ feare of the LORDE, his house shall soone be ouerthrowne. Like as whan one sifteth, the fylthynes remaineth in the syue: So, remaineth there some vnclane thinge in the thought of man. The ouen proueth the potters vessell, so doth ^atentacion of trouble trye righteous men. The tre of the felde is knowne by his frute, so is the thought of māns hert knowne by his wordes. Prayse no mā excepte thou haue harde him, for a man is knowne by his wordes. Yf thou folowest righteousnes, thou shalt get her, and put her vpon $\dot{\gamma}$ as a fayre garment. (And thou shalt dwell with her, and she shall defende the for euer, and in $\dot{\gamma}$ daye of knowlege thou shalt fynde stedfastnesse.) The byrdes resorte vnto their like, so doth the trueth turne vnto them that be occupied withall. The lyon wayteth for $\dot{\gamma}$ praye: so do the synnes lurke vpon the workes of wickednes. The talkinge of him that feareth God, is nothinge but wysdome: as for a foole, he chaungeth as $\dot{\gamma}$ Moone. Yf thou be amonge the vndiscrete, kepe thy worde to a conuenient ^btyne, but amonge such as be wyse, speake on hardely. The talkinge of fooles is abhominaciō, and their sporte is voluptuousnesse and mysnurtoure. ^cMoch swearynge maketh the hayre to stonde vp, and to stryue with soch, stoppeth the eares.

The stryfe of the proude is bloudsheddyng, and their blasphemynge is heuy to heare. ^dWho so discourereth secretes, leseth his credence, and fyndeth no freude after his will. Loue thy frende, and bynde thyself in faithfulness with him: but yf thou bewrayest his secretes, thou shalt not get him agayne: For like as the mā is that destroyeth his enemye so is he also that dealeth falsly in the frendshipe of his neighbour.

Like as one that letteth a byrde go out of his honde, can not take her agayne: Euen so thou, yf thou geue ouer thy frende, thou canst not get him agayne: Yee thou cast not come by him, for he is to farre of. He is vnto the as a Roo escaped out of the snare, for his soule is wounded. As for woundes, they maye be bounde vp agayne, and an euell worde maye be reconcyled: but who so bewrayeth the secretes of a frende, there is no more hope to be had vnto him.

He that ^ewyncketh with the eyes, ymagineth some euell, and no man shal take him from it. Whan thou art present, he shal hylie commende and prayse thy wordes: but at the last he shall turne his tayle, and slaūder thy sayenge. Many thinges haue I hated, but nothinge so euell, for the LORDE himself also abhorreth soch one.

Who so casteth a stone an hye, it shal fall vpon his owne heade: ^fand he that smytheth with gyle, woundeth himself. Who so diggeth a ^gpytt, shal fall therin: and he that layeth a snare, shal be taken in it himself. Who so geueth a wicked noysome counsell, it shall come vpon himself, and he shall not knowe from whēce. The proude blasphemie and are scornefull, but vengeance lurketh for them as a lyon. They that reioyce at the fall of $\dot{\gamma}$ righteous, shal be taken in $\dot{\gamma}$ snare, anguysh of hert shall consume them before they dye. Anger and rigorousnes are two abhominable thinges, and $\dot{\gamma}$ vngodly hath them both vpon him.

thy neighbour the hurte that he hath done the, and so shal thy synnes be forgeuen the also, whan thou prayest. A man that beareth hatred agaynst another, how darre he desyre forgeuenesse of God? He that sheweth no mercy to a mā which is like himself, how darre he axe forgeuenesse of his synnes? Yf he that is but flesh, beareth hatred and kepeth it, who wyl intreate for his synnes? Remembre the ende, ⁊ let enmyte passe, which seketh death and destruccion, and abyde thou in ⁊ commaundementes. Remembre ⁊ commaundement, so shalt thou not be rigorou ouer thy

B neighbour. Thinke vpō the couenaunt of ⁊ Hyest, and forgeue thy neighbours ignoraūce. ^aBewarre of strife, and thou shalt make ⁊ synnes fewer. For an angrie man kyndleth variaunce, and the vngodly disquyeteth frēdes, and putteth discorde among them that be at peace. The more wodd there is, the more vehement is the fyre: and the ^bmightier ⁊ men be, the greater is the wrath: and the longer the strife endureth, the more it burneth.

C An haistie brawlinge kyndleth a fyre, and an haistie strife sheddeth bloude. Yf thou blowe the sparke: it shal burne: Yf thou spytt vpō it, it shal go forth, and both these go out of thy mouth. The ^cslaunderer and dubble tōgued is cursed, for many one that be frendes setteth he at variaunce. The thirde tonge hath disquieted many one, and dryuen them from one londe to another. Stronge cities hath it broken downe, and ouerthrowne the houses of greate men. The thirde tōge hath cast out many an honest woman, and robbed them of their labours. Who so harkeneth vnto soch, shal neuer fynde rest, and neuer dwell safely. The stroke of ⁊ rod maketh yedders, but the stroke of the tonge smyteth the bones in sunder. There be many that haue perished with the swerde, but many no thorow the tonge.

D Wel is him that is kepte frō an euell tonge, ⁊ commeth not in ⁊ anger therof: which draweth not the yock of soch, and is not boude in the bondes of it. For the yock therof is of yron, and ⁊ bonde of it of stele. The death therof is a very euell death: hell were better for one, then soch a tonge. But the fyre of it maye not oppresse them that feare God, and ⁊ flamme therof maye not burne thē. Soch as forsake the LORDE, shal fall therin: and it shal burne them, and no man shal be able to quench it. It shal fall vpon thē as a Lyō, and deuoure them as a leparde. Thou hedgest thy goodes with thornes: why doest thou not rather make dores and barres for thy mouth? Thou weiest thy golde and syluer: why doest thou not weye thy wordes also vpon the balance? Bewarre, that thou slyde not in thy tonge, and so fall before thine enemies, that laye wayte for the.

The xiii. Chapter.

WHO so wil shewe mercy, let him lende A vnto his ^aneighbour: and he that is able, let him kepe the commaundement. Lende vnto thy neighbour in tyme of his nede, and paye thou thy neighbour agayne in due season. Kepe thy worde, ⁊ deale faithfully with him, ⁊ thou shalt allwaye fynde the thinge ⁊ is necessary for the. There haue bene many, that whan a thinge was lent them, rekened it to be founde: and made them trauayle and laboure, that had helped them. Whyle they receaue eny thinge, they kysse the handes of soch as geue them, and for their neighbours good they hūble their voyce. But whan they shulde paye agayne they kepe it back, and geue euell wordes, and make many excuses by reason of the tyme: ⁊ though he be able, yet geueth he searse the half agayne, and rekeneth ⁊ other to be founde. And yf he witholde not his money, yet hath he an enemye of him, and that vnderseued.

He payeth him with cursinge and rebuke B and geueth him euell wordes for his good dede. There be many one which are not glad for to lende, not because of euell, but they feare to lese the thinge that they lende. Yet haue thou pacience with the symple, and witholde not mercy from him. Helpe the poore for the commaundementes sake, and let him not go empyte from the because of his necessite. Lese thy money for thy brother and neighbours sake, and burye it not vnder a stone, wher it rusteth and corrupeth. Gather thy ^ctreasure after the commaundement of ⁊ Hyest, and so shal it bringe the more profit thē golde. Laye vp the almes in the hande of the poore, and it shal kepe the from all euell.^a (A mans allmes is as a purse with him, and shall kepe a mans fauoure as the apple of an eye: and afterwarde shall it aryse, & paye euery man his rewarde vpon his heade.) It shal fight for the agaynst thine enemies, better then the shyld of a giaunte, or speare of the mightie.

C A good honest mā is suertie for his neyghboure, but a wicked personne letteth him come to shame. Forget not the frendshipe of thy suertie, for he hath geuē his soule for y. The vngodly despysyth y good dede of his suertie, & the vnthankfull and ignoraunt leaueh his suertie in daunger. (Some man promysyth for his neyghboure: & when he hath lost his honesty, he shal forsake him.) Suertishipe hath destroyed many a ryche man, & remoued them as the waves in y see. Mightie people hath it dryuen awaye, and caused thē to wandre in straunge countrees. An vngodly man transgressynge the commaundement of the LORDE, shal fall in to an euell suertishipe: and though he force himself to get out, yet shal he fall in to iudgment. Helpe thy neyghboure out after thy power, and beware, y thou thy self fall not in soch dett. ^bThe chiefe thinge that kepeth in the life, is water and bred, clothinge and lodginge, to couer the shame.

D Better is it to haue a poore luyng in a mans owne house,^c thē delicate fayre amōge the straunge. ^dBe it litle or moch y thou hast, holde the contēt withall (& thou shalt not be blamed as a vagabounde:) for a myserable life is it, to go from house to house: and where a mā is fremde, he darre not opē his mouth. Though one be lodged, and haue meate and drynke, yet shall he be taken as vnworthy, & heare many bytter rough wordes, namely thus: Go thy waye thou straunger, and prepare a table (for thy self) and fede me also of that thou hast. Awaye thou straunger (so, that he regardeth his honour nomore) my brother commeth in to my house, & so he telleth him the necessite of his house. These thinges are heuy to a man that hath vnderstandinge: namely, the forbyddinge of y house, & that the lēder casteth him in the teth.

The xxx. Chapter.

WHO so loueth his childe, holdeth him still vnder correccion,^e that he maye haue ioye of him afterwarde (and that he grope not after his neyghbours doers.) ^fHe y teacheth his sonne, shall haue ioye in him, & nede not be ashamed of him amōge his aquantaūce. Who so enfourmed & teacheth his sonne, greueth y enemye, and before his frendes he maye haue ioye of him. Though the father dye, yet is he as though he were not deed: for he hath left one behynde him that is like him. In his life he sawe him, & had ioye in him, & was not sory in his death, (nether was he ashamed before y enemyes.) For he left behinde him an auenger agaynst his enemyes, and a good doer vnto the frendes. For the life of childrē he shal binde the woundes together, and his hert is greued at enery crye. An vntamed horse wyibe harde, and a wanton childe wyibe wyllfull. Yf thou brynge vp thy sonne delicatly, he shal make y afrayed: and yf thou playe with him, he shal brynge the to heuynes. Laugh not with him, lest thou wepe with him also, and lest thy teth be sett on edge at the last.

B Geue him not liberte in his youth, & excuse not his foly.^g Bow downe his neck whyle he is yonge, hytt him vpon the sydes whyle he is yet but a childe, lest he waxe stubburne, & geue no more force of y (and so shalt thou haue heuynes of soule.) Teach thy childe, & be diligēt therin, lest it be to thy shame. Better is the poore beyng whole & stronge, thē a man to be riche, & not to haue his health. Health and welfare is aboue all golde, and an whole body aboue all treasure. There is no riches aboue a sounde body, & no ioye aboue the ioye of the hert. Death is better then a wretched life, or contynuall sicknes. The good thinges y are put in a close mouth, are like as when meate is layed vpon y graue.

C What good doth the offeringe vnto an Idoll? For he can nether eate, taist ner smell.^h Euē so is it also with the riche, whom God maketh seke: he seith it with his eyes, & groneth ther-after, and is euen as a gelded man, that lyeth with a vyrgin and sygheth. ⁱGeue not ouer thy mynde in to heynes, ⁊ vexe not thy self in thine owne counceill. The ioye ⁊ chearfulnes of the hert is the life of man, and a mans gladnes is the prolonging of his dayes. Loue thine owne soule, and comforte thine hert: as for sorow and heynes, dryue it farre from y.^e for heynes hath slayne many a man, and bryngeth no profit. Zele and anger shorten the dayes of the life: carefulesnes and sorow brynge age before the tyme. Vnto a mery hert euery thinge hath a good taist, that he eateth.

The rrii. Chapter.

TRAUAYLE and carefulesnes for riches taketh awaye the slepe, and maketh the flesh to cōsume. When one lyeth and taketh care, he waketh euer vp, like as greate sicknes breaketh the slepe. The rich hath greate laboure in gatheringe his riches together, and then with the pleasure of his riches he taketh his rest ⁊ is refreshed. But who so laboureth and prospereth not, he is poore: and though he leaue of, yet is he a begger. He that loueth riches, shall not be iustified: and who so foloweth corrupciō, shall haue ynough therof. Many one are come in greate myfortune by the reason of golde, ⁊ haue founde their destruccion before them. It is a tre of fallynge vnto them that offre it vp, and all such as be foolish fall therin. Blessed is the rich, which is founde without blemysh, and hath not gone after golde, ner hoped in money and treasures. Where is there such one? and we shal commende him, and call him blessed, for greate things doth he amonge his people. Who so is tryed, ⁊ founde perfecte in such things, shalbe commended and praised. Who might offende, ⁊ hath not offended? Who coude do euell, and hath not done it? Therefore shal his good be stablished, and the whole congregacion shal declare his allmesses. Yf thou sytt at a greate mans table, open not thy mouth wyde vpon it, and make not many wordes. Remember, that an euell eye is a shrew.

What thinge created is worse then a wicked eye? therfore wepeth it before euery mā's face? Laye not thine hand vpon euery thinge that thine eye seyth, and stryue not with him in the dyshe.^d Ponder by thy self what thy neighbour wolde fayne haue, ⁊ be deserete in euery poynte. Eate the thinge that is set before the, manerly, as it becommeth a man: and eate not to moch,^e lest thou be abhorred. Leaue thou of first of all because of nurture, lest thou be he whom no man maye satisfie, which maye turne to thy decaye. Whā thou syttest amonge many men, reach not thine hāde out first of all. O how well contēt is a wyse man with a litle wyne? so y^e in slepe thou shalt not be seke therof, ner fele eny payne. A swete wholsome slepe shal soch one haue, and fele no inwarde grefe. He ryseth vp by tymes in y^e mornynge, and is well at ease in him self. But an vnsciacie eater slepeth vnquyetly, and hath ache and payne of the body. Yf thou felest that thou hast eaten to moch, aryse, go thy waye, east it of thy stomach, and take thy rest.

My sonne, heare me, and despise me not: and at the last thou shalt fynde as I haue told the. In all thy workes be diligent and quycke, so shal there no sicknes hapen vnto the. Who so is liberall in dealyng out his meate, many men shall blesse him and prayse him with their lippes: and the same is a sure token of his loue and faithfulness. But he y^e is vnfaithfull in meate, the whole cite shall complayne of him: and that is a sure experiece of his infidelite and wickednes. Be not thou a wine bebbler, for wyne hath destroyed many a man. The fyre proueth y^e hard yron, euen so doth wyne proue the hertes of the proude, whan they be dronken.

Wyne soberly droncken, quykeneth the life of mā. Yf thou drynckest it measurably, thou shalt be temperate. What life is it, y^e maye contynue without wyne? Wyne was made from the begynnynge to make men glad (and not for dronkenes.) Wyne measurably dronkē is a reioysing of the soule and body. But yf it be dronken with excess, it maketh bytternes and sorowe vnto the mynde. Dronkēnes fylleth the mynde of the foolish with shame and ruyn, mynisheth the strēth, and maketh woundes. Rebuke not thy neighbour at y^e wyne, and despise him not in his myrth. Geue him no despytefull wordes, and preasse not vpon him with contrary sayenges.

A YF thou be made a ruler, pride not thy self therein,^a but be thou as one of the people. ^bTake diligent care for them, and loke well therto: and when thou hast done all thy dewtye, syt the downe, that thou mayest be mery with them, and receaue a crowne of honoure. Talke wysely & honestly, for wysdome becommeth the right well. Hynder not musyck. Speake not, where there is no audyence: and poure not forth wysdome out of tyme, at an importunyte. Like as the Carbuncle stone shyneth, that is set in golde, so doth a songe garnysh the wyne feast: and as y Smaragde that is set in golde, so is the swetnes of Musyck by y myrth of wyne.

B Thou yonge mā, speake that becommeth the, & that is profitable, and yet scarce when thou art twyce axed. Comprehende moch with few wordes. In many thinges be as one that is ignoraunt, geue eare, and holde thy tonge withall. Yf thou be amonge men of hyer auctorite, desyre not to compare thy self vnto them: and whā an elder speaketh, make not thou many wordes therin. Before the thunder goeth lighteyunge, and before nourtoure and shamefastnesse goeth loue and fauoure. Stōde vp by tymes, and be not the last: but get the home soone, & there take thy pastyme, & do what thou wilt: so y thou do no euell, and defye no mā. But for all thinges geue thanks, vnto him that hath made the, and replenished the with his goodes.

C Who so feareth the LORDE, wyl receaue his doctryne: and they that get them to him by tymes, shall fynde grace. He that seeketh the lawe, shall be fylled withall: As for him y is but fayned, he wyl be offended therat. They that feare the LORDE, shal fynde the iudgment, & their righteousnes shalbe kyndled as a light. An vngodly man will not be reformed, but can helpe himself with the example of other in his purpose. A man of vnderstandinge despyseth no good counsell: but a wyld and proude body hath no feare. My sonne, do nothinge without aduiseiment, so shal it not repēt the after y dede. Go not in the waye where thou mayest fall, ner where thou mayest stomble against the stone. Geue not thy self in to a laborious slypery waye, and beware of thine owne children. In all thy workes put thy trust in God from thy whole hert, for that is the kepinge of the cōmaundementes. Who so beleueth Gods worde, taketh hede to the cōmaundementes: & he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shal wante nothinge.

The xxxij. Chapter.

THERE shall no euell happen vnto him that feareth God: but when he is in tentacion, the LORDE shall deluyner him. A wyse man hateth not y lawe, but an ypocryte is as a shyp in a raginge water. A man of vnderstandinge geueth credence vnto the lawe of God, and y lawe is faithfull vnto him. Be sure of the matter, then talke therof: Be first wel instructe, thē maiest thou geue answere. The hert of y foolish is like a cartwhele, and his thoughtes renne aboute like the axell tre. Like as a wyld horse that neyeth vnder euery one y sytteth vpon him, so is it with a scornefull frende. Why doth one daie excell another, seynge all the dayes of the yere come of the Sonne? The wysdome of the LORDE hath so parted them a sunder, and so hath he ordered the tymes and solempne feastes. Some of them hath he chosen and halowed before other dayes. And all men are made of the grounde, & out of the earth of Adam.

In the multitude of scyence hath y LORDE sundered them, and made their wayes of dyuerse fashions. Some of them hath he blessed, made moch of them, halowed them, & claymed them to himself. But some of thē hath he cursed, brought thē lowe, & put thē out of their estate. ^dLike as y claye is in the potters hande, & all the ordrynge therof at his pleasure: so are men also in the hande of him y made thē, so that he maye geue them as it liketh him best. Agaynst euell is good, and agaynst death is life: so is the vngodly agaynst soch as feare God. Beholde thus all the workes of the Hyest, & there are euer *two agaynst two, and one set agaynst another. I am awaked vp last of all, as one that gathereth after in haruest. In the giftes of God and in his blessinge I am increased, & haue fylled my wyne presse, like a grape gatherer. ^eBeholde, how I haue not laboured onely for my self, but for all such as loue nurtoure and wysdome.

C Hearc me O ye greate men of the people, & harken with youre eares ye rulers of \bar{y} congregacion. Geue not thy sonne & wyfe, thy brother & frende power ouer the, whyle thou lyuest: & geue not away thy substance and good to another, lest it repent the, & thou be fayne to begg therfore thy self. As longe as thou lyuest & hast breth, let no man chaunge the: For better it is thy children to praye the, then \bar{y} thou shuldest be fayne to loke in their handes. In all thy workes be excellent, that thy honour be neuer stained. At the tyme whan thou shalt ende thy dayes, and fynish thy life, distribute thine inheritaunce. The fodder, the whyppe, and the burden belongeth vnto the Assc: Meate, correccion, and worke vnto the seruaunt.

D Yf thou set thy seruaunt to laboure, thou shalt fynde rest. But yf thou let him go ydel, he shal seke libertye. The yock and \bar{y} whyppe bowe downe the neck, but tame thou thy euell seruaunt with bodes & correccion. Seude him to laboure, that he go not ydle: For Idylnesse bryngeth moch euell. Sett him to worke, for that belongeth vnto him and becōmeth him well. Yf he be not obedient, bynde his fete: but do not to moch vnto him in any wyse, & without discrecion do nothing. ^aYf thou haue a (faithfull) seruaūt, let him be vnto the as thine owne soule, for in bloude hast thou gotten him. Yf thou haue a seruaunt, holde him as thy self, for thou hast nede of him as of thy self. Yf thou intreatest him euell, and kepest him harde, and makest him to be proude, and to renne awaye from \bar{y} , thou canst not tell, what waye thou shalt seke him.

The rrriii. Chapter.

A VNWYSE people begyle them selues with vayne and disceatfull hope, and foolcs trust in dreames. Who so regardeth dreames, is like him that wil take holde of a shadowe, and folowe after the wynde: Euen so is it with the apperaynges of dreames. Before the face is the licknes of a face. Who can be clenسد of \bar{y} vnclane? Or what treuth can be spoken of a liar? Soythsayenge, witchcraft, socery, and dreaminge is but vanyte: like as whan a womā trauayleth with chyilde, and hath many fantasyes in hir herte. Where as soch visions come not of God, set not thine herte vpon them: For dreames haue disceaued many a mā, and they fayled, that put their truste therin.

The lawe shalbe fulfilled without lyes, & wysdome is sufficient to a faithfull mouth. A wyse man \bar{y} is well instructe, vnderstodeth moch: & he \bar{y} hath good experiēce, can talke of wysdome. He \bar{y} hath no experiēce, knoweth litle: & he \bar{y} erreth, causeth moch wickednes. Whan I was yet in erreure, I lerned moch also: yee I was so lerned, that I coude not expresse it all, and came oft in parell of death therouer, tyll I was delyuered from it. Now I se, that they which feare God, haue the right sprete: for their hope stōdeth in him, that can helpe thē. Who so feareth the LORDE, stōdeth in awe of no man, and is not afrayed, for the LORDE is his hope and comforte.

Blessed is the soule of him \bar{y} feareth the LORDE: In whō putteth he his trust? who is his strēth? For the eyes of the LORDE haue respecte vnto them, that loue him. He is their mightie proteccion, & strōge grounde: A defence for the heate, a refuge for the hote noone daye, a sucoure for stomblynge, & an helpe for fallynge. He setteth vp the soule, and lighteneth \bar{y} eyes: He geueth health life, and blessinge. He that geueth an offeringe of vnrighteous good, his offeringe is refused: and the scornfull dealinges of the vnrighteous please not God. ^aGod hath no delyte in the offeringes of \bar{y} vngodly, nether maye synne be reconcyled in the multitude of oblacions. Who so bryngeth an offeringe out of \bar{y} goodes of \bar{y} poore, doth euē as one \bar{y} kylleth \bar{y} sonne before \bar{y} fathers eyes.

The bred of the nedefull is the life of the poore: he \bar{y} defraudeth him therof, is a man, of bloude. Who so robbeth his neghboure of his luyngc, doth as greate synne as though he slew him to death. ^aHe that defraudeth \bar{y} laborer of his hyre, is a bloude shedder. Whā one buydeth, and another breaketh downe, what profit haue they then but laboure? Whan one prayeth, & another curseth, whose voyce wyl the LORDE heare? ^aHe that washeth himself because of a deed body, & then toucheth the deed agayne, what doth his waszshinge? ^cSo is it with a man that fasteth

She wil not be comforted, ner go hir waye, tyll \hat{y} hyest God haue respecte vnto her, geue true sentēce, τ perfourme \hat{y} iudgmēt. And \hat{y} LORDE wil not be slack in cōynge, ner tary longe: tyll he haue snyttē in sonder \hat{y} backes of \hat{y} vnmerryfull, τ auenged himself of \hat{y} Heithen: tyll he haue takē awaye \hat{y} multitude of \hat{y} cruell. τ brokē the cepter of the vnrighteous: tyll he geue euery man after his workes, τ rewarde them as they haue deserued: tyll he haue delyuered his people, mayntened their cause, and reioysed them in his mercy. O how fayre a thinge is mercy, in the tyme of anguysh τ trouble? It is like a cloude of rayne, \hat{y} cōmeth in \hat{y} tyme of a drouth.

The rrbj. Chapter.

HAUE mercy vpon vs O LORDE, thou God of all thinges. Haue respecte vnto vs (shew vs the light of thy mercies, τ sende thy feare amōge \hat{y} Heithē τ straigers, which seke not after the: \hat{y} they maye knowe, how \hat{y} there is no God but thou, and \hat{y} they maye shew thy wonderous workes.) Lift vp thine hande ouer the outlādish Heithen, \hat{y} they maye lerne to knowe thy might τ power. Like as thou art halowed in vs before them, so brynge to passe, \hat{y} thou mayest be magnified also in them before vs: \hat{y} they maye knowe the, like as we knowe the. For there is none other God, but onely thou O LORDE. Renuē the tokens, τ change the wonderous workes. Shewe thine hāde and thy right arme gloriously. Raise thy indignacion, τ poure out thy wrath. Take awaye the aduersary, τ snyte the enemye. Make \hat{y} tyme shorte, remembre thy couenaunt, that thy wonderous workes maye be prayded. Let the wrath of the fyre consume them, that lyue so careles: and let them perish, that do thy people hurte. Snyte in sonder the heade of the prynces, that be oure enemies, and saye: there is none other but we.

Gather all \hat{y} trybes of Iacob together againe, \hat{y} they maie knowe, how \hat{y} there is none other God but onely thou, \hat{y} they maie shew thy wonderous workes, and be thy people τ heretage, like as from the begynnyng. O LORDE haue mercy vpon the people \hat{y} hath thy name, ^a τ vpō Israel, whom thou hast lickened to a first borne sonne. O be merciful vnto Ierusalē the cite of thy Sanctuary, \hat{y} cite of thy rest. ^bFyll Sion with thy vnspeakeable vertues, τ thy people with thy glory. Gene wytnes vnto thy creature, whom thou maydest from the begynnyng, and raise vp the prophecies \hat{y} haue bene shewed in thy name. Rewarde them \hat{y} wayte for the, \hat{y} thy prophetes maye be founde faithfull. O LORDE heare the prayer of thy seruantes, accordinge to y blessinge of Aaron ouer thy people: ^a that all they which dwell vpon earth, maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE the eternall God, which is from euerlastinge.

C The bely denoureth all meates, yet is one meate better then another. Like as the tonge taisteth venyson, ^b so doth an hert of vnderstandinge marck false wordes. A frowarde hert geth heuynes, but a man of experience listh him vp agayne. The woman receaueth euery man, yet is one daughter better then another. A fayre wife reioyseth hir huszbande, and a man loueth nothinge better. Yf she be lounyng τ vertuous withall, then is not hir huszbande like other men. He that hath gotten a vertuous woman, hath a goodly possession: she is vnto him an helpe and piler wher vpon he resteth. Where no hedge is, there the goodes are spoyled: and where no houszwife is, there y frédles mourneth. Like as there is no credence geuen to a robber, y goeth from one cite to another: So is not y man beleued, that hath no nest, and must turne in, where he maye abyde in the night.

The rrrvij. Chapter.

A EVERY frende sayeth: I wil be frendly vnto him also. But there is some frende, which is onely a frende in name. Remayneth there not heuynes vnto death, when a companion and frende is turned to an enemye? O most wicked presumpcion: Frō whence art thou spronge vp, to couer the earth with falsede τ disceate? ^c There is some companion, which in prosperite reioyseth with his frēde: but in the tyme of trouble, he taketh parte agaynst him. There is some cōpanyon, that mourneth with his frende for the bely sake: but when trouble commeth, he taketh holde of the shyld. Forget not thy frende in thy mynde, τ thinke vpon him in thy riches. Euery councler bryngeth forth his counsell: Neuertheles there is some, y counceleth but for his owne profit. ^d Bewarre of y councler, τ be aduysed afore wherto thou wilt vse him, for he wil geue coucell for him self. Lest he east the lott vpon the, τ saye vnto the: Thy waye and purpose is good, and afterwarde he stande agaynst the, and loke what shal become of the.

Axe no coucell at him, y suspeketh y for an enemye, τ hyde thy counsell from such as hate y . Axe no counsell at a woman, cōcernyng y thinges y she logeth for: ner at a fearful τ fayntharted body, in matters of warre: or at a marchant, how deare he wil cheape thy wares towarde his: or at a byer, of sellynge: Or at an enuyous man, of thankesgeuyng: Or at the vmercifull, of lounyng kindnes: Or at y slouthfull, of workinge: Or at an hyrelyng which hath no house, of profit or wealth. (An ydle body wolde not gladly heare speake of moch labour.) Take no such folkes to coucell, but be diligēt to seke coucell at a vertuous man, y feareth God, such one as thou knowest to be a keeper of y cōmaundemētes, which hath a minde after thine owne minde, τ is sory for y whā thou stōblest.

C And holde thy counsell fast in thine hert: for there is no man more faithful to kepe it, then thou thy self. For a māns mynde is somtyme more disposed to tell out, then seuen watchmen that sytt aboue in an hye place lōkyng aboute them. And aboute all this praye the Ilyest, that he wil lede thy waye in faithfulness τ trueth. Before all thy workes axe counsell first: and or euer thou doest eny thinge, be well aduysed. There be foure thinges that declare a chaunged hert, wheront there springeth euell τ good, death τ life, τ a masterfull tonge that bableth moch. Some man is apte and well instructe in many thinges, and yet very vprofitable vnto himself. Some man there is, that can geue wyse and prudent counsell, and yet is he hated, τ contynueth a begger: for that grace is not geuē him of God, to be accepted. Another is robbed of all wiszdome, yet is he wise vnto himself, and the frute of vnderstōdinge is faithfull in his mouth.

D A wyse man maketh his people wyse, τ y frutes of his wiszdome fayle not. A wyse mā shal be plēteously blessed of God: τ all they that se him, shal speake good of him. The life of man stondesth in y nōbre of the dayes, but the dayes of Israel are innumerable. A wyse man shal opteyne faithfulness τ credence amonge his people, τ his name shalbe perpetuall. My sonne, proue thy soule in thy life: τ yf thou se eny euell thinge, geue it not vnto her. ^e For all thinges are not profitable

For ^aexcesse of meates bryngeth siknes, and glotony commeth at the last to an vnmeasurable heate. Thorow glotony haue many one perished: but he that dyeteth him self temperatly, prolongeth his life.

The xvij. Chapter.

HONOURE the Phisician: honour him because of necessite. God hath created him (for of the Hiest commeth medecyne) and he shal receaue giftes of the kyng. The wysdome of the phisician bryngeth him to greate worshippe, and in the sight of the greate men of this worlde, he shalbe honorably taken. The LORDE hath created medecyne of the earth, and he that is wyse, wyl not abhorre it. ^bWas not y bytter water made swete with a tre? that men might lerne to knowe the vertue therof. The LORDE hath geuen men wysdome and vnderstondinge, y he might be honoured in his woderous workes. With such doth he heale men, and taketh awaye their paynes: Of such doth the Apotecary make a confection, yet can no man performe all his workes. For of y LORDE commeth prosperous wealth ouer all y earth.

My sonne, despyse not this in thy sicknes: but praye vnto the LORDE, ^c and he shal make the whole. Leauē of from synne, and ordre thy handes a right: clēse thine hert from all wickednes. Geue a swete sauoured offrynge, and y fyne floure for a token of remembraunce: make the offrynge fatt, as one that geueth the first frutes, and geue rowme to the Phisician. For y LORDE hath created him: let him not go from the, for thou hast nede of him. The houre maye come, y the seke maye be helped thorow them, when they praye vnto y LORDE, y he maie recouer, and get health to lye longer. He that synneth before his maker, shall fall in to the handes of the Phisician.

My sonne, bryngē forth thy teares ouer the deed: and ^dbegynne to mourne, as yf thou haddest suffred greate harme thy self: and the couer his body after a conuenient maner, and despyse not his buryall. Enforce thy self to wepe, and prouoke thy self to mourne, and make lamentacion expediently, ^e and y a daye or two, lest thou be euell spoken of: and then cōforte thy self because of the heynes. For of heynes cōmeth death, the heynes of y hert breaketh strength. Heynes and pouerte greueth the hert in tentacion and offence. Take no heynes to hert, dryue it awaye, and remembre the last thinges. Forget it not, for there is no turnynge agayne. Thou shalt do him no good, but hurte thy self. Remembre his iudgnēt, thine also shalbe likewise: vnto me yesterdaye, vnto the to daye. Let the remembraunce of the deed cease in his rest, and cōforte thy self agayne ouer him, ^f seynge his sprete is departed from him.

The wysdome of the scribe is at cōuenient tyme of rest: and he y ceaseth from exercise and labour, shalbe wyse. He that holdeth y plough, and hath pleasure in proddyng and dryuyng y oxen, and goeth aboute with soch workes, he can speake of oxen. He setteth his hert to make forowes, and is diligent to geue y kyne fodder. So is euery carpenter also and work master, that laboureth still night and daye: he carueth, graueth and cutteth out, and his desyre is in sondrye conyng things, and his hert ymagineth, how he maye conyngly cast an ymage, his diligence also and watchinge perfourmeth the worke. The yronsmith in like maner bydeth by his stythe, and doth his diligence to labour the yron. The vapoure of the fyre brenneth his flesh, and he must fight with the heate of the fornace. The noyse of the Hammer soundeth euer in his eares, and his eyes loke still vpon the thinge y he maketh. He hath set his minde there vpon, that he wyl make out his worke, and therefore he watcheth, how he maie set it out, and bryngē it to an ende.

So doth the potter syt by his worke, he turneth y whele aboute with his fete, he is diligent and carefull in all his doynge, and his labour and worke is without nombre. He fashioneth the claye with his arme, and with his fete he tēpereth it. His hert ymagineth how he maye make it pleasaunt, and his diligence is to clense the ouen. All these hope in their hādes, and euery one thinketh to be conyng in his worke. Without these maye not the cities be manteyned, inhabited ner occupied: yet come they not hye in the congregacion: they vnderstande not the coue-naunt of \hat{y} lawe: they can not declare equyte τ iudgment: they can not fynde out the darck sentēces: but thorow them shal the creature of \hat{y} worlde be manteyned: their prayer concerneth onely the worke τ labour of cōninge.

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

BUT he \hat{y} applyeth his mynde to vnderstande the lawe of God, doth diligently seke out \hat{y} wyszdome of them of the olde tyme, τ exereyseth him self in the prophetes. He kepeth \hat{y} sayenges of famous men, and preasseth to the vnderstandinge of darck sentēces of wyszdome. He seketh out \hat{y} mysterie of secrete sayēges, and exercyseth him self therin cōtynually. He doth seruyce amonge greate men, τ appeareth before the prynce. He goeth in to a straunge countre, τ trauaileth thorow it: loke what good or euell is amōge men, he proueth it τ seketh it out. He purposeth in his hert, to resort early vnto the LORDE \hat{y} made him, τ to praye before the hyst God. He openeth his mouth in prayer, τ prayeth for his synnes.

When the greate LORDE wil, he shalbe filled with the sprete of vnderstādinge, \hat{y} he maie then poure out wyse sentēces, τ geue thanks vnto the LORDE in his prayer. He shal ordre his deuyce, and lede his knowlege aright, τ geue him vnderstandinge of secrete thinges. He shal shew forth the sciēce of his lerninge, τ reioyce in the couenaunt of the lawe of the LORDE. The whole congregacion shal cōmende his wyszdome, τ it shal neuer be put out. The remembraunce of him shal neuer be forgotten, τ his name shal contynue from one ^a generacion to another. His wyszdome shalbe spoken of, τ the whole congregacion shall openly declare his prayse. Whyle he liueth, he hath a greater name thē a thousande besyde: τ after his death, the same name remaineth vnto him. Yet wyl I speake of mo men of vnderstandinge, for I am full as the Moone.

Herkē vnto me (ye holy vertuous childrē) brynge forth frute, as the rose that is planted by the brokes of the felde, and geue ye a swete smell as Libanus. Flourish as the rose garden, syng a songe of prayse. O geue thākes vnto God ouer all his workes. Geue glory and honoure vnto the LORDE, shew his prayse with youre lippes. Yee euen with the songe of youre lippes, with harpes τ playenge, and in geuinge thanks vnto him, saye after this maner: ^b All \hat{y} workes of the LORDE are excedeinge good, and all his commaundementes are mete and conuenient in due season.

A mā nede not to saie: what is \hat{y} ? what is that? for at tyme ^c conuenient they shal all be sought. At his cōmaundement \hat{y} water was as a wall, τ at the worde of his mouth \hat{y} waters stode still. In his commaundement is euery thinge acceptable and reconcyld, and his health can not be unished. The workes of all flesh are before him, τ there is nothinge hydd from his eyes. He seith from euerlastinge to euerlastinge, and there is nothinge to wonderfull or hye vnto him. A mā nede not to saye then, what is this, or that? For he hath made all thinges to do good vnto mān. His blessyng shall renue ouer as the streame, and moysture the earth like a floude of water. Like as he maketh the water for drouth, so shall his wrath fall vpon the Heithen.

^d His wayes are playne and right vnto \hat{y} iust, but the vngodly stumble at them. For the good are good thinges created from the begynnynge, and euell thinges for the vngodly. All thinges necessary for the life of mān are created from the begynnynge: ^e water, fyre, yron and salt, meel, wheate and hony mylke and wyne, oyle and clothinge. All these thinges are created for the best to the faithfull: But to the vngodly shal all these thinges be turned to hurte and harme. There be spretes that are created for vengeaūce, and in their rigorousnes haue ^f they fastened their tormentes. In the tyme of the ende they shal poure out their strēgth, and pacifie \hat{y} ^g wrath of him that made them. Fyre, hayle, honger and death: all these thinges are created for vengeaūce.

The teth of wyld noysome beestes, the scorpions, serpentes, and the swerde are created also for vengeaūce, to the destruction of the vngodly. They shal be glad to do his commaundementes: and whan nede is, they shalbe ready vpon earth: and whan their houre is come, they shal not ouerpasse the commendement of the LORDE.

Therefore haue I taken a good corage vnto me from the begynnynge, and thought to put these thinges in wrytynge, and to leaue thē behynde me. " All ſ workes of the LORDE are good, and he geueth euery one in due season, and whan nede is. So that a man nede not to saye: this is worse then that. For in due season they are all pleasaunt and good: And therefore prayse the LORDE with whole hert and mouth, ⁊ geue thanks vnto his name.

The xi. Chapter.

A GREATE traulye is created for all mē, and an heuy yock vpon all mens children, from the daye that they go out of their mothers wombe, tyll they be buried in (the earth) the mother of all thinges: namely, their thoughtes and ymaginacions, feare of the hert, counsell, meditacions, longynge and desyre, the daye of death: from the hyst that sytteth vpon the glorious seate, vnto the lowest and most simple vpon the earth: from him that is gorgiously arayed, and weereth a crowne, vntyll him that is but homely and simple clothed. There is nothing but wrath, zeale, fearfulness, vnquietnes, and feare of death, rigorous anger and stryfe. And in the night whan one shulde rest and slepe vpon his bedd, the slepe chaungeth his vnderstandinge and knowlege. A life as nothinge is his rest, in ſ slepe as well as in the daye of laboure.

He feareth and is disquyted in the vision of his hert, as one that remeth out of a battayll: and in the tyme of health he awaketh, and marueleth that the feare was nothinge. Soch thinges happen vnto all flesh, both man and best: but seuenfolde to the vngodly. Morouer death, bloudsheddinge, strife ⁊ swerde, oppression, honger, destruction and ^b punyishment: these thinges are all created agaynst the vngodly, and for their sakes came the floude also. All that is of the earth, shal turne to earth agayne: and all waters ebb agayne in to the see. All brybes and vnrighteousnes shalbe put awaye, but faithfulness and trueth shal endure for euer. The substaunce and goodes of ſ vngodly shalbe dried vp and syncke awaye as a water floude, and they shall make a sounde like a greate thunder in the rayne.

Like as the righteous reioyseth whan he openeth his hande, so shall the trāsgressours be faynte, whan their goodes vanysh and consume awaye. " The children of the vngodly shal not optayne many braunches: and ſ vnclene rotes vpō the hye rockes shalbe roted out before the gras by the water syde ⁊ vpon the ryner bankes.

Frendlynnes and liberalite in the increase and blessinge of God, is like a paradise ⁊ garden of pleasure: soch mercy also ⁊ kindnes endureth for euer. " To laboure ⁊ to be content with that a man hath, is a swete pleasaunt life: ⁊ that is to fynde a treasure aboue all treasures. To beget children and to repayre the cite, maketh a perpetuall name: but an honest woman is more worth thē they both. Wyne and mynstralsye reioyse the hert, but the loue of wysdome is aboue them both.

Pypynge and harpyng make a swete noyse, but a frendly tonge goeth beyonde them both. Thine eye desyret fauoure and bewtie but a grene sede tyme rather thē they both. A frende and companion come together at oportunyte, but aboue them both is a wife that agreeth with hir huszbande. One brother helpeth another in the tyme of trouble, but allmes shal deliuer more then they both. Golde and syluer fasten the fete, but a good counsell is more pleasaunt then they both. Temporall substaunce and strength lift vp the mynde: but the feare of the LORDE more then they both. The feare of the LORDE wanteth nothinge, and nedeth no helpe. The feare of ſ LORDE is as a pleasaunt gardē of blessinge, and nothinge so bewtyfull as it is. My sonne, lede not a beggers life, for better it were to dye thē to begg. Who so loketh to another mans table, taketh no thought for his owne lyuynge how to vpholde his life, for he fedeth himself with other mens meate. But a wyse and well nurtoured man wyll beware therof. Begynge is swete in the mouth of the vshamefast, but in his bely there burneth a fyre.

The xliij. Chapter.

O DEATH, how bytter is the remembrance of the, to a man that seketh rest and comforte in his substance and riches, vnto the man that hath nothinge to vex him, and that hath prosperite in all thinges, yee vnto him that yet is able to receaue meate? O death, how acceptable and good is thy iudgment vnto the nedefull, and vnto him whose strength fayleth, ⁊ that is now in his last age, and that in all thinges is full of care and fearfulness; vnto him also that is in dispayre, and hath no hope ner pacience? Be not thou afrayed of death: remembre them ⁊ haue bene before the: and ⁊ come after ⁊: this is the iudgmēt of ⁊ LORDE ouer all flesh. ^aAnd why woldest thou be agaist this pleasure of ⁊ Hiest? Whether it be ten, an hundreth, or a thousande yeares: death axeth not how longe one haue lyued.

^bThe children of the vngodly are abhominable children, and so are they that kepe company with the vngodly. The inheritaunce of vngodly children shall come to naught, ^cand their posterite shal haue perpetual shame and confucion. The children complayne of an vngodly father: and why? for his sake they are rebuked and despised. Wo be vnto you (O ye vngodly) which haue forsakē the lawe of ⁊ hiest God: Yf ye be borne, ye shal be borne to cursynge: yf ye dye, ⁊ curse shal be youre porcion.

^dAll that is of ⁊ earth, shal turne to earth agayne: so go the vngodly also out of ⁊ curse in to destruction. The sorow of men is in their body: but ⁊ name of the vngodly shal be put out, for it is nothinge worth. Laboure to get the a good name, for that ^eshall con- tynue surer by the, then a thousande greate treasures of golde. A good life hath a nōbre of dayes, but a good name endureth euer.

^fMy children, kepe wysdome in peace: for wysdome that is hyd and a treasure that is not sene, what profit is iu thē both? ^gA man that hydeth his foolishnes, is better then a man that hydeth his wysdome. Therefore be ye turned at my wordes: for it is not good, in all thinges and allwaie to be ashamed. True faith must proue and measure it.

Be ashamed of whordome before father and mother: Be ashamed of lesynge before the prynce and men of auctorite: Of synne, before the iudge and ruler: Of offence, before the congregacion and people: Of vnrigh- teousnes, before a company and frēde: Of theft, before ⁊ neighbours. As for the tructh of God and his couenaunt, / be not ashamed therof.

Be ashamed to lye with thyne elbowes vpon the bred: Be ashamed to loke vpō harlottes: Be ashamed to turne away thy face from thy frende: Be ashamed to take ⁊ not to geue: Be ashamed also to loke vpon another mans wyfe, and to make many tryflinge wordes with hir mayden, or to stonde by hir bedsyde. Be ashamed to vprade thy frēde: and whan thou geuest eny thinge, cast him not in the teth withall.

The xliij. Chapter.

REHEARSE not a thinge twyse, and dis- ^aclose not the wordes, that thou hast herde in secrete. Be shamefast ⁊ well mannered in dede, so shall euery man fauoure the. Of these thinges be not thou ashamed, and accepte no persoun to offende. Namely, of these thinges be not ashamed: Of the lawe of God, of the couenaunt, of iudgmēt: to brynge the vngodly from his vngodlines vnto righteousnes, and to make him a good man: to deale faithfully with neighoure ⁊ companyon: to distribute the heretage vnto ⁊ frendes: to be diligent to kepe true measure and weight: to be content, whether thou gettest moch or litle: to deale truly with temporal goodes in byenge and sellynge: to brynge vp children with diligence: to correкке an euell seruaunt: to kepe that thine is frō an euell wife: to set a lock where many handes are: what thou delynereest and geuest out to be kepte, to tell it, and to weye it: to wryte vp all the out geuynge and receauynge: to enfourme ⁊ vnlernd and vnwyse: Of the aged, that are iudges of the yonge. Yf thou be diligēt in these thinges, truly thou shalt be lerned and wyse and accepted of all men.

fathers house: Or (whan she commeth to the man) lest she behaue herself not right, or contynue vn frutefull. Yf thy daughter be wanton, kepe her strately, lest she cause thine enemies laugh the to scorne, & the whole cite to geue ſ̄ an euell reporte, and so thou be fayne to heare thy shame of euery man, and be confounded before all ſ̄ people. ^b Beholde not euery bodies bewtye, & haue not moch dwellynge amonge wemen. For like as the worne and moth commeth out of clothinge, so doth wickednes come of wemen.

C It is better to be with an euell man, then with a frendly wife ſ̄ putteth one to shame and rebuke. I wyl remembre the workes of the LORDE, and declare the thinge ſ̄ I haue sene. In ſ̄ wordes of ſ̄ LORDE are his workes. The Sone ouerloketh all thinges with his shine, & all his workes are full of ſ̄ clearnes therof. Hath not the LORDE brought to passe, that his sayntes shulde tell out all his wōderous workes, which the allmightie LORDE hath stablyshed? All thinges endure in his glory. He sekeh out the grounde of the depe and the hert, and he knoweth all their ymaginacion & wysdome.

D For ſ̄ LORDE knoweth all scyence, and he loketh in to ſ̄ token of the time. He declareth the thinges ſ̄ are past and for to come, & discloseth thinges that are secrete. ^c No thought maye escape him, nether maye eny worde be hyd from him. He hath garnyshed the hyc excellent workes of his wysdome, and he is frō euerlastinge to euerlastinge. Vnto him maye nothinge be added nether can he be mynished, he hath no nede also of eny counsell. O how amiable are all his workes, & as a sparke to loke vpon? They lyue all, and endure for euer: and whan so euer nede is, they are all obedient vnto him. They are all dubble, one agaynst another: he hath made nothinge that hath faute or blemysh. He hath stablyshed the goodes of euerychone: and who maye be satisfied with his glory, whan he seith it?

The xliij. Chapter.

A THE glory of the heyth, is the fayre and cleare firmament, the bewtye of the heauen in his glorious clearnes. The sonne whan it appeareth, declareth the daye in ſ̄ goinge out of it, a maruelous worke of the Hyest. At noone it burneth ſ̄ earth, and who maye abyde for the heate therof? Who so kepeth an ouen whan it is hote, thre tymes more doth the Sonne burne vpon ſ̄ mountaynes, whan it bretheth out the frye beames and shyneth: with the brightnes of it, it blyndeth the eyes. Greate is the LORDE that made it, and in his commaundment he causeth it to renne haistely.

^d The Moone also is in all, and at conuenient season it sheweth the tymes, and is a token of the tyme. ^e The token of the solempe feast is taken of the Moone, a light that mynisheth and increaseth againe. The Moneth is called after the Moone, it groweth wnderously in hir chaunginge.

The armye of heauen also is in the Heith, 13 in the firmament of heauen it geueth a cleare and glorious shyne. This is the clearnes of the starres, the bewtifull apparell of heauen, the apparell that the LORDE lighteneth in the heyth. In his holy worke they continue in their ordre, and not one of them fayleth in his watch. ^f Loke vpon ſ̄ rayne bowe, and prayse him that made it: very bewtifull is it in his shyne. He compaseth the heauen aboute with his clearnes and glory, the handes of the Hyest haue bēded it. Thorow his commaundment he maketh the snowe to fall, and the thonder of his iudgment to smyte hastely. Thorow his commaundment the treasures are opened, and the cloudes fle as the foules. In his power hath he strengthened the cloudes, and brokē the hayle stones.

The mountaynes melt at ſ̄ sight of him, the wynde bloweth accordinge to his wyll. The sounde of his thonder beateth ſ̄ earth, and so doth the storme of the north: the whirle wynde also lighteth downe as a feathered foule, casteth out and spredeth the snowe abroad: and as the greshoppers that destroye all, so falleth it downe. The eie marueleth at ſ̄ bewtye of the whytenesse therof, and the hert is afraid at the raine of it. He poureth out the frost vpon earth, like salt, and whan it is frosen, it is as sharpe as the prycke of a thistle.

Whan the colde northwynde bloweth, harde C Christall commeth of the water. He lighteth downe vpon all the gatheringes together of water, and putteth on ſ waters as a brest plate. He deuoureth the mountaynes, and burneth the wyldernesses: and loke what is grene, he putteth it out like fyre. The medycine of all these is, whan a cloude commeth hastily: and whan a dew commeth vpon the beate, it shalbe refreshed agayne.

(In his worde he styllth the wynde,) In his counsell he setteth the depe, and (the LORDE) Iesus planted it. They that sayle ouer the see, tell of his pears and harmes: and whan we heare it with oure eares, we marucl therat. For there be straunge wonderous workes, dyuerse maner of nyce beestes and whall fishes. Thorow him are all things set in good ordre and performed, ⁊ in his worde all things endure.

D I speake moch, but I can not sufficiently attayne vnto it, for he himself onely is the perfection of all wordes. We shulde prayse the LORDE after all oure power, for he is greate in all his workes. ^aThe LORDE is to be feared yee very greate is he, and maruelous is his power. Prayse the LORDE, and magnifie him as moch as ye maye, yet doth he farre farre excede all prayse. ^bO magnifie him with all youre power, and labour earnestly, yet are ye in no wyse able sufficiently to prayse him. ^cWho hath sene him, that he might tell vs? Who can magnifie him so greatly as he is? For there are hyd yet greater things thē these be: as for vs, we haue sene but few of his workes. For the LORDE hath made all things, and geuen wysdome to such as feare God.

The xliiij. Chapter.

A commendacion of the olde vertuous fathers.

A LET vs commend the noble famous men, and the generacion of oure fore-elders and fathers. Many more glorious actes hath the LORDE done, and shewed his greate power euer sens ſ begynnyng. The noble famous men raigned in their kyngdomes, and bare excellent rule. In their wysdome and vnderstandinge, they folowed the counsell shewed in the prophecies.^d They led the folke thorow the counsell and wysdome of the scribes of the people. Wyse sentences are founde in their instruccion.

They sought the swetenes and melody of Musick, and brought forth the pleasant songes in scripture. They were riche also, ⁊ coude comforte and pacifie those that dwelt with them. All these were very noble and honorable men in their generacions, and were well reported of in their tymes. These haue left a name behynde them, so that their prayse shal allwaye be spokē of. Afterwarde there were some, whose remembrance is gone.^e They came to naught and perished, as though they had neuer bene: and became as though they had neuer bene borne, yee ⁊ their children also with them.

Neuertheles these are louynge men, whose righteousnes shal neuer be forgotten, but contynue by their posterite. Their children are an holy good heretage: Their sede endured fast in ſ couenaunt. For their sakes shal their childrē ⁊ sede contynue for euer, ⁊ their prayse shal neuer be put downe. Their bodies are buried in peace, but their name lyueth for euermore. The people can speake of their wysdome, ⁊ the congregacion can talke of their prayse. ^fEnoch walked right ⁊ acceptably before the LORDE: therefore was he traslated for an example of amendemēt to ſ generacions. ^gNoe was a stedfast ⁊ righteous man: ⁊ in the tyme of wrath he became a recōcylinge. Therefore was he left a remnant vnto the earth, whan the floude came. ^hAn euerlastinge couenaunt was made with him, that all flesh shulde perishe nomore with ſ water.
